I think instead of you having one good word for any one of the police department they all should be condemned from Commissioner Lindbergh on down to the last policeman on duty when this disgraceful thing happened. Mr. Weaver was certainly entitled to protection on the way to his car and that he most certainly did not get.

Thousands of law-abiding, good, taxpaying citizens of Birmingham and Alabama do not approve of such action of Commissioner Lindbergh and his policemen. Now why don't you write an editorial on that?

Put the whip where it belongs and so not defend such action regardless of who it may hurt. People will appreciate that.

Editor, The Advertiser:

We hope the decent people of the South will win in their battle to preserve segregation.

We here in the North who have had to ride with these dirty [Negroes] know from experience that you should fight with every possible means to preserve some rights for the white people of the United States. We have been "bumped" by these [Negroes], "felt" by them when we have been forced to stand or sit close to them, and we have had to sit with them when there were plenty of empty seats or seats where they could sit beside [Negroes].

Our complaints go for nothing, because here in Columbus we have a [Negro] who is next in line to our police chief (Harvey Alston) and he just brushes off any complaint and protects the [Negroes].

Owen To Ask Segregation On Buses

Resolution Calls For Voluntary Adoption Of Rules

P. 15

MONTGOMERY, April 1 (U.P.) — Public Service Commission President C. C. (Jack) Owen said today he will ask bus companies in the Southern states to adopt voluntary segregation of the races on their vehicles.

Owen said he has finished a resolution which will be presented at the Southeastern Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners convention at Biloxi, Miss. April 4-6.

38 L

The resolution asks bus companies in the South "for the voluntary adoption by them of such reasonable rules, regulations and practices" to carry out segregation despite the U. S. Supreme Court decision striking down Jim Crow laws in public transportation.

"Our good people need to be protected against disturbances, violence, riots, discomfort and unpleasantness in public transportation," the resolution read.

Owen said the cities and states could not adopt any segregation requirements without violating the Constitution but believes carriers operating in the South could adopt such rules without violating the 14th Amendment.

Owen To Ask Southeastern Utility Unit To Join Continued Segregation Plan

Advertiser Sun. 3-31-57 Montgomery, Ala.

P. 2-A

The presidents of Alabama's Public Service Commission will ask this week that members of similar bodies in nine other Southeastern states join in a resolution pertaining to continued segregation o public carriers.

PSC President C. C. (Jack) Owen said he will offer the resolution at the annual meeting of the Southeastern Assn. of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, in Biloxi, Miss., April 4-6.

Owen's resolution is written so that it does not ask the commissioners to challenge any past or furture decision of the Supreme Court on segregation, but would establish segregation policies at a company level.

10-STAGE AREA

He told reporters he had "legal precedence" for such a proposal, and believed that if commissions throughout the 10-state area represented in the organization would act on the resolution, segregation can be maintained.

He said he based a presumption that further court orders on integration are forthcoming on the fact that Montgomery's segregation ordinance has been declared invalid

His resolution asks that commissions "advise with the carriers in the respective states of their jurisdictions and suggest to them the propriety and, in fact, the necessity for the voluntary adoption by them of such reasonable rules, regulations and practices as in their opinion may carry out the provisions of this resolution."

SUCH ACTION

Such action he said, would maintain the traditions, usages and way of life to which our people are accustomed by requiring segregation of the races on their vehicles and the seating and reseating of passengers to the end that the journeys of passengers may be peaceful, quiet and comfortable and will not be disturbed by discomforts, unpleasantness, riot or breach of the peace."

Owen said also in the resolution that "it appears" that further decisions of the Supreme Court will strike down statutes and ordinances such as they have those of the State of Alabama and the City of Montgomery. He said further that "it appears that any requirements of the states and cities under the present views of the federal courts requiring separation of the races will ultimately be held violative of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

States represented in the group before which Owen will appear, beside Alabama are Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

24 Municipalities Pledge To Keep Bus Segregation

Thurs. 1-17-57 Montgomery, Ala.

Officials of 24 Alabama municipalities concluded a day-long forum here yesterday by giving unanimous endorsement to a motion pledging to continue to enforce bus segregation laws in their own cities.

The motion was offered and adopted without a dissenting vote at the conclusion of a conference at the Whitley Hotel attended by 66 city officials, including mayors, council presidents, commissioners and city attorneys.

The meeting was called to allow municipal officials to discuss problems confronting them as a result of the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision relative to bus seating.

The informal meeting included an exchange of ideas among the officials and a review of the legal steps taken by the Montgomery City Commission in its long but unsuccessful attempt to preserve segregated seating on city buses here.

One city official who asked not to be identified said a "great deal of good" came from the meeting.

LET HAIR DOWN

"We all just let our hair down, so to speak, and swapped ideas on the subject of bus segregation," he explained. "We also hope to benefit from Montgomery's experience on this subject."

In the only other action taken at the meeting, the officials gave unanimous approval to a motion commending Alabama's congressional delegation for its efforts opposing civil rights legislation in Congress.

Presiding at the meeting was Mayor Leonard Beard of Sheffield, president of the Alabama League of Municipalities. Lending legal support to the discussions was Joseph Johnston of Birmingham, chairman of the Alabama Bar Association's special segregation committee.

Cities represented at the meeting were Alexander City, Andalusia, Anniston, Auburn, Bessemer, Birmingham, Cullman, Fairfield, Florence, Gadsden, Huntsville, Jasper, Montgomery, Mountain Brook, Opelika, Phenix City, Prichard, Selma, Sheffield, Sylacauga, Talladega, Tarrant City, Tuscaloosa and Tuscumbia.

City To Add 20 Officers In Bus Strife

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 1-1-57

Decision Follows Another Incident Of Vehicle Ambush

Twenty additional patrolmen will be hired by Montgomery Police Dept. to help cope with new violence which yesterday saw a fifth bus fired on from ambush.

Announcement of the hirings was made last night by Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers after a sniper's bullet struck a bus en route from Boylston to downtown Montgomery at approximately 6 a.m.

No one was injured. It was the fifth such shooting in the 10 days since buses were racially integrated in Montgomery Dec. 21. One person has been wounded, a young pregnant Negro woman, who was struck in both legs by a slug fired into a Boylston bus Friday night.

Yesterday's bullet, believed to be a .38 caliber, pierced the bus on the left front directly beneath the driver's window and buried itself in the floor.

Only three white passengers and driver W. H. Fullilove were aboard. Fullilove is the same operator who was driving the Boylston bus Friday night when it was hit twice and the Negro woman was injured.

BEGIN TOMORROW

Commissioner Sellers said applications will be accepted from prospective policemen starting tomorrow morning at City Hall. Those hired must be between the ages of 21 and 35, in good physical condition and otherwise suitable by city-county Personnel Board standards. They must weigh at least 150 pounds and be a minimum of 5 feet, 8 inches tall.

Starting salary for officers is $230 a month with a raise to $240 after six months.

Sellers said the decision to hire the additional officers was made yesterday in a conference with Mayor W. A. Gayle. "The money isn't in the budget," the commissioner said, "but we'll have to see if we can get it from surplus funds.

"We feel that with the addition of the new officers we'll be able to maintain order, Sellers added.

Applications will be accepted from neighboring towns, counties and cities, as well as from men residing in Montgomery, the police commissioner said.

RETURNING DOWNTOWN

Yesterday's shooting incident occurred as Fullilove was returning to downtown Montgomery and was near Dixie Transfer Co. offices on Lower Wetumpka Road. The driver said he heard "something like a shot and something hit the bus." He said he saw a gun flash come from a car which the bus was meeting, adding, "I know the shot was fired from the car."

However, the early-hour visibility was still poor and Fullilove was unable to give a description of the vehicle or its occupants.

Asked if he was beginning to get gun shy, Fullilove answered with an emphatic "no" and at the same time brandished a pistol of his own. Bus drivers normally carry a revolver in their buses.

J. H. Bagley, manager of the bus lines, said the incident caused no delay or discontinuance of service, as the Boylston buses made their regular scheduled runs throughout the day.

Meanwhile, Detective Capt. E. P. Brown, who is investigating the bus incidents, said yesterday that it is now believed that possibly three of the other four bus-shootings have been done by snipers riding in cars, thus making it difficult to trace them.

Yesterday's shooting was the first to occur during the day, the other four being reported at night. As a result, night time bus service has been discontinued in Montgomery until tomorrow by order of the City Commission.

City officials yesterday made no comment on the latest shooting incident. Mayor W. A. Gayle was reported out of the city, and Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers declined to make any comment when reached by newsmen.

The commission is expected to discuss the parblem when it convenes tomorrow at 11 a.m.

24 Cities Pledge To Keep Their Buses Segregated

Post-Herald Thurs. 1-17-57 P.1

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 16 (AP). — Representatives of 24 of Alabama's larger cities met today to pledge continued bus segregation despite a federal ban on it in Montgomery. B'ham, Ala.

Mayors and city attorneys from most cities with more than 7500 population commended Alabama's two senators and nine congressmen for their fight against civil rights, Executive Director Ed E. Reid of the Alabama League of Municipalities reported.

The group was briefed on what has happened so far on bus segregation ca[illegible] on possible moves to end [illegible]regation in other fields, such as parks and recreation and schools. City attorneys discussed legal angles of the fight over integration.

Among those present was Joe Johnston, Birmingham attorney who is credited with writing Alabama's school placement law. It is designed to give local school officials wide latutude in placing children in school in order to preserve harmony.

Bus segregation in Montgomery was banned by a Federal court injunction Dec. 20. The injunction was against Montgomery city ordinances and Alabama state laws requiring bus segregation.

President Jack Owen of the Alabama Public Service Commission, which is charged with enforcing state segregation laws on transportation, said those laws would continue to apply in the rest of the state despite the Montgomery injunction.

Reid said cities represented at the meeting were Alexander City, Andalusia, Anniston, Auburn, Bessemer, Birmingham Cullman, Fairfield, Florence Gadsden, Huntsville, Jasper, Montgomery, Mtn. Brook, Opelika, Phenix City, Prichard, Selma, Sheffield, Sylacauga, Tarrant City, Tuscaloosa and Tuscumbia and Talladega.

Capital Lifts Ban On Buses

Post Herald Wed. 1-16-57

Police Will Ride Some Of Them

B'ham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Jan. 15 (AP)— City authorities lifted a six-day ban on bus service in Montgomery today and ordered a police escort for some of the racially integrated buses when they start rolling tomorrow. P.1

Transit operations, halted completely last Thursday, will be limited to daylight hours in an effort to prevent a recurrence of the violence that has followed the end of bus segregation in Montgomery.

Buses have been ambushed with gunfire six times and a Negro woman passenger shot in both legs, and four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers have been bombed, since the busline was integrated under Federal Court order.

Under the new restricted schedule, buses will be prohibited from starting a run after 5:15 p.m. Darkness will catch some of them before they can complete their routes, however, and Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said a squad car will accompany each bus still running after dark.

Sellers also said police will "spot check" other buses during the daylight hours.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Montgomery Negroes who won the right to ride buses without segregation barriers questioned legality of a proposed new all-white busline which may attempt to operate here under a "club" charter.

Only "mebers" of the club, restricted to white persons, would be allowed to ride the new buses. Plans for the operation have been drawn by a group of white men but no formal request has been made of the City Commission for a permit.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., said he feels any such endeavor would "definitely be a violation" of a Federal Court injunction against enforced segregation.

But King said he couldn't predict what action, if any, might be taken to prevent an all-white busline operating.

The Federal Court injunction applies to the present bus company, Montgomery City Lines, Inc., or "any other public bus transportational facility." Whether a "club" arrangement would be public or private transportation would have to be determined.

King also denied earlier reports that he "collapsed in tears" at a Negro mass meeting last night during which the young Baptist minister prayed that if "anyone should be killed, let it be me."

King said the mass meeting became so emotional that he simply broke off his prayer and took his seat, although two other ministers helped him.

Darkness Still Shrouds Alabama Bombing Case

Pitts. Courier 1-26-57 P. 1

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — The coming of the first official report by police here on the bombing of six Negro churches and homes has uncovered no more than was already known.

In addition, Police Chief J. G. Ruppenthal said at a press conference last week he does not see a break in the case at present. He said his officers are following all leads to apprehend the persons or persons responsible for the Jan. 9 bombing of the Negro property.

Ruppenthal said suspects of both races have been questioned, but none were held.

Meanwhile two Montgomery police officers have consulted with Birmingham police officials, but declined to make their discussion public.

What Was Expected?

Afro-American 1-26-57 P. 4

Those decent Southerners deeply shocked by the wave of terrorism and violence sweeping their section of the nation shouldn't have been.

What did they expect of the hoodlum element when the standard of defiance and rebellion had been set so callously by men in high places.

Baltimore, Md.

When 101 Congressmen are applauded for signing a manifesto of hate and subversion;

When a man who has cursed the Supreme Court and damned the Constitution can be rewarded by appointment to the chairmanship of the most important committee in the United States Senate;

When Montgomery city commissioners, sworn to uphold the Constitution can publicly announce their pledge of allegiance to an organization dedicated to evading and thwarting the law;

When a governor in his inaugural address draws the cheers of his legislature by defiantly declaring: "No matter what any court may rule, there will be no breakdown in the pattern of segregation in this state";

When a three-man Virginia board can defiantly announce that it will continue to enforce a state law which a plain-spoken U.S. judge has declared to be 'unconstitutional on its face.'

When officials of Southern cities angrily announce there will be no police protection for the property and persons of those freedom fighters who boldly stand in opposition to outlawed dscriminatory ordinances.

When subversion and brazen defiance of law becomes synonymous with the Southern way of life among congressmen, governors, attorneys general, mayors, commissioners and other officialdom;

When all of this happens what do they expect of illiterate hillbillies, of poverty-stricken rednecks, of ignorant and prejudiced backwoodsmen but a response in cross-burning, rock-throwing, acid-tossing, dynamiting and shotgun blasts.

When you sow lawlessness, how can you expect to harvest anything but rebellion and anarchy.

Revenge At Its Worse

Journal & Guide

ON THURSDAY and Friday, January 10th and 11th, the white ministers of Montgomery Ala. and the leading business men of the city issued separate group statements calling for a halt to mob violence and the dynamiting of Negro churches and homes in the city. Sat. 1-19-57

Also the Montgomery Advertiser, the city morning newspaper, carried a strong editorial calling for a return to law and order. Norfolk Va.

Following these actions the dynamiting of churches, and homes of ministers, and the firing upon buses ceased.

The Mayor and the Governor could have prevented the horrible stain upon Montgomery, but they declined to do so. They could have stopped it any time they wanted to, but they declined until political and moral pressures were brought to bear upon them.

Montgomery is quiet at present—on the surface at least.

When mobs are permitted to blow up Christian churches with dynamite as reprisal against people who sought to achieve a realization of a court decision against a brutal form of bus segregation, a community has sunk about as low as it can sink in moral degeneracy.

Associated Press and other press service reporters have been calling the men who led the Montgomery movement "pro-integrationists."

As a matter of fact there was no point in this slur after the Supreme Court's decision in the South Carolina case.

Bus segregation in Montgomery was largely in the hands of the drivers. They were the law. The boycott started after two incidents: (1) A bus driver required a pregnant colored woman to surrender her seat to a strapping white man. The woman had to stand. (2) The arrest of a middle-aged Negro woman for refusing to surrender her seat to a white man. These were the climax of a long train of such incidents.

We hope that now the substantial white elements of the city have spoken their disapproval of the forms of reprisal initiated in Montgomery, law and order will prevail.

Lilywhite bus permit sought in Montgomery

Afro-American Sat. 2-9-57

Baltimore Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (ANP) —Movements for a "lily-white" transportation system based on a club plan got under way here last week as the Montgomery City Commission petitioned U.S. District court to learn if a "club" bus line can legally be operated.

Sat. 2-9-57

The action came after six segregationists entreated the City Council for permission to form a club known as "The Rebel Club." The purpose of the club is presumably to transport white passengers only on a private bus line. P. 20

City attorneys petitioned U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., to determine if the city can legally issue a franchise to a "private bus system, in the face of the Supreme Court's ban on racial bus segregation here."

THE ATTORNEYS asked for a franchise from the city to operate a non - profit bus line for the transportation of members only.

Although there was no reference to race in the petition, reliable sources indicated that membership would be open to whites only.

Judge Johnson and Judge Richard T. Rives of the U.S. District Court of Appeals entered a formal order that no action on the request be taken for at least three weeks.

Fifty Years Ago Car Seating Caused Headaches

Advertiser Sun. 1-6-57 Montgomery, Ala.
P. 1-6

By NELSON COLE

Montgomery's city transportation system was a comparative child when first plagued by racial-seating trouble.

Although the present difficulties and the resulting headlines tend to belie it, a greater battle involving the line (one which newspapers called "The Battle of Montgomery") occurred more than 50 years ago.

From this battle was to emerge the seating arrangement for the races which stood until last month when the Supreme Court knocked it over.

On Nov. 24, 1906, the morning Advertiser read: "For nearly two hours yesterday not a single street car crossed Court Square. The stopping of the cars (by police) was witnessed by a crowd of thousands of Montgomerians, all of whom took the utmost interest in the procedure."

As police stopped the cars, they also arrested the conductors—some 54 of them—because they were violating a segregation ordinance.

It had all begun a month earlier when city fathers became disgruntled about existing segregation laws. As the Oct. 2, 1906 Advertiser said: "Last night's session of the City Council was hoodooed from the very start. With 13 members of that honorable body answering to their names on rollcall, it would not be expected that any important business would be transacted."

The paper continued, " . . . there was not a single spicy debate during the long session that was held. An ordinance calling for separate cars for blacks and whites was provocative of some oratory on the part of Aldermen Jones, Sullivan and John C. Tyson, after which it was passed unanimously.

"The new ordinance provides that the Montgomery Traction Co must furnish separate cars for the two races and makes refusal to enter the proper car an offense punishable by a fine of $1 to $100."

CARS AND WEATHER

Also concerning the company that night, according to the paper, were two other resolutions. it was ordered "to cease using the streets of Montgomery as a work shop" and in acid sarcasm "requested to use its good cars in bad weather and bad cars in good weather."

Mayor W. M. Teague was quick to veto this two-car facilities plan, however.

In a message to the council the next day, Teague said, "I am reluctant to disagree with your honorable body concerning the wisdom of the segregation ordinance, but I cannot consistently concur in the arrangement proposed by the law in its present form.

"I feel sincerely it will cause unnecessary hardships upon the company, doubling their number of cars needed, changing their schedules, and in some instances putting the trailer before the trolley, making it dangerous."

The method for 50 years of segregation was to be prematurely outlined by the mayor in his next statement.

As a recommendation, he said, "I have heard of cities . . . New Orleans, Mobile and other Southern towns . . . which have segregated seating by putting up signs saying: 'This side for colored only' and 'This side for whites only.' They have had considerable success with this system I understand and perhaps it will work here also."

The council would have none of it, however, and gave the company 30 days to provide the separate cars.

There was one objecting, and prophetic voice. Councilman J. L. Holloway said "it might be found out that trailers would be illegal, under decisions of various courts, as discrimination between the races."

Then on Nov. 22, 1906, Attorney Ray Rush for the traction company said there were but two courses for "us to follow. We have not yet decided which horn of dilemma to take: 1. Run all cars we have and simply label one white and the other colored, thereby cutting down the runs from every 15 minutes to a half hour, or 2. simply ignore the ruling."

PEOPLE WAIT

Of the cutting down on cars' time schedule, the paper's only comment was an editorial cartoon showing a man sitting on a bench with a food stand next to him. A sign on the stand read, "Have Breakfast While You Wait." Across the street was a hotel, fronted by another sign saying "Lodgings cheap for those who missed their car."

The following morning the ruling was to be enforced at 9:30 a.m. "sharp." The mid-morning deadline was set in order to "allow all working men to reach their respective places of business before our action will be taken."

The company had, by this time, formally announced it could not comply with the council's order After giving the specifications of its cars the company simply said. "The motors are not big enough to pull a trailer.

Present at the Square when the mass arrests were to take place was the mayor, who directed the action, car officials, W. H. Taylor, chief of police, and "most of the councilmen, who did not necessarily make themselves conspicuous, but milled in and around the crowd."

POLICE HALT

As each car would come into the square, a policeman would halt it and place the conductor under arrest. The car simply stood where it was stopped and at one point, 17 of them were "lined back up Dexter Avenue, creating a congestion."

The patrol wagon had been sent to the scene in advance, but the mayor ordered it to return to the station. "There is no need to overly embarrass these men. Each can walk to the station with a police escort."

Within hours, however, the company entered the City Court and secured a temporary injunction from Judge A. D. Sayre against the city. It said, in effect the city had no right in forcing the company to do something "it was impossible for them to do." At 11:21 a.m., Nov. 24, the cars started rolling again—a way they were to operate until months later when the council finally decided that "movable partitions will separate the races on all city cars."

The Battle of Montgomery had ended, establishing a seating system, which spawned in trouble, was apparently then destined to end in trouble.

Violence No Answer

Time, patience and a great deal of thought may resolve some of the issues which have now come to the fore. In a word, moderation in all things; and a recognition that it is better to accept that which is possible than to invite destruction by vain struggles for an unattainable ideal.

Shall Montgomery Surrender?

Advertiser P. 4-A

IS the night air of this genteel old city, the capital of a state and once the capital of a nation, to reverberate with dynamite explosions? Montgomery, Ala.

Is Montgomery to be a city in which dynamite sticks are tossed onto lawns like the morning paper?

Is Montgomery to be a city in which bullets fly between sundown and sunup? Sun. 1-11-57

Is Montgomery to be a city in which a handful of terroists overawe the police power of city, county and state—squeezing a trigger and abolishing a bus fleet?

Are the powers of government of the City of Montgomery to be surrendered to outlaws?

MONTGOMERY will sow to the wind if it does not meet this challenge headon.

This city can become a badlands, or at worst, a bloody cockpit.

The soundest preventive action is a stern response to this challenge—right now.

The violence is probably manageable at this point.

It will be less so if it seems to the outlaws that they can put the government to rout with a few random bursts of gunfire and a bundles of dynamite.

Those buses should run on schedule if they run empty. They should run as a symbol that the police apparatus of our government has not abdicated.

Whatever it takes in special police details, sheriffs deputies and highway patrolmen should be assigned in such fashion that a bus driver can take a bus from one side of town to the other without ambush, empty though it may be.

The constabulary from more than one source is available. It needs only to be summoned and assigned.

The issue now is no longer segregation on city buses. Neither white people nor colored people need ride the buses during this time.

The issue now has passed beyond segregation. The issue now is whether it is safe to live in Montgomery, Ala.

THOSE buses should run with a police protection so obvious and so determined that outlaws will desist or be run down.

If not checkmated now, will the outlaws not become more bold and more numerous?

Will not continued violence poison this city just as you poison a well?

Old Photo Shows Horse-Drawn Trolleys In Vogue When Seating Problems Born Here

WE ARE already paying a grievous toll. The story of Thursday's dynamiting is already broadcast all over the world, blackening this city's name. Such events firm the hand of the South's enemies in Congress. Those who are at this moment seeking enactment of unbearable civil rights legislation welcome such events, for they serve their cause.

THE prospect is that this violence will continue and swell in volume and daring unless there is decisive action. Sooner or later a stand will have to be taken, and it will be easier now.

Otherwise we face the prospect of retaliatory violence between groups. The issue is not segregation. No one need ride the buses. The issue is whether it is to be safe to live in Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY BUSES RESUME DAY SERVICE

Times 1-17-57 New Orleans

Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 16—Montgomery's newly integrated buses began running again today after a six-day stoppage.

Times 1-17-57

The stoppage was ordered last Thursday after shots had been fired at six buses and some Negro churches had been bombed.

The buses ran today on a limited, daylight schedule, with last trips starting at 5:15 . M. Police guards were assigned to buses finishing their last runs after night fall.

As the service resumed, it appeared that Montgomery was working out its own system of integration.

Some buses carried Negro passengers only. Others carried a fe wwhites and no Negroes. When whites and Negroes rode the same buses, the Negroes took setts from the middle of the bus back, while the whites stayed in the front. Habit, it seemed, still prevailed. No incidents were reported.

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 16 (AP)—Negroes continued to take seats in the rear of Miami buses today, despite a recommendation of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that they "sit where they please."

The N! A. A. C. P. offered this advice yesterday in the wake of an informed Federal court ruling that Miami's bus segregation laws were unconstitutional.

Negro accused in bus lap-sitting case ruled minor

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 9—(AP)—Juvenile Court authorities are holding a 17-year-old Negro girl who allegedly sat in a white girl's lap on a city bus.

The white girl, now married, testified in city court Friday that Fannie Robinson sat in her lap when she refused to allow her to occupy a seat beside her Oct. 23. News

Mrs. Barbara Smith said she was a junior high school pupil at the time and that her school books were spread out on the seat when the Negro demanded the space although other empty seats were available on the bus.

The young wife testified she was struck by the Negro girl in the altercation which followed.

She signed a warrant charging assault and battery, but City Judge Eugene Loe said the law required him to turn the defendant over to Juvenile Court because she was less than 18 years old. Ref 11-9-57

Juvenile Court took no immediate action.

Mrs. Parks' first names is Rosa, and she is the retiring little seamstress whose "feet hurt" and who refused to move back in a Montgomery bus in December, 1955, thereby sparking a bus boycott by the 50,000 Negroes in the city.

It was this successful boycott that introduced the leadership qualities of the Rev. Martin Luther King to the entire world and aided his resultant emergence as a top Negro leader.

Grooms defers ruling on bus segregation

Federal Judge Hobart Grooms deferred action today on ruling on the constitutionality of the city bus segregation law.

He heard 20 minutes of argument from city attorneys and Arthur Shores, who represented 22 Negroes arrested last Dec. 26 on a charge of violating the city bus ordinance.

CITY ATTY. JAMES H. WILLIS contended the question of the constitutionality of the section of the city code pertaining to bus segregation was settled in February when Recorder's Judge Ralph E. Parker declared that the section of the code was constitutional.

The city attorney also argued that the case was settled then because the defense attorney paid fines of $50 each that were imposed on the Negroes and did not take an appeal.

ATTY. SHORES, defining the case in Recorder's Court as a criminal one, contended that a criminal case has nothing to do with a civil one.

Shores was in federal court here to ask that the city bus segregation ordinance be declared unconstitutional.

Judge Grooms overruled a motion pertaining to the case as a whole but said he will take up the issue of res judicata—whether it has already been decided in the city court.

JUDGE GROOMS also said he would not rule on the Birmingham Transit Co.'s part in the case because it is a corporation. Last February Judge Grooms dismissed the transit company as a defendant but the company was later reinstated when Shores amended a complaint naming the utility as a defendant.

The transit company had been named with the City of Birmingham and the city commissioners as defendants in the suit to have the bus segregation ordinance declared unconstitutional.

SHORES, at one point in his argument, referred to the fact that Recorder Judge Parker had attacked the legality of the 14th Amendment, declaring it "null and void."

Judge Grooms quickly expressed interest and shot the question at Shores: "Did he do this?"

Wed. 10-30-57

In the federal courtroom during the arguments were a number of Negroes, including Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, local Negro minister who led the party of Negroes into a white section of a Birmingham Transit Company bus last December.

Some of these Negroes charged with riding the bus at that time were also in court.

Juvenile Court To Hear Case Of Negro Girl In Bus Scuffle

Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 11-9-57

The case against a Negro girl accused of assault and battery in a bus scuffle with a younger white girl was transferred to Juvenile Court yesterday by Recorder's Court Judge D. Eugene Loe.

Testimony against the Negro defendant, Fannie Robinson, was under way when defense attorney Fred Gray told the judge that the girl was only 17 years old.

Judge Loe then pointed out that girls under 18 come within the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court and announced the transferring of the case.

Mrs. Barbara Anne Heflin Smith, who signed the warrant against the Robinson girl, had testified that the Negro slapped her in a dispute over a bus seat.

Mrs. Smith gave this account of the incident:

She had boarded the bus and was sitting in an aisle seat, with schoolbooks beside her, when the Robinson girl entered the bus.

Mrs. Smith said that the Negro girl asked persmission to sit down and was refused. An argument ensued, and the Robinson girl sat down in Mrs. Smith's lap, according to Mrs. Smith's testimony.

"I pushed her away and she slapped me and I slapped her back," Mrs. Smith testified, and then related a scuffle in which she said the Negro girl hit her about the chest and arms.

It was at this point in the testimony that Judge Loe asked Negro attorney Gray the defendant's age and transferred the case, which will come before Juvenile Court next week.

Mrs. Smith, who signed the warrant Oct. 23 prior to her marriage last Sunday, is 15 years old and said she was a student at Baldwin Junior high School. Her address was listed at 1031 Clay St.

Woman Charges Brutality In Alabama Waiting Room Row

Birmingham News

Dr. Juanita Pitts 31, a prominent young New York woman physician and a native of Birmingham who accused five Birmingham policemen of alleged brutality against her in a Birmingham train terminal station's so-called "segregated waiting room," was tried in Judge Ralph E. Parker's Recorders Court, Tuesday, October 15, and fined $40 on charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

Dr. Pitts, formerly of Birmingham, and now a resident of Rochester, New York, was charged with vagrancy, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest, shortly after she was arrested by Police Sgt. J. F. Holler and Officers A. W. Justice, B. L. Waites, W. F. Marlowe and P. L. Stephens, around 10 o'clock Monday night, Oct. 14, record shows.

WRITING A LETTER

Police said they received a call to terminal station and upon arriving there they saw Dr. Pitts sitting in a section of the waiting room which local police laws reserved "for white people only."

Officers Holler and Justice said Dr. Pitts was sitting quietly writing a letter. They said that when they asked her her name, they said she refused. They said that after she refused to divulge her name, they told her that she was under arrest and then took her by her arms.

After Dr. Pitts allegedly showed reluctance to go with the officers to the patrol car, Officers Marlowe, Waites and Stephens said they were called to the station.

In his report to Police Chief Jamie Moore, Officer Stephens claimed that Dr. Pitts allegedly kicked him in his jaw while he and other officers were struggling with her and trying to put her in

Race Issue Sparks Violence

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 6 (UP) — A mob of rock-throwing whites, yelling "kill the nigger-lover," today attacked a white integration leader who later was fined $30 for reckless driving in making his escape.

Lamar Weaver, the integration supporter, had just left the Terminal Railroad Station where a Negro couple had tested the integration policy in a waiting room, when he was slugged with a suitcase and stoned.

He was convicted at a special hearing of running a red light and reckless driving as he drove his damaged car from a parking lot through a gauntlet of his tormentors.

"Obviously, I was fined for being at the terminal station and not for reckless driving," was Weaver's comment on the police court judgment.

Police Testimony.

The fine was $25 and $5 costs. City police testified that Weaver came into the station and sat down by a Negro minister and his wife "at the height of racial unrest" at the scene.

Weaver said he requested the special hearing so he could leave the city. He said his wife and child already were staying out of town.

Violence flared again in Alabama's racial struggle while in Miami, Fla., fiery John Kasper announced he will form a white supremacy youth group in Florida because "parents are not educating their children properly."

Kasper, wanted in Tennessee on a charge of interfering with court-ordered integration and free under $10,000 bond pending an appeal to a conviction on similar charges, said he will reveal his plans for a "Florida White Youth" group at a rally in Miami Friday night.

A relative calm here was shattered when an angry mob attacked integrationist Lamar Weaver as he left the Terminal Station where two Negroes tested waiting room segregation laws.

Hit With Suitcase.

Weaver was hit on the head with a suitcase and his Cadillac convertible was showered with stones and cement blocks as he tried to escape from a crowd of white men who met him at the door of Terminal Station.

Weaver had gone to the station for a talk with the Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, a Negro minister. Shuttleworth had taken a seat in the white waiting room at the station and was allowed to remain. However, police asked Weaver to leave because he was not a ticket-holder.

Some 150 white men were waiting outside the station and taunted Weaver with cries of "nigger lover." About 25 or 30 of the men followed the integration leader to his car, where the attack began.

One car pulled in front of his Cadillac, blocking Weaver's way out of the parking lot. The cursing white men grabbed chunks of concrete block from a nearby wall under construction and broke several windows in the car.

Drove Into Traffic.

One man pulled open the car door and started hitting Weaver on the head before a reporter managed to shut the car door and keep the attacker away. Weaver backed into another car, put his car in low and ran headlong into traffic, barely missing several cars.

He drove to City Hall to protest the attack, but was instead charged with reckless driving. Weaver told reporters after the attack he plans to "leave this city and state right away.

"I think it is best I leave to avoid any more trouble," he said.

"I don't know where I am going but it will be out of Birmingham and Alabama.

U.S. court refuses to halt test of Birmingham bus law

Afro-American Sat. 3-2-57 Baltimore Md. p.1

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Efforts of Birmingham officials to continue local bus segregation received their first major setback Thursday in Federal District Court.

It came in the form of a refusal by U.S. Judge H. Hobart Grooms to dismiss a complaint in which 21 colored bus riders had asked that the city's bus segregation laws be declared unconstitutional and their enforcement be halted.

THE 21 COMPLAINANTS include many of the city's civic leaders and clergymen, members of the Alabama Christian Movement for Christian Rights, who were arrested on Dec. 26 after a mass test violation of the bus jim-crow statues. Their trial is set for March 18.

Following their arrest and release on bail they filed injunction procedings in Federal Court through their attorney, Arthur D. Shores, to block enforcement of the law under which they had been arrested.

White Integrationist Attacked In Depot Row

Courier-Journal p.3 Louisville, Ky.

Birmingham, Ala., March 6 (AP)—Angry white men, frustrated in efforts to bar a Negro minister and his wife from a white waiting room at a railroad station, attacked a white man who sat beside them today.

Lamar Weaver, a white steel-company clerk who has made speeches advocating racial integration, escaped in his car in a shower of heavy stones.

Windows of his Cadillac convertible were shattered and he was struck in the face with a suitcase.

To Appear Before House Unit

Weaver later told reporters he was leaving town for Washington, where he said he would appear before the House civil-rights subcommittee. He said he had no definite plans after that.

"I just know that I'm leaving town," he said.

Police arrested Weaver on a charge of reckless driving in speeding away from the stone-throwing crowd.

The arrest followed a complaint that Weaver's car struck a pedestrian as he left. Weaver was fined $25.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth and his wife entered the Birmingham Terminal Station under police escort after they had twice been blocked by members of a prosegregation white group.

Bought Tickets for Atlanta

Virtually surrounded by police, the Shuttlesworths were in the waiting room almost 1½ hours before boarding a New York-bound passenger train. They said they had bought tickets for Atlanta.

More than 20 uniformed officers swarmed into the station and guarded its approaches.

After the Shuttlesworths were inside the station, police ordered away a crowd of white men, including R. E. Chambliss, who said he represented the KU Klux Klan.

Negroes Ordered Back

Police ordered Negroes who came to the ticket windows between the white and Negro sections back into the Negro waiting room unless they were there to buy tickets.

Contrary to an Interstate Commerce ruling banning separate waiting rooms for white persons and Negroes, two separate waiting rooms are maintained at Birmingham's Terminal Station.

Mr. Shuttlesworth led mass violations of Birmingham's bus-segregation laws by 21 Negroes December 26. The Negroes have asked for a Federal Court ruling that the ordinance is unconstitutional and for an injunction restraining police from enforcing segregation on the city buses.

The Negro minister led the defiance of the bus-segregation law a few hours after his church and adjoining home had been damaged by bomb.

Case Thrown Out

Mr. Shuttleworth, pastor of Bethel Baptist Church, is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a prointegration organization formed shortly after activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were outlawed in Alabama.

A Negro attack on segregation at the station was thrown out of Federal Court here Monday. In doing so United States District Judge Seybourne H. Lynne said there was no state or city law against racial segregation in railroad waiting rooms.

Mr. Shuttlesworth announced in advance that he planned to occupy a seat in the white waiting room. Negroes had been barred in the past.

By the time he and his wife arrived shortly after noon, both a number of police and the white men who attempted to block his way were ranged around the entrances.

A white youth blocked the path of the Shuttlesworths outside an entrance, called his attention to the sign, and ordered him to go the the Negro waiting room.

"I don't want any trouble with you," said Mr. Shuttlesworth. With his wife following, he walked to another entrance. This time he was pushed back by a surge of white men jamming the entrance. At this point police in-

Seated Near Passageway

Weaver didn't enter the scene until the Shuttlesworths had taken seats on a bench nearest the passageway leading to the Negro waiting room.

He talked with them for several minutes. Officers then approached, asked if Weaver had a ticket, and ordered him outside when he said he did not.

A crowd of angry white men followed him to his car, cursing, striking, and threatening Weaver as they crowded around him.

Police Officer W. C. Wilhite said witnesses told him that, in turning around, Weaver's car backed into another automobile, then ran a red light and struck a pedestrian, who apparently was not injured.

As he left the railroad station, headed for his automobile, a crowd of white people hastily gathered. They jeered at Weaver with shouts of "n----r lover."

When he got into his car someone threw a stone. Others joined in, breaking windows in the car. Before Weaver drove off, a group of white men pushed and pulled on the car, attempting to overturn it.

LED MOVEMENT

The Rev. Shuttlesworth, who led a movement by Negroes to disregard Alabama segregation laws on Birmingham buses several weeks ago, had announced earlier today that he would disregard custom at the railroad station.

When he arrived at the station newsmen and a crowd of people were waiting. As the minister started in the front door, he was stopped by Don Doodwin, 24, who told Shuttlesworth not to go in. The minister brushed past him. Three men pushed the Negro minister back from the door. One of them was identified by newsmen as R E Chamblis a well known Birmingham member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Weaver had announced his candidacy for public improvements commissioner in Birmingham, but withdrew from the race this week, claiming that his life had been threatened because of his stand for an end to segregation.

Mob Stones Minister Who Sat With Negro

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

Thurs. 3-7-57 P1

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (INS) — A white lay minister who shared a railroad station waiting-room seat with a Negro integration leader was stoned by a mob in Birmingham Wednesday.

A crowd of some 50 persons, many of them hooting and hollering, followed Lamar Weaver from a Birmingham railroad station and pummelled his car with stones. About ten men tried to overturn Weaver's car.

Weaver accompanied the Rev. F Shuttlesworth to the railroad station where Shuttlesworth had announced, Negroes would occupy seats in sections designated for white people. The decision to test Birmingham police enforcement of railroad waiting room segregation followed dismissal of a Federal Court suit this week in which the court held there was no Alabama law against racial integration in railroad stations.

BOUGHT TICKET

The Rev Shuttlesworth, President of the Alabama Movement for Human Rights, bought a railroad ticket and sat in the white waiting room. Weaver sat beside him for about five minutes while they talked.

Police forced Weaver to move, because he held no railroad ticket.

Thurs. 3-7-57

Shuttlesworth turned around, and entered the station through another door.

P3

Weaver was already there, the two shook hands and sat down together.

Police, in making Weaver move, did not take any action against the Negro minister.

"They should ask all the mob in the terminal station to leave," the Rev. Shuttlesworth said, referring to a group standing around watching.

WEAVER ESCAPES

Weaver escaped from his attackers when the aroused crowd turned to argue with a newspaper photographer who had slammed the door of Weaver's car.

Weaver said a number of the men in the crowd punched at him, and he was hit several times.

Weaver later charged that police made no effort to protect him.

"They didn't follow the crowd that followed me, and police saw men strike me and did nothing about it," he said.

Woman Doctor Charges Police Slugged Her in Birmingham RR Station!

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Dr. Juanita Pitts, 31, a prominent New York woman physician and a native of Birmingham, who accused five Birmingham policemen of brutality against her in a Birmingham train terminal station's so-called "segregated waiting room," was tried in Judge Ralph E. Parker's Recorder's Court and fined $40 on charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

Dr. Pitts, formerly of Birmingham and now a resident of Rochester, N. Y., was charged with vagrancy, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest shortly after she was arrested by Police Sgt. J. F. POLICE SAID they received a call to Terminal Station and upon arriving they saw Dr. Pitts sitting in a section of the waiting room which local police laws reserve "for white people only."

Officers Holler and Justice said Dr. Pitts was sitting quietly writing a letter. They said that when they asked her name, she refused. They said that after she refused to divulge her name they told her that she was under arrest and then took her by her arms.

After Dr. Pitts allegedly showed reluctance to go with the officers to the patrol car, Officers Marlowe, Waites and Stephens said they were called to the station.

In his report to Police Chief Jamie Moore, Officers Stephens claimed that Dr. Pitts kicked him in his jaw while he and other officers were struggling with her and trying to put her in the patrol car.

It was learned that Dr. Pitts was in the city visiting her mother, who is ill at home, 1222 Escambia St.

IN AN interview, Chief Moore said that Dr. Pitts was not creating a disturbance, "but she should have told the officers who she was and where she was going." He added that "all policemen have instructions to check passengers and their tickets in all stations, whether train or bus," in Birmingham.

Chief Moore said he also learned from the officers that Dr. Pitts disclosed that she did not know she was violating local segregation laws. She said she did not see any segregated signs, only "Interstate Passengers," the chief related further.

Dr. Pitts was fined $15 and $5 court costs on each of two counts, records show.

Chief Moore said Dr. Pitts was represented by Atty. William A. Jacobs.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—A three-judge bench of the U. S. Court of Appeals has listened to oral arguments in a case involving Mr. and Mrs. Charles Baldwin, who are seeking to invalidate the segregated waiting rooms of Birmingham's Terminal Railroad Station.

ATLANTA, Ga., March 30.

NOT HAVING visited Atlanta in several years, every impression was a fresh one. It's a big city, like Dallas.

You get a sense of surge and vitality as in Chicago. By contrast Philadelphia is—despite its downtown resurgence—a dingy, tired old bag with a sluggish liver.

Sun. 3-31-57

Birmingham is in the big rich bracket with Atlanta, but Birmingham is too new to have the personality of Atlanta. Birmingham's Cadillac fleet is the equal of Atlanta's, the department stores are Pentagon scale, there are magnificent mansions in the alps ringing Jones Valley, and Vulcan maintains a box at the opera, but the difference is well expressed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

Montgomery, Ala.

Every city of size and age has an Athletic Club for men. They look very much alike from New York to Philadelphia to Chicago—lots of old marble, thick rugs, soft lighting, high ceilings, polished brass and dark stained oak. The membership roster abounds in third generation names. The service, food to rubdown, is energetic but restrained. There is a trace of too much of the Brooks Brothers uniform with its exaggerations of unpadded shoulders and pin-headed hats, but all within are gentlemen either by breeding or instinct, or by simply having passed the portals. You find such clubs in old cities. Birmingham has none such as yet.

ED'S BUSINESS was attending a banquet at which the lady editor of a hitherto obscure weekly in Florida received an award in recognition of a crusade to protect a family of Indian-Irish extraction from the canard that they were Negro.

This lady editor's performance was without question brave and resourceful. Most of us are not endowed with courage of this order.

The taunts to her and daughter, the physical danger, and the overt hostility of an ape sheriff were far behind her at this testimonial dinner, a mark of her new standing as an outstanding figure in Southern journalism. At the time she had no way to know that all would come right and bring her rewards, for there is no evidence on this earth to show that either righteousness or sinfulness are systematically rewarded.

But in her case the pleasing Hollywood ending came amain and a new brick was laid in support of this country's tradition of independent journalism that on occasion flips into the flails of public sentiment. The public—the majority— is often wrong and brutal. This lady tamed the jabbering majority. Others, equally as righteous, are utterly destroyed by defiance.

Above all, this lady editor's award, taken in competition with the daily newspapermen of five states, is another lesson in the power of a weekly paper. Too many, alas, abdicate to the dailies.

A FEW YEARS ago the invariable question poked at the Alabama traveler was, "Say, what about that governor of yours?" Now it's, "How about your bus situation?"

If you stand at a busy bus stop corner in front of a department store such as Davison's, you will see that Atlanta and Montgomery citizens ride the buses in the same way. White and colored citizens voluntarily stick with their own.

As nearly as one can tell by scrutinizing expressions and movements, white and colored citizens boarding buses in Atlanta are not in the slightest self-conscious or uncertain in boarding buses. They evidently separate themselves without any consideration of the matter.

AS LARGE as Atlanta is, it seems to have fewer professional load mouths and caricatures, white as well as colored, agitating the situation than Montgomery.

And, of course, every Southern city profited by the blunders made in Montgomery during the boycott. The policy there is to avoid as far as possible letting a situation come to a head. The city government and responsible Negro leadership in Atlanta have not failed to keep liaison with one another.

Such liaison is probably impossible in Montgomery by this time. Our year of strife has made the city government captive to some extent of an element that thinks there would still be a happy state of slavery (Bible-blessed, of course) if the Confederate government had just stood up for its rights against Lincoln's government. On the other side, the colored people are led by a man and his imitators whose concerns are global rather than Montgomery.

BY CONTRAST with the buses, you see a degree of scrambling in the air terminal in Atlanta. Any day you can see a few Negro and white travelers seated side by side when there is no place else to sit. The men's lavatories are separate, but there was a Negro soldier in the white lavatory. White travelers took no obvious notice.

AGAIN and again, all but the blind see that the real area of discord is the schools. School contacts are essentially different from others. If separateness could be maintained there—race pride should take care of the situation—our troubles might then seem fewer than supposed.

DISMISSAL IS ASKED IN SEGREGATION SUIT

Birmingham Post 4-23

Birmingham Says Case Handled In City Court

Memphis Press

BIRMINGHAM, April 12. — (AP)—The City of Birmingham moved for dismissal of one Federal court segregation suit Friday and another racial case was appealed by a Negro couple.

City attorneys asked dismissal of a Federal court attack on Birmingham's bus segregation law on the grounds that the case has been disposed of in city courts.

Twenty-one Negroes who are seeking a ruling that the law is unconstitutional were convicted and paid fines in Recorder's Court last month. They staged a mass violation of the bus segregation statute Dec. 26, and later filed their United States District Court attack against it.

Explaining why they failed to appeal their Recorder's Court convictions, Attorney Arthur D. Shores said he believed they could get "quicker and more favorable action" in Federal than in state courts.

The city argued in asking dismissal of the Federal court suit that a final judgment was rendered in the case in Recorder's Court.

The Negro couple which filed an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans had been arrested last December while sitting in a railroad waiting room designated for interstate and white passengers.

Cal L. Baldwin, and his wife the Negroes, asked a United States District Court order declaring the state's railroad waiting room law unconstitutional, and prohibiting city police from enforcing segregation at the terminal station, where they were arrested.

United States District Court Judge Seybourn H. Lynne threw their case out of his court, however. He said the state statute which they contested said nothing about segregation.

The Baldwins were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct but never were tried.

Negroes Draw Bus Law Fines

Inquirer p. 8

Philadelphia

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 21 (UP).—City Judge Ralph E. Parker fined 22 Negroes $5[illegible] each today for defying city bus segregation laws. He asserted the U. S. Supreme Court made a mistake in declaring bus segregation unconstitutional.

Parker also said the city of Birmingham should challenge the validity of the 14th (civil rights) Amendment, which he said was forced upon the southern states without due process of law.

"Knowing that ratification was coerced by military government (after the Civil War), certainly I am not alone in saying that the 14th Amendment is null and void," he said.

GROUP LISTENS GLUMLY

The Negroes, who boarded the buses in a mass demonstration last Dec. 26, listened glumly today while the judge assailed the high court's action.

Judge Parker said to drop segregation on Birmingham buses would create a "state of emergency" and "I will not be responsible for such a calamity."

Arthur Shores, Negro attorney, indicated an appeal from the verdict would be sought in the Federal courts rather than in the state courts.

ORDER CRITICIZED

Parker criticized the Supreme Court's order which outlawed segregation on carriers in Montgomery, the Alabama capital, early this year.

He said "judicial dictatorship cannot compel social adjustment." The court ruling in the Montgomery case, he said, "does not make the ruling correct either legally or morally."

"Certainly I am not required by the oath taken by me to uphold the decisions of any court which are destructive of the Constitution.

"I had rather wear a ball and chain around my ankle than to wear one around my conscience."

World Wed. 4-10-57

The Mayor's Citizens Advisory Committee organized to help settle the transit bus workers strike fails to include any representation of one of the larger population segments. Mayor James W. Morgan, who has often pointed with pride to the standing and business achievements of some of the group's leaders, seems to forget Negro persons when organizing important civic committees. This could be as bad politically as it is wrong civicly. This should be immediately called to the attention of Birmingham's chief city official that it will not be listed as a mere oversight, or routine slight. B'ham, Ala. P.6

An estimated 63 percent of the bus riders are members of the group not directly represented on the Mayor's Committee. Close to forty percent of the city's population is made up of members of the Negro group. But where the Negro group is weak is at the ballot box. Herein lies the job for the group's earnest leadership.

Weakness at the ballot box should not be allowed to stand in the way of our leaders insisting on representation on the Mayor's Committee. It should serve only to spur non-voters who desire representation to become qualified voters. It inspired the rank and file to inquire why of our leaders are not trying to get representation on the Mayor's Committee.

Still there is the parmount consideration of unused talent. This newspaper feels that there are leaders within the group who could make a substantial contribution toward the exploration of the issues involved. Democracy demands that there be fair representation of all areas of the population on mayor-appointed committees.

It is to be hoped that our mayor will expand his citizens advisory committee to make it substantially representative of the city. The Negro group is entitled to representation on this committee, and others.

Let there be fair representation of all of the riding groups on the Citizens Strike Study Committee.

NEGROES FINED FOR VIOLATING SEGREGATION

Daily Inland Chicago Ill. Fri. 3-22-57

Birmingham, Ala., March 21 (AP)—Recorders Judge Ralph E. Parker today fined 21 Negroes $50 and costs each for violating Birmingham's bus segregation law. In his ruling, Judge Parker charged that the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution is "null and void." P.10

The municipal judge struck out at what he called "the attitude of a conspiring small group of Negroes who defy the law in regard to segregation and take matters into their own hands."

"Defiance of the law will contribute nothing toward amicable race relations," he said.

Congress "Pulls Fast One"

The 14th amendment to the Constitution guarantees equal protection under the law. It is a keystone of many Negro legal attacks on racial segregation laws in the south. It was adopted during the reconstruction period following the Civil war when southern states were under military rule.

"Southern senators and representatives were denied their right to participate in the two-thirds vote necessary for submitting the amendment to the states for ratification," Parker charged. He asserted also that Congress "pulled a fast one" in adopting the reconstruction act of 1868.

Parker overruled defense arguments offered at the trial Monday that the segregation law is invalid. A similar Montgomery, Ala. ordinance was declared unconstitutional by the United States supreme court.

File U. S. Court Petition

The Negroes already have filed a petition in United States District court, asking a ruling that the city law is unconstitutional.

The mass violation was staged Dec. 26. It was led by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. Most of the demonstrators were directors of the organization.

Since that time the city commission has adopted a new ordinance reaffirming the bus segregation regulation.

A special committee set up to look into Birmingham's bus strike will meet at 10 this morning in City Hall with the hope that the management and employes of the Birmingham Transit Co. "will lay their wants on the line."

The nine-man executive committee was organized during the first session of the newly reactivated Citizens Advisory Committee yesterday afternoon at City Hall.

Chairman of the committee is J. Fred Shackelford, president of Wimberley Thomas Hardware Co. Shackelford also is president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce.

Other members named to the executive committee—which was given the job of inquiring into bus strike situation—are:

Mervyn H. Sterne, a member of the firm of Sterne, Agee and Leach; Ben Leader, attorney; Sam Shannon, attorney; Carl Wittichen, president of Wittichen Chemical Co.; Dr. J. H. Buchanan, retired pastor of the Southside Baptist Church; E. J. Barnett, state secretary of the American Federation of Labor; J. Claude Smithson, mayor of Fairfield, and James E. Mills, editor of The Birmingham Post-Herald.

The committee went into an executive session following its formation and then questioned, separately, representatives of both the union and the company.

Shackelford said after the meeting broke up that both sides had been asked to go back to their directors and membership and determine the absolute limit each will make toward a mutual agreement.

To date, the gap between what the union wants and what the company is willing to give has not been definitely established.

The executive committee is hopeful that this gap will be determined in this morning's meeting so that the city will know what part it may have to play in closing it. Post-Herald P.2

The city already has offered tax relief to the transit company to the extent of $20,000 over the next 60 days so that it might grant the striking employes a temporary wage increase of eight cents an hour.

The union is asking 46 cents.

The company, the day before it notified City Commission last week that it might have to go out of business, offered its workers a three-cent raise.

The company, however, has rejected the city's offer, declaring that to continue its operations on a temporary basis would prove too costly.

Negroes Fined $1210 As Dixie Bus Violators

World-Telegram + Sun P.3 Thurs. 3-21-57

By the United Press.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 21.—Recorders Court Judge Ralph Parker found 22 Negroes guilty today of violating bus segregation ordinances here segregation ordinances here and ordered each to pay $55 in fines and court costs.

He said that, if bus segregation were not enforced, there "would be a state of emergency in Birmingham," and added: "I will not be responsible for such a calamity."

Negro attorney Arthur Shores asked for a week to decide whether to appeal.

The Negroes were arrested Dec. 26 when they intentionally violated Birmingham's bus segregation laws in a test case.

The judge said the U.S. Supreme Court had made a mistake in ruling out bus segregation in Montgomery, Ala. The Montgomery decision preceded the mass defiance of Birmingham laws.

"Certainly I am not required to uphold the decisions of any court which are destructive of the Constitution," Judge Parker said. "I had rather wear a ball and chain around my ankle than to wear one around my conscience."

PUBLIC TRANSPORT PARALYZED

Birmingham Names Auditor For Books Of Transit Firm

Advertiser Wed. 4-3-57 Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM, April 2 (AP)—City commissioners today appointed William J. Christian, accountant, to audit records of the Birmingham Transit Co., in efforts to end a strike which has paralyzed public transportation here. P.1

The commission has said it would take no action on a company request for a tax reduction until after an audit. The company pays the city of Birmingham $125,000 a year in taxes.

Birmingham Transit notified city officials that should the bus drivers strike, it would be forced to go out of business.

Don James, company president, said the demands for a pay raise, coupled with a decline in riders and segregation difficulties would make it financially impossible to continue operations.

Commissioners and officials of the bus company were in session most of this afternoon in efforts to solve the dispute.

The drivers struck at midnight Sunday in support of demands for a 46-cent-an-hour wage increase. They now make $1.69 an hour.

The company's final offer of 12 cents an hour was rejected a few hours before the strike.

The Alabama Public Service Commission said the firm lost $25,000 in January and $12,000 in February.

James said a decline in passengers was noticeable following a mass violation of Birmingham's bus segregation ordinance last Dec. 26.

He said some Negroes were afraid to ride the buses, and some white persons had told the company they did not intend to ride the buses.

Violence Fails To Scare Bus Riders in 'Bama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Three leaders in the newly organized Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights reported they received bombing threats by telephone. The leaders participated in the sit-where-you-like bus-riding demonstration.

(By Courier Press Service)

Alabama's bigots have answered "love" with bullets and "peace" with violence as hate mongers stepped up their campaign throughout the South to circumvent what seems to be a snowballing campaign of Negro people to wipe out the remaining vestiges of jim crow in public transport.

In Birmingham, Ala., where members of the White Citizens Council were pressuring public officials to take action against Negroes who are seating themselves in the front of buses, trial was set for 22 people who had been arrested in connection with the defiance of jim-crow law. Date of the trial is Jan. 3.

As a testimony to the tension felt by Birmingham whites, a total of 50 extra cops were put on duty in Birmingham's streets. There are no Negro policemen in Alabama's largest city.

Perhaps the police were needed. They were definitely needed to curb the irresponsible acts of whites who were shooting indiscriminately at buses and bombing homes in the time-honored "traditional" Dixie way of doing things against Negroes.

IN MONTGOMERY, Ala., a sniper shot at a city bus with Rosa Jordan, 22, being wounded in both legs. The bus driver, W. H. Fullilove, told police that his vehicle was shot at twice. After the shootings, the Police Commissioner suspended all night-time operations of the city's bus lines.

In Birmingham, Asa Carter, the White Citizens' bellwether, declared himself in favor of having white supremacists take the law in their own hands by organizing "minutemen" groups of vigilantes to board buses in the event of trouble.

In Camden, S. C., a group of "hooded vigilantes" grabbed Guy Hatchins, 52-year-old high school band leader, and flogged him between 80 and 90 times for having "pro-integration views."

In Tallahassee, Fla., a group of 200 whites including some 40 teenagers, 10 of whom were girls, gathered at the main downtown transfer point of the city's bus lines to prevent the Rev. C. K. Steele and other Negroes from boarding buses. The Negroes did not take up the challenge because as the Rev. Steele pointed out, "I felt we had nothing to gain by precipitating any disturbance . . . we have lost nothing. We will continue to ride the buses, integrated. But we are not interested in putting on a show."

THROUGHOUT OTHER portions of the Florida capital, Negroes rode buses wherever they chose without any trouble. And, Tallahassee's bus company won an injunction against the city when Federal Judge Dozier Devane issued an order and stated that in his opinion, the segregation law is "as dead as a doornail."

In Montgomery, Ala., Negroes received an inkling of the type of whites they were dealing with when three "brave" white men jumped on a 15-year-old girl, Ollie Mae Collins, at a bus stop. The girl suffered minor head injuries.

In Birmingham, police had failed to find the persons who had bombed the home of the Rev. F. N. Shuttleworth, leader of that city's bus protest. Two of the Shuttleworth children and a visitor were hurt and the Bethel Baptist Church, next to the Shuttleworth home, was damaged.

Perhaps the answer was provided in Rev. M. L. King's telegram to Birmingham Negroes in which he reportedly told them to "fill up the jails" if necessary.

Has An Alternative Plan For Bus Riding

There's so much trouble about the segregation business—why couldn't it be arranged for the whites to ride on one bus and all Negroes on the following bus and so on through the days? Many prayers are going up for this trouble to be settled peacefully and save lives—but, so far, nothing has been done.

Kickbacks

Although Supreme Court rulings, i.e. the ban on bus segregation in Montgomery, Ala., have made "every segregation act or law of any state as dead as a doornail," declared U.S. District Judge Dozier DeVane in Tallahassee, Fla. last week "every state has a right to litigate these matters."

Judge DeVane, at that moment, was about as deep in litigation as he could get. Three days before, Tallahassee Negroes broke their own seven-month bus boycott and began a concerted ride-the-bus on a first-come, first-served-basis campaign. Cities Transit Inc. did not object (Negroes made up 60% of its passengers before the boycott). Tallahassee's city commission objected furiously, suspended the company's franchise for not enforcing segregation. The company responded with a plea for an injunction preventing interference with its operations until the court decided whether Florida's bus-segregation law is still valid. Judge DeVane granted the injunction, but it was, as his ruling implied, just the beginning of prolonged litigation in the state courts.

In other places in the South last week, the anti-bus-segregation drive—and reaction to it by white extremists—went far beyond litigation. In Birmingham, Ala. the Rev. Mr. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, 34, antisegregation leader and pastor of a local Negro Baptist church, told the city commission to end bus segregation by the day after Christmas, or "we will take whatever action is necessary." Late Christmas night six or more dynamite sticks blasted the Shuttlesworth house. Miraculously, Shuttlesworth and his family escaped serious hurt. Shuttlesworth next day led some 150 of his followers in broad-scale, nonsegregated bus riding. later was persuaded to call off the drive after 22 Negroes were arrested for Jim Crow violations.

In Montgomery, where Negroes and whites rode together peacefully in the first days after integration, Christmas week brought the first big kickbacks from lunatic-fringe groups. In three nights snipers fired on and struck four buses, wounding a 22-year-old Negro laundry worker in both legs. The city commission, declaring that "an emergency exists," ordered all nighttime bus operations suspended through New Year's Day. None of the snipers was arrested. Said a city detective: "We have no leads—nothing to work on."

Birmingham boils over bus showdown

By SAMUEL F. YETTE
AFRO Staff Correspondent

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Like the giant steel furnances that make Birmingham one of the nation's largest producers of steel, hot racial unrest makes Alabama's biggest city a flaming pot of emotions, litigations and violence.

Thursday's postponement until Feb. 11 of the trial of 22 colored persons charged with violating the city's segregation laws affords no breather here.

Two homes have been blasted with dynamite, transit buses have been fired upon, and warnings of violence have sent others from their homes to seek refuge with neighbors.

AT LEAST 50 extra policemen have been added to cope with violence here where a colored populous of an estimated 240,000 has not a single representative on the police force.

Violence began in high gear here Christmas night when a four-stick dynamite bomb demolished the home of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, leader of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttesworth, his wife and two children, and a visiting deacon miraculously escaped death as the bomb ripped the foundation from under the parsonage while they quietly observed Christmas in the home.

THE SHUTTLESWORTH children, Ruby Fredericks, 11, and Fred Jr., 10 and Deacon Charley Robinson were treated at a local hospital and released.

Hours after the bombing, Public Safety Commissioner R. E. Lindbergh issued a warning that segregation laws would be enforced despite the ultimatum given earlier by Mr. Shuttlesworth that either the laws be abolished or colored riders of transit buses would sit where they pleased anyway.

The bus segregation laws were not abolished, and at least 140 colored persons signed a pledge to ride the buses, integrated but without striking back if attacked.

THUS, 21 persons were arrested the day after Christmas for violating the bias laws, and a 22nd person joined them on Dec. 27, the day Mr. Shuttlesworth announced that a sufficient number had been arrested to test the validity of the laws.

All 22 persons were released on bail immediately after arrest. Bonds were set at $100 each.

On the night of New Year's eve, the home of Otis Flowers was shattered by a bomb, less destructive than the one that destroyed the Shuttlesworth home, but potent enough to injure slightly 12-year-old Arthur Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Flowers.

ARTHUR LEE suffered a cut hand when hit by a piece of flying glass, part of the debris sent sailing by what police estimated to be a dynamite bomb of four or more sticks.

Mr. Flowers, who was not home at the time of the blast, had moved his family into the house only a short time earlier. The house was formerly occupied by a white family, and is located in northeast Birmingham where colored and white residential sections overlap.

A crudely built cross had been burned in front of the home Dec. 23, shortly after the Flowers family occupied the house.

No persons have been arrested in connection with the bombings, but Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindberg promised that every effort would be made to apprehend the guilty parties.

MEANWHILE bomb warnings were received by the Rev. N. C. Smith, secretary of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, and a local white radio announcer, Dave Campbell.

Numerous anonymous telephone warnings to Mr. Smith prompted him to move his wife and two young daughters to live with friends, despite police assurances of "round the clock" protection.

Announcer Campbell conducts a radio participation show, "The People Speak," over WBRC.

The two-and-a-half-hour program "allows people to call in anonymously and say whatever they want to say," Campbell told the AFRO.

He said his listeners reported the bombing of Mr. Shuttlesworth's home on Christmas night, and that started the discussion on racial issues that continued for a week.

DURING THE week of discussion, he said, "Ruby (Mrs. Ruby Hurley of the outlawed NAACP) called in and said she would ask the Federal Communications Commission to cite the station because somebody used n——r on the program."

He said he made it a policy to limit such discussions to one night's program hereafter.

"After Sunday night's show, people accused me of being on both sides of the racial issue," said Campbell, who added, "but that just means I was a good moderator."

Campbell called himself a "reconstructed rebel," having been born in Cleveland, O., raised partly in Canada, and graduated from the University of Alabama in 1939.

"I LIVE here because I like it here—the southern way of life," he said. "It's a matter of people making up their own minds."

He told the AFRO that "I've been pretty impartial right down the line on the radio program, but for all intents and purposes, you would call me a segregationist."

He added "but you can't be all black or all white. To sum it up, it's a case of both sides claiming God, but neither believing in him."

Campbell called the bombing warnings the work of "pranksters," and said that he had made no attempt to protect his wife and three children except to notify the police of the warnings.

Bus Company Asks Suit Be Dropped

BIRMINGHAM, Jan. 29 — Birmingham Transit Co. today asked dismissal of a complaint filed in U.S. District Court by 21 Negroes arrested last moth for violating the city's bus segregation ordinance.

The motion declared that the Negroes, who have not yet been tried, failed to state a claim against the bus company. The Complaint also names as defendants members of the Birmingham City Commission. No motion has been made on their behalf.

The Negroes asked a federal court ruling holding the city's bus segregation ordinance invalid and an injunction prohibiting its enforcement.

The 21 Negroes will face trail Feb. 11 in City Court. They were arrested Dec. 27 when they rode in seats reserved for white persons only.

Unsolved Bombing

World Wed. 1-2-57 P.6

At this writing the Christmas night bombing of the occupied home of a minister who is leading the campaign for open seating on Birmingham buses is unsolved. As fine as our local police investigative system is, such racial bombings are not usually cleared up.

B'ham, Ala.

Though the violent bombing remains unsolved, our city officials never request that the FBI come in and help to seek out the dynamite planters and throwers. The fact that none of the fourteen or more racial bombings over a nine-year period have been solved would seem to point to the need for re-enforced investigative machinery.

Soon after a group of citizens rode the local transit buses in accordance with what they understood to be the now controlling law, City Hall announced that fifty extra police had been added to help enforce "our law". But what about the home of a citizen which has been destroyed by malignant forces?

During the open-seating bus riding, the mass arrests, the competing statements of headline-grabbers, shoved the bombing of the minister's home into the background. This is the more serious incident, and involved the lives of six human beings. Yet it had to take a back seek. Violence is the ugliest form of news. Violence strikes at the foundation of free government.

Proper steps should be taken to modernize and bolster the machinery of crime detection so that bomb violence not only will be solved and curbed, but the guilty punished for their acts. Could not there be established an anti-violence squad with special techniques for apprehending the bomb tossers.

But never lose sight of the fact that it is the duty of City Hall to exert moral and constituted leadership which is so strong, so competent, so determined that the darkness of the night will not be allowed to hide the coward and despeciable dynamite hurlers. City Hall must speak out, and act out until old man mystery yields up the identity of the person or persons who blew up the home of a preacher of the gospel. Let humanity cry out against these hate bombers.

City Hall must never be allowed to dismiss, write off, or forget the Christmas night racial bombing in Collegeville. Birmingham must not be allowed to forget that the dust of the violent dynamite has blurred and sullied its bright and magic name. The hostile bombers, unknown to the general public, know they have committed a brutal and dirty crime. Their infamous crime is the lowest and most contemptible form of cowardice known to civilized man.

Finally, let us make this clear and plain: City Hall must not allow the Christmas night bombing to go down in th ebooks as an unsolved crime. Should not bombings of this kind be made federal crimes? A way must be found to cope with this new lynch-type violence, it seems to us.

"We most heartily commend and applaud our citizens, colored and white, for their fine spirit in riding together in buses yesterday (Dec. 26) without violence. This proves most clearly that men can work out their problem in a spirit of goodwill."

"We conclude that being successful in their effort it is not necessary for our citizens to ride unsegregated further at this time. We respectfully ask that no person ride unsegregated after this notice. Since the issue is one for the courts we now believe that all purposes can be settled in court."

About The Bombing Of Shuttlesworth Home

News P.4 Wed. 1-2-57 B'ham, Ala.

While so much is being said about the bus situation and the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, the bombing on Christmas night of his home should not be ignored. It was definitely the work of a mad man.

If God had not been in his home it could have been one of the worst tragedies our city could not forget.

In the midst of all our present despair, God has created the soul of man not for defeat but for triumph.

Our city should be disturbed and action should not stop until the guilty one is found. Bombing his home was no way to solve the problem. We may take a person's property, money and all the material things that he has, but when we try and take a person's life we have terminated his earthly career and have destroyed the one chance God has given him. Only God can create life and man has no right to take it.

For on Christmas night of 1956 the words "fear not" were in his home. The Prince of Peace is our only hope for peace.

We should decide within ourselves that a race that is willing to die for its country should be given the opportunity to live for its country.

Disorderly Conduct Charges Against Baldwin Nolle Prossed

World Wed. 2-27-57

B'ham, Ala.

Disorderly conduct charges against Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Baldwin growing out their sitting in the general waiting room at the Birmingham Terminal Station were not prossed by City Judge Ralph E. Parker here Monday, Feb. 25 on recommendation of the City's Legal Department.

From the bench judge Parker said the evidence indicates "there was no disorderly conduct" but then added that the cases were not prosse for "cogent reason".

The City Legal Department made its recommendation in writing to drop the cases.

Despite judge Parker's observation that the cases were ended and any additional comment would be "superfluous" defense lawyers Demetrius C. Newton and Oscar W. Adams, Jr. insisted on placing in the records statements obviously intended to build predicates for segregation waiting room laws.

Newton argued that the reputations of the Baldwins had been soiled by the arrests and their standing in the community damaged. Adams raised the question of whether the city's move in wiping out the cases meant no more enforcement of the segregation laws at Terminal Station.

Judge Parker, after listening to the arguments of the two defense lawyers without comment, told Mr. Baldwin that "I have a surprise for you."

"You are under arrest for parking in a prohibited zone", Judge Parker told Baldwin, "you'll have to see Judge Hall", he added.

Atty. Newton said that Baldwin was driving a vehicle he uses as a truck in his furniture business and that he parked in a loading zone. He added that Baldwin pleaded not guilty to traffic charges with the case set for hearing Monday, March 4.

U.S. Judge Overrules Motion To Dismiss Suit On Bus Laws

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 2-22-57

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 21 (AP)—A federal judge today overruled a motion by city commissioners seeking dismissal of a complaint against Birmingham bus segregation ordinances.

Judge H. Hobart Grooms emphasized that the U. S. District Court would not be able to hear further action on the complaint until sometime in May. He said this would give city courts time to rule on misdemeanor charges against 21 Negroes who signed the complaint.

The Negroes are charged with violating the city bus segregation ordinances in open defiance last December.

Grooms dismissed the Birmingham Transit Co. as defendant in the action because "there are no averments in the complaint showing that the transit company conspired to enforce the laws."

The 21 Negroes asked that the city's bus segregation laws be declared unconstitutional, and that the city be enjoined from enforcing them.

City commissioners asked that the complaint be dismissed because the Negroes have not been tried on the charges of violating the segregation ordinances.

Grooms said that recorders court judges "are bound by the same oath I am," and have equal power to decide constitutional questions.

The city was given 30 days to file a formal answer to the ruling, and Negro Atty. Arthur Shores was allowed 10 days to amend his complaint in reference to the transit company.

City Atty. J. H. Willis had asked Grooms to dismiss the complaint on the grounds that "general procedures" would direct the case from recorders court through the state courts, and then to the U. S. Supreme Court.

CITY IS OVERRULED ON NEGROES' SUIT

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn.

Judge Refuses To Dismiss Bus Segregation Case

Fri. 2-22-57

BIRMINGHAM, Feb. 21. — (AP)—A Federal judge Thursday overruled a motion by city commissioners seeking dismissal of a complaint against Birmingham bus segregation ordinances.

p. 8

Judge H. Hobart Grooms emphasized the United States District Court would not be able to hear further action on the complaint until May. He said this would give city courts time to rule on misdemeanor charges against 21 Negroes who signed the complaint.

The Negroes are charged with violating the city bus segregation ordinances last December.

Judge Grooms dismissed the Birmingham Transit Co. as defendant in the action because "there are no averments in the complaint showing that the transit company conspired to enforce the laws."

The 21 Negroes asked that the city's bus segregation laws be declared unconstitutional, and that the city be enjoined from enforcing them.

City commissioners asked that the complaint be dismissed because the Negroes have not been tried on the charges of violating the segregation ordinances.

Our Spiritual Values, Individual Freedoms Must Be Protected

Montgomery, Ala.

THE keynote speech at the recent annual meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers in New York was delivered by ola G. Parker, president of the association and an outstanding American business man. His topic was New Dimensions For America, and he told about the kind of America we all hope to hope to keep and keep and to build to bless coming generations.

JONES

Mr. Parker's address is a profound appeal to the people of the United States to stand up and be counted, and not let their spiritual values and their individual freedoms be gradually stolen by selfish politicians, government officials and bureaus. During the last quarter of a century citizens of the United States have seen their individual freedoms gradually whittled down by countless federal agencies and the federal courts, particularly the Supreme Court at Washington. Our people have not yet surrendered many of their spiritual values.

Today, in the Supreme Court building at Washington, sit nine men, not elected by the people and not responsible to them. The rulings and decisions of this court, often made by a majority vote of its members, are held to be the supreme law of the land. They set aside acts of the elected representatives of the people in Congress and in the several state legislatures. These nine men set themselves above all the law-making bodies in the land and above the President of the United States. The government planned and built by our Revolutionary forefathers no longer exists.

Here are some thoughts from the loyal heart and wise mind of this great American business man, one interested in building a strong and happy America, one who wants to see his people keep their ancient spiritual values and to ever hold and possess their individual freedoms.

DISCUSSING his topic, Mr. Parker said: "First, we must make up our minds that the structure we hope to build is one in which individuals will be able to live their own lives, plan their own careers, and direct their own destinies, and not one in which these matters will be determined for them by an official in some government bureau Second, we must face the fact that architectural absurdities, unsound construction, and rotten timbers have found their way into our framework and these must be eliminated if our structure is to be sound. Third, we must replace these weak elements with beams and joists and rafters which are in keeping with our traditions and which will support our design and purpose for the future."

Speaking of the society we have always had in America, Mr. Parker said: "Over the years, America's capitalistic society has an unequalled record to show in this respect. Therefore, I wonder what is meant by such expressions as 'enlightened capitalism.' To the extent phrases like this mask a retreat from the ancient virtues of self-reliance, self-determination, and self-responsibility, I, for one, cannot go along with them. America was conceived of as a land in which the individual would be paramount. No matter how productive we become; no matter how high we are able to lift ourselves in a material way; no matter how clever the ideas advanced by our scientists, our inventors and our social thinkers; we can never afford to lose sight of the fact that individual liberty and responsibility are the bedrock on which the American system is built. If what we call material or social progress is achieved at the price of a retreat from freedom—no matter how this retreat is disguised, it is no progress at all."

The speaker, in discussing America's future, suggested it would be wise "to get out and dust off the blueprint the Founding Fathers left us" and "see how closely we are sticking to the structure of freedom they laid down for us, which they hoped to see endure for all time." Continuing, he said:

"First of all, they left us a Constitution which was designed specificaly to set limits to the authority of the federal government. But we seem to forget that most of the great philosophers of history have warned that the greatest enemy of freedom is government—big and growing government. And so today the Constitution is cited more in support of further extensions of federal authority into new areas than it is to prevent the federal government from doing what it is not empowered to do. We hear so much about the Fifth Amendment, we perhaps forget there is a Ninth Amendment which reads: 'The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people'—and a Tenth Amendment which says: 'The powers not delegated to the United States by this Constitution, nor prohibited to it by the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.'"

TURNING to a discusison of some of the weaknesses in our government, Mr. Parker said: "The third great weakness in our structure is the mushroom growth of power and authority — the steady drift of functions and responsibilities to Washington . . . The federal government is draining so much of the available tax money out of the states that there isn't enough left to enable the separate states, communities and the individuals in the first place. If we can keep more of this money at home, we can keep more of our government functions at home—where we can rule them instead of having them rule us." Continuing, Mr. Parker said:

"The world looks to us for guidance, particularly guidance in the path of freedom. The world will continue to look to us, despite whatever temporary differences may now exist between ourselves and some of our allies, because it knows the realms we seek to conquer, do not lie across the oceans, nor to the north or to the south. They lie in the vast womb of nature which holds endless secrets if we can but discover them. They lie in the human mind and human spirit which, as we know, is capable of God-like imagination, God-like daring and God-like accomplishment if it but has the freedom to open and to expand, and to set out into the many quests into the unknown Our ambition is not to build an empire, but to build a clean, decent world in which free people can seek the goals they have set for themselves and can sleep at night without fearing the boot on the stair and the knock on the door"

Mr Parker's address should be read by all Americans who love their country, who wish to see it stand as a land of individual freedoms, a land where spiritual values always tower over and above material gains, and a land where the individual citizen can work out his own destiny, and not be a pawn in the hands of the bureaucrats and functionaries of the government at Washington.

VIOLENCE -HURLING SPARKPLUGS

4 Youngsters Admit Hurling Sparkplugs At Local Bus

Advertiser Sun. 1-6-56

Montgomery, Ala.

Four white youths ranging in age from 11 to 15 were picked up by police yesterday and two of them admitted bombarding a Cleveland avenue bus with discarded sparkplugs. P. 1

It was the sixth attack on city buses reported since integration went into effect Dec. 21. However, police believe the weapon used in yesterday's attack was a slingshot, not firearms as in five previous ambushes.

The attack took place in the 800 block of Sayre street at mid-morning. None of the three Negro passengers was reported injured. They got off and did not reboard the bus after the shelling.

The youngsters were released to their parents and a report was filed with juvenile authorities, Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said. He said further action would be up to the juvenile court judge.

TAKEN INTO CUSTODY

The four boys were taken into custody by Detectives R. F. Moulton and W. H. Simpler as the boys strolled away from the scene. They made no attempt to escape, detectives said.

Bus driver E. E. Stubblefield said a window was struck twice but not pierced. The sparkplugs struck the center section on the right side.

Yesterday's attack was the first to occur in daylight. Four previous ambushes took place in the early evening, and the fifth happened in pre-dawn darkness. Police have theorized that the earlier attacks were the work of adults since all involved firearms.

One of the snipings wounded a Negro laundry worker, Mrs. Rosa Jordan, who is reported in fair condition at Oak Street Hospital. She was shot in both legs but attending doctors have not removed the bullet because of her pregnant condition.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 5 (AP)—Four white boys were picked up by police Saturday and two admitted shelling a recently integrated bus with discarded sparkplugs, police said Saturday.

It was the sixth reported attack on city buses since they were opened to mixed seating under a federal court order Dec. 21.

Capt. E. P. Brown said one of the boys had a sling shot and probably used it in shooting sparkplugs at the bus. Only two of the youths admitted taking part in the incident.

Previous attacks on buses were made with guns or pistols.

Brown said the boys will be released to their parents and a report made to juvenile authorities.

Three Negro passengers were riding the bus when the attack was made Saturday. E. E. Stubblefield, the driver, said they left the vehicle and didn't return.

This was the first act of bus vandalism in a white neighborhood after four sniping incidents in Negro sections, all of them at night or before dawn.

The city commission, at a special meeting during the holidays, halted all night bus runs until Jan. 1, then extended the curfew through Jan. 8 to cope with continuing disorders.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 5 (AP)—An integrated city bus was struck by two missiles Saturday and police said four teen-agers admitted the attack.

Police Capt. E. P. Brown said the boys, ranging in age from 11 to 15, threw two sparkplugs which struck the bus as it passed through a white residential section. The bus was only slightly damaged.

Brown said the driver reported the incident and identified the teen-agers, who were arrested minutes after the incident.

Five buses have been struck by gunfire since the U.S. Supreme Court outlawed segregated seating two weeks ago. A Negro woman was hit in the legs by a pistol bullet.

The incident broke a calm which had settled over the integration battlegrounds of the South as Negro and white leaders appeared content to let the courts settle their racial troubles. No racial violences was reported in the South yesterday.

Attorney's Claim Controversy Gone

BY JIM STRICKLAND

A legal attack on waiting room segregation at Terminal Station will be either continued for trial or dismissed Monday by U. S. District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne.

Judge Lynne yesterday morning heard oral arguments on motions filed by the City of Birmingham, Birmingham Terminal Co. and Alabama Public Service Commission asking that the complaint against them be dismissed.

Atty. Joe F. Johnston, representing the terminal company, said the "sole actual controversy—if any—which exists in this case has now been terminated."

He said he referred to the dropping of charges against Carl L. and Alexinia Baldwin, who were arrested by Birmingham police in December while they were sitting in an "Interstate and White Passengers" waiting room at the station. The charges were dismissed Monday in Recorders Court.

The Negro couple, through Attys. Oscar W. Adams Jr. and Demetrius C. Newton, filed their complaint in federal court Jan. 25.

Johnston called the complaint nothing "but an academic attempt" to get the court to rule on constitutionality of the state law concerning waiting rooms.

"It is beyond the scope of the federal jurisdiction to render a decree on a fundamental abstraction," he said.

Section 186, Title 48 of the Code of Alabama—the law under fire in this complaint—applies to railroads and not individuals, the attorney said, and was not applicable, therefore to the Baldwins.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Gordon, speaking for the APSC, agreed with Johnston's theories, adding that the Negro couple, being interstate passengers (they had tickets for Milwaukee) could not test a statute which was applicable only to intrastate passengers.

Birmingham City Atty. J. H. Willis called the incident an "isolated arrest" and said there was "no threat of a continuance of arrests."

"There's no actual controversy," he said.

Adams said before the Interstate Commerce Commission ruled out segregation of interstate passengers the APSC and the city "sought to maintain segregation by requiring separate waiting rooms."

Since the ruling signs have been posted for "Interstate and White Passengers," and for "Interstate and Colored" passengers, he said.

The city still is "seeking to maintain a custom, policy and usage of segregation," he said.

The action of the police officer in arresting the Negro couple "did not allow the plaintiffs to use one of the facilities included in their contract (ticket)," Adams said.

Newton said the federal suit was "the only adequate remedy for their treatment in this matter."

The arguments were heard—starting at 10 a.m.—during a day-long motion docket before Judge Lynne.

Another motion in the case—filed Thursday—was not considered by Judge Lynne. The Negro couple in this motion asked the court to require APCS to produce all orders made by them requiring or inviting segregation in Alabama railroad stations.

The judge said he was "not going to require any production of documents until I decide if there is a valid complaint."

Move to Silence Rev. M. L. King Gains Momentum in Alabama

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-5-57 p.3

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Symbol of the bus boycott victory in Montgomery, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. has become the main target of Alabama's white supremacists.

The Baptist minister, whose leadership sparked the victory of Montgomery's 40,000 Negroes over segregated bus seating, has been accused of inciting to riot by State Senator Sam Englehart, executive secretary of the Alabama Association of White Citizens Councils, and C. C. (Jack) Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission.

The furore against King arose after the pastor had sent a telegram which purportedly urged Birmingham's Negroes to ride local buses on an unsegregated basis.

OWEN, AFTER announcing that he was probing into the "legal aspects" of the Rev. King's wire, stated that he is going to recommend to Atty. Gen. John Patterson that action be brought against the minister if said telegram can be proven a violation of the state law against breach of the peace.

Englehart flatly declared that the King wire violated the law.

He further announced that a group of Birmingham citizens "will bring action against King."

The King wire came at a time when Birmingham Negroes were staging a mass defiance against segregated buses by riding wherever they pleased. A total of 22 were arrested in last week's wave of "defiant" acts.

Montgomerys New Goals

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

The decision of colored Montgomery not to relax in its drive for first-class citizenship is a wise one.

With victory over bus discrimination achieved, Montgomery's brilliant young leader, the Rev. M. L. King Jr., has not delayed in announcing integration of schools and public recreation facilities as next on the schedule.

It was to be expected that 50,000 human beings, who soberly led and having found new and unexpected strength in unity, would continue to flex their muscles.

Sat 1-5-57

CERTAINLY the goals outlined by Dr. King are most reasonable, considering the fact that the United States Supreme Court has already conveniently placed them within reaching distance.

P. 4

Colored Montgomery comprises one-third of the city's population.

Yet the City Commission, which during the bus protest so loudly swore allegiance to the dead "separate but equal" principle, has not seen fit to provide a single park for the use of this large segment of the city's population.

Unlike the steps necessary in ending bus segregation, no three-judge Federal court is necessary to determine the issue.

That matter has already been resolved by the nation's highest court in three pointed decisions handed down on Nov. 7, 1955.

All of them firmly held that no state nor city may deny persons the use of public parks and other recreation facilities because of their color.

Those decisions are certainly applicable to Montgomery and the Federal District judge at Montgomery has no choice but to so rule when the issue is properly brought before him.

THE SCHOOL decision even predates the park rulings.

Although it has had more than two years in which to devise plans to end segregation, Montgomery's school board has preferred to exercise deliberate delay, rather than deliberate speed in bringing the operation of the city's schools in compliance with the law.

We believe with Dr. King that two years is long enough, not only for Montgomery but for all other communities where defiance, delay and evasion have become the accepted policy.

The situation now demands forthright action.

Montgomery which has set the pace on lowering racial bars on city buses, can perform a still more useful service in ending discrimination in these other fields.

Argue King appeal in Ala. high court

Afro-American Sat. 1-26-57 Baltimore, Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The Alabama State Court of Appeals, Thursday, heard oral arguments on the appeal of the Rev. Martin Luther King's conviction of violating the state's anti-boycott laws, and after hearing attorneys for both sides argue the question fully, took the case under advisement.

The Rev. Fred D. Gray, attorney for the Montgomery Improvement Association, which is headed by the Rev. Mr. King, presented the oral arguments on the merits of the case. Also speaking in the appellant's behalf was Peter Hall, Birmingham attorney.

The state was represented by Assistant Solicitor Smith and Assistant Atty. Gen. Young, who argued on a technicality that the appeal be dismissed forthright, because briefs in behalf of the appellant were not filed in time for the court's deadline.

THE MOTION for dismissal, however, in this pilot case was not granted by the court.

The Rev. Mr. King was the only person among 90 bus boycott leaders indicted by a grand jury. Convicted last spring of the charge of violating the state law, he was fined $500 and costs.

Segregation proponents had hoped that the case would be perfunctorily dismissed and that the Rev. Mr. King's fine would be imposed and all legal routes blocked for further litigation in the case.

No date has been set for the announcement of the decision of the Appeals Court.

Incompetent, Faithless Reporting

Advertiser P. 4-A

VERY few Time magazine reporters are in Hollywood writing movie scripts. This not because they aren't accomplished fiction writers. Verily they are. It is not because Hollywood would pay them less, but because Henry Luce pays them more.

Too, there is a pronounced trend to factual documentary films and realism in Hollywood, and this, of course, would inhibit the Time fictioneer. Not in Hollywood, but in Time does one encounter the true Hollywood ending these days.

Now last week, as The Advertiser revealed Sunday, Dr. M. L. King was beatified, called "saint" and sped on his way to his place in The Ages in the company of St. Francis of Assisi by an Emory University divine. And this week Dr. King is upon the front cover of Time.

So far as we can recall, Dr. King—out of all of Alabama's renowned soldiers, sailors, scientists, physicians, authors, etc. — is the second Alabamian (Tallulah Bankhead) to achieve this distinction.

The long article on Dr. King was done after exhaustive research by a Time staff member from the Atlanta bureau who has spent much time in Montgomery. He is a competent and honest reporter. The incompetence and dishonesty of the Time reporting is undoubtedly traceable to the Time rewrite men in New York, the script writers aforementioned.

The essence of the Time story is of how Dr. King practiced non-violence and thereby led a movement which achieved integration.

THE Time dullards swallowed the preposterous comparison of the passive resistance of the 350,000,000 inhabitants of India to a corporal's guard of Englishmen to Montgomery's Negro minority.

In India the oppressed Indians were a vast majority. In Montgomery it is the whites, not Negroes, who are in the majority and command the constabulary, soldiery and arsenals. Such passive resistance as there has been in Montgomery has been practiced by the dominant white majority.

Such bombing violence as occurred was undertaken by a tiny element scorned by the white community. The violence was overwhelmingly disfavored by the whites. And a white City Commission, a white chief of police and white policemen moved decisively to practice non-violence by arresting and arraigning those it accused of the bombings.

Nowhere in Time's lengthy account does it mention the police action in the bombings. That is the most conspicuous act of non-violence in the history of the bus boycott.

BUT the true measure of the faithlessness and incompetence of this Time story is its repeated assertion that Montgomery buses are now "peacefully integrated."

As Time's Atlanta man knows from his trips here, Montgomery buses are not integrated.

For the most part, the seating arrangement, by choice of both races, is just as it was a year ago.

Nixon, Rev. King set Dixie meeting

ACCRA, Gold Coast — U.S. Vice President Richard Nixon, here Tuesday, invited the Rev. Martin Luther King, Montgomery, Ala., leader of the bus desegregation protest movement in the United States, to talk with him in Washington about the Rev. Mr. King's proposal that he (Nixon) visit the South to study race problems.

The Rev. Mr. King made the proposal at the meeting of the Southern Leadership Conference, attended by some 60 pastors and civic leaders of the South, in Birmingham, Ala.

This was the second part of the Rev. Mr. King's urgent message to President Dwight Eisenhower, asking that the nation's chief executive speak out in a nationally televised and radio program against the mob violence, shootings and bombings attending efforts at desegregation of schools and buses.

THE REQUEST of the Rev. Mr. King has been voiced by numbers of individuals and organizations, including the National Newspaper Publishers Association, since the wave of violence in Montgomery, Birmingham, Tallahassee, Fla., and Miami reached high proportions after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled last December that segregation in intrastate travel was unconstitutional.

Afro-American

Prior to that time, violence had been directed against colored students and parents who enrolled in formerly all-white schools in Clinton, Tenn., Sturgis, Ky., and several Texas towns.

Mr. King had asked Mr. Eisenhower if he felt he could not speak out against the violence rife in the South, to have Mr. Nixon, who had served as Mr. Eisenhower's "trouble-shooter" in Hungary, to tour the South's troubled spots, and do what he could to ameliorate racial tension in those areas.

MR. NIXON is representing Mr. Eisenhower at the celebration of the Gold Coast's independence, climaxed Wednesday when the newest African republic gained its freedom from Great Britain and assumed the name of Ghana.

The Rev. Mr. King was an especially invited guest at the independence festivities by Premier Nkrumah of Ghana.

The invitation of Mr. Nixon was extended to the Rev. Mr. King when the two American leaders met on the campus of the Gold Coast College, this week.

Montgomery Cops Crack Down On Negroes Who Rap Bombings

Courier Sat. 2-9-57 Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 6

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Montgomery police have finally hit upon an "answer" to the latest series of bombing incidents by unleashing a campaign of arrest and intimidation against those Negroes who dare to speak out against the terror.

• Although local law enforcement officials have made several arrests in the bombings, which have cost Negro citizens at least $1,000,000 in damaged property, they also have been quick to put the "arm" on "disorderly" Negroes.

First to feel the effects of the new drive were Samuel Wallace, 26, and Veurlie Wilkins, 28, who were "apprehended" at the scene of the attempted bombing of Rev. Martin Luther King's home last week.

EXPLAINING THE ARRESTS, Police Chief G. U. Ruppenthal claimed that Wilkins had been "trying to incite a riot." The chief accused Wilkins of having talked in a loud voice to onlookers while claiming that the police department was not doing anything about solving the recent attacks made on Negroes riding city buses and the current wave of bombings.

• Commented Rev. King, "Our oppressors control the police, the National Guard even, and if they send the Federal Government in here, that will be white folks, too." Despite the fact that Montgomery has become a "dangerous city to live in," Rev. King asserted that Negroes must continue to follow the path of nonviolence.

Although Alabama, Florida and Georgia Negro leaders, led by Rev. King, have appealed to President Eisenhower to say something in public on the situation, Montgomery city officials have steadfastly refused any offers of outside assistance to curb the anti-Negro incidents.

Mayor W. A. Caleb has standing a $2,000 reward for information about anyone who has thrown "any bombs," and Governor James E. Folsom has also posted a similar reward.

An Answer to Terror?— Vurlie Wilkins made the mistake of speaking his mind aboupt the bombings in Montgomery, Ala., of Negro homes and churches. Result? Mr. Wilkins is hustled off to the "stony lonesome" by Detective Lieut. E. Y. Lacy (with cigarette) and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal (behind Lacy). Wilkins was accused of inciting to riot.

Business As Usual

[illegible] to say that the City Commission's action yesterday, restoring normal bus service, was timely and will be well received. The service during the emergency was better than nothing, but was intolerable as a regular thing. Buses were minutes apart, and knocking off for the day around sundown, no Sunday service to carry the faithful to worship or picnic parties to Oak Park — these have been among the inconveniences.

Montgomery Ala.

The restoration of service will not be hailed as a triumph for integration, except perhaps by wishful-thinking yankee scribes and such like. Montgomery still has de facto racial separation on buses, not 100% but for the most part, by an unwritten, unspoken mutual understanding. Members of the two races still occupy different parts of the bus, in general. One regular patron said yesterday that this voluntary apartness seems to be gaining, that there are fewer variations of the pattern than in the days right after the Supreme Court decision. He said he had not observed a single instance of sharing the same seat.

Ala. 2-20-59

The condition that has developed is a tribute to common sense on both sides, and evidence of an underlying good will that the demagogues and agitators have not been able to entirely eradicate. Negro passengers seem aware that it may be of benefit all around to voluntarily waive, rather than make a display of, what is now a legal right. White passengers know that acquiescing in what, for them, has been an awkward and unaccustomed situation, does not imply approval of that situation or any abatement of their traditional views.

It is to be devoutly hoped that such attitudes, and not the chip-on-shoulder kind, will continue to prevail on both sides and that our sorely tried and troubled bus system is now back on an even keel.

What is needed is some hard facts. The Negro needs to understand that for every point he is gaining in one direction he is losing a yard in another. The Negroes are not going to accept the dictum of his blatant leaders. The majority of the whites understand well the only way to preserve their racial integrity is through segregation. Our racial heritage is God-given. We have a right and duty to protect it, not through hate or prejudice, but a belief in God and His wisdom instead of psychological and sociological ideology.

The white man has had something tangible to offer the Negro and did—a civilization, education and a better way of life. Under white leadership the Negro has made wonderful progress.

Could he have done so if the whites hated him as he is being taught to believe? What does these modern Moses have to offer other than lip service.

Rev. King remarked that Montgomery was not a safe place to live now. It was until he became over-ambitious. An empty wagon rattles loud but leaves no cargo. How long will the Negroes follow one? This firstclass citizenship he dreams of may carry a few privileges but it also carries its burdens and obligations. Up to now he has gotten his schools, health, recreation and relief programs for about 15¢ on the dollar. Now he is going to be called on for the other 85¢.

Riding is cheap in the other fellow's car, but when you buy one you find out what it costs to ride. The average Negro is going to find out he has bought a pig in the poke. Whites have been willing to pay for their segregation, but don't feel they owe anything more now.

It seems that some of the ambitious Negro leaders would be a Moses to their people and lead them out of this land of persecution (where some people have to work and won't be forced to mix) into a land where milk and honey flow and they can integrate, rally and praise their hero. You needn't worry about any Herod stopping you.

I never heard of Booker T. Washington and Dr. Carver complaining about their rights and wanting integration. They were too busy trying to help their race and build good will for all to engage in petty griefs and stirring up strife. They were great and humble men loved and respected by all. Too bad we don't have more like them.

The NAACP Relishes Bombs

THE element in Montgomery that thinks violence is an effective instrument against race mixing is small and simple-minded.

Happily and plainly, the overwhelming mass of Montgomery citizens recognizes that a city where the night air resounds with dynamite blasts is a sick city. They do not want a sick city. Therefore, they applaud the City Commission for its stout stand.

But there is an element in this amiable old city that not only does not shrink from heaving dynamite, but actually is simple-minded enough to think violence deters race mixing.

Quite the opposite is the case. Violence such as has been committed is of immense value to the NAACP.

THAT this is true is to be seen in the fact that many Montgomerians did, and do, believe that Negroes tossed the dynamite that their agencies and leaders might win sympathy in the North and stimulate contributions.

When a Negro church in Montgomery goes up in chunks and splinters, what happens?

The Montgomery bomb is a headline from coast to coast.

The network slobs wail as though the Russians had dropped a hell bomb fair upon the Capitol dome.

Excited, misled people in other states write to ask their daughters at Maxwell and Gunter if they hadn't better evacuate the dangerous city, or at the least send the children away from the blitz.

Those who think of cities in which to locate distribution offices or industry think of bombs. Montgomery commences to fill the vacuum in the national mind left by the cleansing of Phenix City. A rag-picking slut magazine like Ken writes of 600 card-carrying prostitutes in Montgomery and the country is ready to gulp it.

A Negro church blows up and the dangerous civil rights legislation pending in Congress, with only a weakened Southern filibuster between it and enactment, is advanced. A bomb in Montgomery is worth 50 NAACP witnesses.

As for the destroyed Negro church, it will reappear in an improved condition. The bomb that wrecks it also raises the money in the North to build two new churches.

Than a bomb nothing is more against the segregation pattern. The NAACP loves Montgomery bombs. For the NAACP, Montgomery bombs are the sinews of war.

MOST Montgomerians recognize this.

But there is a blockhead element that thinks bombs displease the NAACP.

Like all extremists, they are bigots. Without shame or embarrassment, they make their own view of the situation the qualifying yardstick of whether one is for or against race mixing.

If you do not believe as they believe, then you are an NAACP tool. They are as tiresome and simple as religious bigots who hold you are hell bound if you do not embrace their faith.

THIS breed even assails the City Commission for being Negro coddlers because it has set itself against allowing Montgomery to become a smoking dynamite heap.

This is remarkable. Every member of the commission is a member of the White Citizens Council. Every commissioner is an unbending believer in segregation. All, and particularly Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, have been poked, mauled and caricatured by NAACP dervishes, called "racists" by Northern reporters, and prayed for by the Rev. Dr. King. They are thus certified by the authorities!

Yet there is an element in town that has concluded that the commissioners are "after the Negro vote" (the one thing that no Montgomery politician would be caught dead with in Harlem). This is the same mentality that does not see that a Montgomery bomb is the most favored weapon in the NAACP arsenal.

African Message from Montgomery

Courier Sat. 2-9-57
Pittsburgh Pa. P.9

Much to the annoyance and distress of the South African Negrophobes, the downtrodden blacks of the subcontinent have got the boycott message from Montgomery, Ala.; are staying off the "colored" buses in droves, and are marching daily from two to ten miles to work.

The boycott, centered around Johannesburg, "The City of Gold," and Pretoria, the administrative capital, is not caused by revulsion against the jim-crow indignities which sparked the Montgomery action (since the South African buses are "colored" and "white") but rather because of a fare boost of a penny a ride or 56 cents per month.

This seems a small sum, but the average African wage is only $35 monthly, from the segregated compounds where black workers live to the cities where they toil but cannot live.

The Boer officials are alarmed because 60,000 blacks have now joined the boycott, and one immediate result has been an industrial slowdown which is cutting production, while another has been the emergence of a new solidarity between rival tribes and the enlistment of the Cape colored or mulattoes.

The Boer officials have threatened reprisals such as dismissals or loss of wages for time lost walking to work, but since the expansion of retail business is largely dependent upon black purchasing power, these threats are not taken seriously.

Another development which is worrying the white supremacy officials is the widespread display in black homes and elsewhere of pictures of Egypt's President Nasser who is regarded as the leading champion of African nationalism.

We just thought you'd like to know how the message from Montgomery has stirred up the militant blacks of South Africa so that they have been boycotting buses since Jan. 7, 1957.

Dr. King Enters Hagiology Of Methodist Church

Advertiser P.2-b

A BAPTIST, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, has attained sainthood in a Methodist publication. This seems notable for at least two reasons, and maybe more.

Sun. 2-10-57

The publication is Adult Student, "a periodical prepared by the General Board of Education of the Methodist Church through the Editorial Division and published monthly by the Methodist Publishing House, 810 Broadway, Nashville 2, Tenn."

Montgomery, Ala.

The hagiographer (one who writes of the lives of saints) who calls Dr. King "saint" is a professor of Christian doctrine at Candler School of Theology, Emory University—Claude Thompson.

In a Sunday school lesson guide, Prof. Thompson writes:

". . . The Kingdom was set into history with a cross. It will not be extended without pain. . . This is not reserved for exceptional saints like. . . Martin Luther King. . . It must come home to every Sunday school student and teacher.

WEBSTER:

SAINT. 1. A holy or godly person; esp., one regenerated and sanctified or undergoing sanctification. 2. One of the beatified souls. 3. Eccl. One recognized or acknowledged as having achieved sanctification; esp., such a one who is canonized by the church.

WE ARE not aware of the evaluation process employed by Theologian Thompson in sainting Dr. King. Whether the "vision" recently described by Dr. King as having come to him was the clinching qualification is undisclosed. But perhaps so inasmuch as Dr. King's coadjutor, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, an equally commanding figure in the Negro leadership here, is not certified a saint by Prof. Thompson.

IT HAS often seemed to us that Dr. King is as little known in Montgomery as he is in the North, where citizens must rely upon a hysterical Harriet Beecher Stowe press that recklessly and incompetently makes the infinitely complex as simple as falling off a log.

The Eliza-on-the-ice newspapers of the North have already consigned Dr. King to The Ages in a seat on the same row with A. Lincoln.

They chatter about the triumph of the bus boycott. They are such superficial, unstable reporters that they have never stopped to consider a mountain of a fact, which is to say that the boycott never seated one single colored passenger by one single white passenger. Not one.

In that single respect, the boycott accomplished nothing but a glowering division between the white and colored communities in Montgomery and a killing drain on the Chicago treasury of the bus line.

The whites had the buses to themselves, colored citizens had their forms of transportation, and the boycott could have gone on for years without achieving a single incident of mixed seating.

By last summer whites had even ceased to discuss the boycott; it was out of sight and out of mind.

This is not to deal with the possibility that the boycott served the aspiration of colored leaders in indirect ways—only that the boycott achieved not one of its stated goals.

WHAT the Northern press overlooks is that it was not the boycott, but the United States Supreme Court that made the difference. The boycott ended with the court order. And the court order could have been obtained without the hardship of the boycott to colored citizens and the bus line.

The boycott was a remarkable demonstration, but it did not accomplish its stated goals. And today, even with the court order, there is generally a state of voluntary apartness on buses.

AS FOR Montgomerians, few, very few, have even seen Dr. King. He is little understood. He is a brave, he is learned, he is a visionary with a remarkable lack of grasp of Montgomery circumstances and attitudes. The Rev. Abernathy and other colored leaders understand whites much better than Dr. King.

Many Montgomerians over-simplify what exists here. They like to believe that if Dr. King had not assumed leadership, there would be no struggle. The truth is, of course, had Dr. King not emerged as leader, any of 25 others would have, as everywhere else. What Montgomery faces is a phase of a long historical process that commenced in 1865 and will be going on years from now.

NEGRO leadership in the South has come to think that what it seeks can be obtained by policies of governments and decrees of courts. It can't, of course. Economic importance alone is worth more than all the court decrees, and recognition won by that means does not have to be policed.

Rash Northern zealots suppose that there is going to be some breakthrough that will uncork a tidy Hollywood ending. A lot of Southerners say that nothing will ever change, and a few of these believe it.

What seems to be happening is that the loud, headlong battering on the structure has unscrambled the groups and arrayed them into opposing, hostile groups. A condition of stalemate and checkmate, shifting and changing in their forms, is apparently developing.

More and more it seems to us that nothing much is going to change soon.

The reason for this is that you are dealing primarily with attitudes and convictions. One way or the other, the essential apartness of the races will endure in the South, as it does in the North.

The South Does Not Exist Politically

Advertiser P. 4-a
Union Springs Herald

ALTHOUGH the South and the Democratic Party has furnished this nation with many of its statesmen and national leaders, many of our problems today arise because of the South's one-party system. Our white Democratic primary dates back to Civil War days when the Democratic Party offered this section its only hope of maintaining its status-quo. Our one-party system is so deeply inbred in many Southerners that even today they are unable to think clearly about a two-party system in Alabama.

The South today is facing civil strife because of the Supreme Court's decision on segregation, and both the Democratic and Republican parties carried strong civil rights planks in their platforms. Regardless of how you feel about segregation, here are the facts of life:

The Republican platform writers know that they are going to lose the Southern states, so they try to write a civil rights plank which will capture the fringe votes around Chicago and New York to offset the South's electoral votes. When the Democrats meet to draw up a platform they know that they already have the Southern states in the bag, so they try to write a little stronger civil rights plank to capture the fringe vote and take it away from the Republicans.

THE net results are that this leaves the 13 Southern states without a choice, politicaly speaking. They have no prestige at the Democratic Convention and none whatever in the Republican Convention. Although these 13 states could swing the balance of power, and be the difference between victory and defeat, they are a political nonenity.

The South will continue to be ignored until it wakes up to the fact that a two-party system is necessary today to maintain its status-quo. The Southern white man is being enslaved because he has lost his political potency.

If Alabama had a two-party system which would send Alabama men to both conventions, our delegates to the Democratic convention could say in effect to the platform writers that if they would give them a civil rights plank which appealed to the South they could try to carry Alabama for the Democrats. Our Republican delegates would make the same plea. As soon as both parties were convinced that the South was no longer a one-party "in the bag" section, you would see many of the South's problems fading into the background.

TO REALLY have a two-party system, Alabama must follow the rest of the nation and get rid of its "loyalty" oath. Incidentally, Alabama is the only state in the nation which has a loyalty oath. This type of high-handedness prevents anyone who has voted Republican from seeking office on the Democratic ticket. Because of the fact that Alabama and most of the South is accustomed to voting Democratic, this oath prevents all office holders and those who would seek any office in the state from voting or supporting anyone on the Republican ticket. To do so in Alabama today means that you are a "dead duck" politically.

This would not be true a few years from now if we had a two-party system. Alabamians cast many individual votes for Eisenhower in the last election, and in the not too distant future the Republicans would carry many Southern states if the Democrats in their national conventions continued to ignore the South.

About all our "loyalty" oath accomplishes, in our opinion, is that it enhances the political prestige of such politicians as Sen. Sparkman with the Democratic wheelhorses at the national conventions because he can say in effect, "Don't worry about Alabama when you write the platform, because we have them tied with a loyalty oath — they aren't going anywhere."

It's about time Alabama and the South became aware of the fact that they are a political nonenity.

There Are No Methodist Saints

Advertiser P. 4-a

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I would like to clarify one point regarding your editorial concerning Dr. King in last Sunday's Advertiser. In your opening sentence, you stated: "A Baptist, Dr. Martin Luther King, has attained sainthood in a Methodist publication."

Many people mistook this statement to mean that the Methodist Church had canonized Dr. King and thus made him a saint. This, of course, is not true. The truth of the matter is that the Methodist Church does not make anyone saints.

Dr. Thompson's reference to him as a saint was in the same general sense as any Christian is a saint. This is indicated by the manner he used the term "saint" without a capital and also by the very construction of the sentence itself: "This is not reserved for exceptional saints like Martin Luther King . . . It must come home to every Sunday school student and teacher."

I feel that Dr. G. Stanley Frazer's letter published Feb. 13 makes the position of most of the ministers in the Methodist Church located in the South quite clear, but a clarification of the fact that the Methodist Church has not made Dr. King a saint is certainly in order.

No one person has the power to make even a single statement for the Methodist Church unless it is an interpretation of the "Discipline of the Methodist Church," and even then it must be remembered it is merely one man's interpretation of our law.

For Law And Order

Post-Herald
Birmingham, Ala.

In returning indictments growing out of the recent shootings and bombings in the state capital, a Montgomery grand jury took pains to warn that such action should not be construed as a weakening of public determination to preserve the community's segregated institutions.

Mon. 2-18-57

"We believe," said the jurors, "we are expressing the feelings of our citizens who believe in law and order, and that they are a great majority of our people . . . We prefer that the problems of maintaining segregation be met openly and honestly rather than with cowardly stealth and violence under cover of darkness . . . we are determined to maintain racial segregation in Montgomery but also to maintain law and order as it applies both to those who support segregation and to those who oppose it."

That we believe is a fair statement of a great majority of our citizens. It should be a warning to all who might be tempted to take the law into their own hands.

If we are to have an orderly society then we must insist on respect for the laws which make it possible. We must make certain that those who violate those laws are left no room to doubt they will have to pay the penalty for such violation.

We do not know who has been indicted in Montgomery nor are we familiar with the evidence presented against them. Their guilt or innocence must be determined when they are brought to trial.

In the meantime, however, we commend the grand jury for its action and for reminding all again there is a right and a wrong way to meet the problems which so deeply concern all citizens.

lems of maintaining segregation be met openly and honestly rather than with cowardly stealth and violence under cover of darkness.

This is a forceful, temperate rejection of the twisted argument of a small handful of extremists here who have tried to implant the idea that segregation and not violence is the issue in the bombings. Although leaving no doubt as to their feelings on segregation, the jurors properly dismissed this as the double-talk that it is.

The bombers have stamped Montgomery as a place of turmoil and danger, wherein the only cool head is that of a Negro visionary who preaches "nonviolence." Incredible as this conception of our city is, it is the creation of those few thugs who resort to dynamite and bullets. The Rev. King's theme was a ridiculous nullity so long as nonviolence was unaccompanied by its necessary opposite—violence. The bombers provided that, and completed the myth of Gandhi-like resistance to white oppression.

The grand jury's action should help dispell the fiction.

Negro ministers whose churches were bombed early Thursday morning said yesterday that church services will be held this morning "as usual" with special prayer "being offered for those responsible for the bombing."

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church, said the church's main sanctuary will be used although there is considerable damage to the building.

He said the service will be open "also to all who wish to join with us on this historic spot."

Abernathy's church and his home were blasted in separate predawn bombings. Three other Negro churches and the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz also were damaged by high explosives.

Following the blasts, Mayor W. A. Gayle and the city commission stopped all bus service "until further notice." The mayor indicated last night there was no immediate plan to reinstate the system.

The Negro minister said the special prayers will be for "all responsible citizens to speak out in behalf of law and order.

"Also, we will pray that the President of the United States will say just a word to us. It would be of so much help."

He said that in his sermon he will ask "the city commissioners to be courageous enough to enforce the law of the land and also to begin bus service once more.

"The buses should be out back on the streets, and run under protection of the law," said Abernathy.

Abernathy declined to comment on whether he believes a proposed all-white bus system would violate a federal court anti-bus segregation injunction.

Plans for such a system were learned Friday but the actual details or its sponsors have not been revealed.

He would not, however, name his clients and refused to divulge the outcome of an hour-long talk Friday with Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson.

Accompanying Goodwyn at the meeting were City Attys. Walter Knabe and Drayton Hamilton.

Of the regular bus service, Abernathy said he could not understand why police cars which followed city buses during the early part of bus boycott to protect them from so called "Negro goon squads" could not be assigned to escort buses now and protect them from ambush gun attacks.

"It is a disgrace to democracy to let a cowardly element in any community prevent buses from operating as they have every legal and moral right to do," he said.

In a conversation with The Advertiser last night, Mayor Gayle would not comment on city plans. Asked if the commission planned a meeting soon, he said "What for?'

"Concerning the bus situation."

"Do you have any ideas?" he asked.

"No sir."

"Well, it you get any, give me a ring."

Bus company officials said also they haven't heard of any plans.

Meanwhile, police continued to check out evidence and run down leads on the bombings yesterday.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 14 (AP).—A Negro minister stood in his bomb-damaged church yesterday and prayed for "moral courage for city officials to do the right thing" to stop violence in Montgomery.

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy also said if President Eisenhower "would just say a word to the city, it would have great value."

Mr. Abernathy's home and the residence of a white minister who leads a Negro congregation were damaged by bombs last week. Four Negro churches also were bombed. No one was injured.

It was the worst outbreak of violence so far in the current drive by Montgomery Negroes for racial equality.

The city bus system, on which Negroes won an end to segregation by Federal court order three weeks ago, was halted indefinitely by the City Commission.

Most Negro churches held regular evening services yesterday, but Mr. Abernathy halted night services at his First Baptist Church "because we feel it might endanger the lives of our congregation."

No violence has been reported since the bombings.

In the bomb-blasted Hutchinson Streeet Baptist Church, the Rev. H. H. Johnson delivered a sermon he said was intended "to give the congregation the assurance that none of these things have softened me, made me want to turn around and give in" on the integration fight.

In the borrowed basement of anotoher church, the Rev. U. J. Fields said some of "those in responsible positions" whom he declined to identify had contributed to violence by advocating opposition to integration. Mr. Fields' own Bell Street Baptist Church was declared unsafe after it was bombed.

Night Bus Service Expected To Resume As City Drops Ban

Advertiser Wed. 1-9-57

Montgomery, Ala.

Night bus service is expected to resume here today. Authorities say no extraordinary measures will be taken to prevent a repetition of the violence which caused the 11-day curfew.

The City Commission yesterday lifted its ban of bus service after 5 p.m. which it had ordered after racially integrated buses had been fired upon five times and a Negro woman wounded.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said the city has had "a number of requests to reinstate the night service." The curfew had banned bus operation before many of the downtown stores closed.

Gayle asked city residents to cooperate with the commission to preserve law and order.

Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers said no new precautions will be taken by the police department to prevent possible additional incidents.

Buses had been ambushed four times when the City Commission ordered night service halted on Dec. 29. This was followed by one shooting in the morning of Dec. 31. Since that time the only incident reported occurred when four boys were arrested for hurling sparkplugs at one of the buses.

Funds for the hiring of 20 additional policemen were approved by the city commission last week. In its regular weekly employment resolution yesterday the commission approved two new patrolmen for employment.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 15 (AP)—The city commission Tuesday authorized city buses to start operating again in Montgomery Wednesday, but only in daylight hours. Some of the buses will have a police escort.

Ending a six-day ban on all bus service, the commission voted to permti buses to make their runs until 5:15 p. m. No bus can leave downtown Montgomery after that hour.

New Orleans, La.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said squad cars will accompany all buses that have to run after dark in order to complete their last runs. On some runs, darkness comes before they can complete their routes even though they leave downtown by 5:15 p. m.

Sellers also said police will "spot check" buses during the daylight operations.

Buses have been fired on six times since racial segregation ended Dec. 21. One Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs, but no one else has been reported hurt.

Four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers were bombed last Thursday morning in another outbreak of violence. The city commission suspended all bus service that day.

Meanwhile, at a Negro mass meeting Monday night, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. asked in prayer that if "anyone should be killed, let it be me."

Montgomery bus boycott end has ironical twist

Birm. Ala. Sun. 1-13-57

BY TRUDY CARGILE

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 12—From segregated riding to integrated walking is the ironical story of Montgomery's long hassel with Negroes for the right to sit where they choose.

Negroes started the walkathon, which drew spotlights from the world as a historically significant crusade for human rights.

But, today, crusade aspects have dimmed while all Montgomery residents without access to automobiles are afoot, regardless of race or opinion.

STALLED BUSES and hectic traffic jams are but one mark of the 13th month boycott.

Here is the harvest from the passive resistance plan of Negroes in Montgomery for obtaining equal rights:

Three homes and four churches have been bombed.

One person has been hospitalized out of six times buses were fired on by snipers.

Negroes had the privilege of sitting where they wanted to on city buses for the short duration of bus operation after segregated seating was ordered ended by the Supreme Court.

MONTGOMERY HAS had to reinforce its police power.

A curfew has been placed on teenagers after midnight.

A weary group of bus company employes await word to return to their buses.

A once healthy city bus line has put all its vehicles to bed.

When Negro leaders estimated that more than the company's fares came from their race, they were probably right.

The only figures released by the company, which came at the end of the first month of the boycott, proved that there were not enough white riders to support the line's full scale operations.

News P. 8-A

FROM THERE ON, financial status has not been divulged, but some buses were re-routed, some were dropped and many of the company's employes looked elsewhere for work.

A flicker of life came to the company when the Supreme Court ordered segregation seating arrangements abolished. For one week, under duress by snipers, the buses operated in full force. But a Negro woman was injured in one of the shooting incidents.

N. 1-13-57

Rosa Jordan, the injured woman, is a domestic. Like other people of her status, she either walked or shared cars during the boycott. When the boycott ended, she returned to her accustomed seating place.

It was for the safety of all passengers that the City Commission halted night runs on buses, after the Jordan woman was hospitalized.

IRRITATING AS the night curfew might have been, the bus company might have returned to profitable operation. How many Negroes failed to return to the buses, and how many white people stayed away, could not be estimated.

Few instances of racial disorder among passengers were reported during the few days the buses operated.

Most disastrous of all flare-ups in the period since the boycott began was the bombing this week of four Negro churches and two minister's homes. Although no injuries resulted, property damage from the four-hour bombardment has been placed at $50,000.

IN PAST MONTHS, two homes were bombed, one of them included in the Wednesday night targets. Blame has been placed by members of each race on each other, and as stoutly denied by both.

But in the office of police investigators, there is not enough actual evidence at hand to tilt the scales in either direction.

If they have evidence other than some sticks of unexploded dynamite and a few bullets from city buses, they are keeping mum.

Although police authorities have not connected the bombings and shootings as work of the same person or persons, city officials brought the busline operation to a halt after Wednesday night's wave of bombings.

Taking further precautions, the commission urged parents to keep an eye on their children after midnight, and readied all reesrve police officers in case they are needed. They are also preparing to add 20 new policemen to the force.

The commission has cautioned Montgomery people to keep cool heads in matters of racial discord. This admonition comes at a time when many minds are disturbed.

4 Unhurt as Bullet Strikes Vehicle in Montgomery Integration Dispute

News 1-1-57

By CLARENCE DEAN
Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 31—A Montgomery City Lines bus was fired on early today. The incident was the fourth since segregated seating was elminated ten days ago under a Federal court order.

Neither the driver nor the three white persons aboard the bus were injured in the shooting. A bullet, believed to be of .38 caliber, struck just befol the driver's seat.

The driver was W. H. Fullilove. His bus was fired on last Friday at 6:35 P. M. Today's shooting occurred in approximately the same neighborhood.

On Friday Mrs. Rosa Jordan, a 22-year-old Negro laundry worker, was shot in both legs. She is in a hospital here.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said no clue to any of the shootings had been found. It has not been determined, he said, whether there was any connection among the incidents, all of which have occurred after dark.

Night Service Suspended

Mr. Fullilove told the police today that he had seen a gun flash as he approached an oncoming car.

Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said he believed three of the four shootings had been by snipers in cars. All the incidents have occurred in predominantly Negro or "fringe" neighborhoods.

The City Commission on Saturday suspended bus operations in Montgomery daily after 5 P. M. through tomorrow. A meeting to determine further action will be held Wednesday morning.

No change, however, was made in the 5 A. M. starting hour. On New Year's Day tomorrow, bus lines will be operated only to Maxwell and Gunter Air Force Bases.

After a boycott of more than a year, Negroes returned to the buses with the Federal court order ending segregation. The boycott had been led by the Montgomery Improvement Association and the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King.

Two buses were fired upon last Wednesday. One was empty except for the driver. Another carried four Negro passengers, all in the rear of the bus. No one was injured.

On Friday when Mrs. Jordan was shot, Mr. Fullilove drove his bus to police headquarters and then resumed his run. As he passed the place where the shooting had occurred, the bus was struck again, by a bullet or some other object.

Six Held in Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 31 (AP)—Six Negro boys were charged today with riddling a trolley bus with air rifle pellets last night.

Police Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh said he was convinced that the incident had nothing to do with Negro efforts to end bus segregation here.

The youths, ranging from 8 to 13 years, were turned over to juvenile authorities. No one was hurt in the incident.

Seven pellets, all aimed at the white section, struck the bus yesterday. Negro and white passengers were in seats designated separately by races.

Florida Integration Spurred

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 31 (AP)—A committee of eleven went to work today to encourage Negroes to ride the buses in Tallahassee and take any seat they found empty.

The groups was appointed last night by the Rev. C. K. Steele, head of the Inter-Civic Council, which has led the fight to integrate the buses.

Negroes ended a long boycott of the segregated buses here Christmas Eve and a few began sitting in front seats. No clashes have been reported.

Integration Upheld in Virginia

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 31—Orders for the desegregation of public schools in two Virginia areas were upheld today by a three-judge Federal appeals court.

Chief Judge John H. Parker of the United States Court of Appeals in the Fourth Circuit held in an unanimous opinion released here that two lower court decrees "are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

The opinion affirmed an order July 31 by Federal District Judge Albert Bryan that Arlington's elementary schools must desegregate by the end of January and its junior and senior high schools by next September. It also upheld an order July 12 by Federal Judge John Paul that the Charlottesville School Board must plan to desegregate at the current school term.

The court criticized Virginia school boards for lack of action toward desegregation since the Federal Supreme Court outlawed segregated schools in 1954.

Delay, the court said, "was not 'deliberate speed' in complying with the law."

Conferences Held in Knoxville

Special to The New York Times.

KNOXVILLE, Dec. 31—Attorneys and others returned today to their homes in the South after week-end conferences at Clinton with sixteen persons charged with violating a Federal Court order against interference with court-ordered integration at Clinton High School.

The attorneys have filed motions in United States District Court at Knoxville asking that the charges be dismissed. Trials of all sixteen are set for Jan. 28 before Judge Robert L Taylor.

More Violence In Montgomery; Tension Mounts

By J. RUSSELL BONER

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS)—A state of emergency grips Montgomery as Federal Bureau of Investigation agents probe a rash of bombings which last Thursday rocked four churches and two homes of Alabama Negroes who have lead a crusade for integration.

The Alabama capital was declared to be in a state of emergency by the City Commission which added 20 policemen to the force, and citizens were alerted, warned to keep children under watch and to keep teen-agers off the streets after midnight.

The U. S. Department of Justice has ordered the FBI to check on any violation of federal laws in the six dynamiting attacks on the churches and homes of integration leaders Thursday, Jan. 10.

The bombings were the worse outbreaks of violence since the fight over desegregation of city buses began here nearly 14 months ago.

The Montgomery city commission suspended bus service indefinitely following Thursday's terrorism.

The home of the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Negro leader in the year-long Montgomery boycott against bus segregation, was heavily damaged in the series of bombings early in the morning.

Montgomery police said there were no reports of injuries in the bombings in the Alabama capital city, where a bus de-segregation movement which since has spread to other major southern cities first began more than a year ago.

The Rev. Mr. Abernathy was one of some 50 Negro leaders from throughout the South in Atlanta Wednesday for an area-wide strategy meeting to expand the campaign against "jim crow" seating practices in the South. His wife and child, sleeping in a back bedroom, were terrified by the early morning blast, but escaped injury.

The Rev. Robert Graetz, a white minister of a Negro Lutheran church, escaped uninjured with other members of his family when one of the bombs knocked down a door at his home.

But police said another unexploded bomb containing 11 sticks of dynamite, found in Gratez's front yard, might have caused death or serious injury except for a faulty fuse.

Bomb throwers also shattered the First Baptist church, of which Abernathy is pastor.

Other bombs ripped holes in the Bell Street Baptist church and the Mount Olive church. The Hutchinson Baptist church near Abernathy's home was the sixth target.

Alabama Gov. James E. Folsom, who posted a $2,000 reward for the capture of persons responsible for the dynamitings in Montgomery, warned: Call P.4

"Any group of persons that will stoop to bomb a house of worship endangers the lives of every man, woman and child of this state."

Elsewhere in the South a survey shows that 22 cities are no longer forcing bus segregation since the Montgomery decision. Most Negroes however, have voluntarily continued sitting in their traditional places.

Negro leaders from 29 cities in 10 southern states, meanwhile, met in a closed session in Atlanta to discuss ways of applying throughout the south a supreme court decision holding segregation on transit systems to be illegal.

At Mobile, where three crosses were burned before Negro homes Thursday night, one Negro home was slightly damaged and unexploded bombs were found Friday at the homes of two other Negroes, J. L. LeFlore cancelled an anti - segregation mass - meeting scheduled for Friday night after finding one of the unexploded bombs on his front porch.

The outbreak of southern violence came as President Eisenhower urged congress to enact his four-point civil rights program and move toward "the goal of fair and equal treatment of citizens without regard to race or color."

The Federal Bureau of Investigation moved additional agents into Montgomery and Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell said the usual study would be made to determine if federal laws had been violated.

Police Bare Questioning Of Suspects

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. 1-18-57

Despite the finding of a clue-loaded dynamite bomb similar to one discovered at the scene of last Thursday's rash of Montgomery church and home bombings, city police said last night they had "no real suspects" in the case.

However, police officials did disclose, at a dramatic press conference, that "several suspects — white and Negro" had been questioned and released.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, Det. Capt. E. P. Brown and State Toxicologist Vann Pruitt made what was billed as a "progress report" on the bombing investigation. Adv. 1-18-57

The unexploded bomb was found Sunday by three boys in a gulley in shallow water. The location is near Vandy's Place on North Court street, near Chisholm. News of the finding had been withheld by The Advertiser at the request of police.

The dynamite was capped and fused and was in a paper bag. Many features were similar to another unexploded 11-stick bomb found in front of the Rev. Robert Graetz' home last Thursday, Pruitt said. The bomb, Ruppenthal reported was made up of dynamite of the "ditching" type commonly used in South Alabama.

BACK FROM BIRMINGHAM

Brown, Pruitt, his assistant W. T. McVay and chief Highway Patrol investigator T. J. Carlisle returned from Birmingham yesterday after carrying out an investigation in that city.

Bown said the group talked to dynamite producers, aluminum manufacturer representatives and Birmingham police officials in an effort to establish a link between the dynamite and its users. They failed to come up with anything concrete, Brown told newsmen.

The bomb found by the youngsters Sunday "was extremely dangerous because it had been soaked, and the nitro could have exploded with a good jar," Pruitt said. That was one of the reasons Ruppenthal recently warned parents to caution children against picking up stange objects.

When mention of suspects was brought up, Ruppenthal, Brown and Pruitt denied they had found any link between the bomb and members of the police department.

The latest bomb find started a number of rumors concerning who was behind the bombing. They were all discounted by police officials.

Pruitt said the bomb found at the Graetz home and the one found Sunday "probably wouldn't do great damage" unless placed in a confined area. He said the sticks were 50 per cent Du Pont, commonly referred to as "ditching" dynamite. Pruitt told newsmen that it could be easily bought.

The trio o finvestigators said the only difference in the recent discovery and the bomb found near the Graetz home was in the manner in which they were capped; the first from the top, the second from the middle. Advertiser

All the materials used in the construction of the bomb are easily purchased and will be hard to trace, Brown said. P. 6-A

NEW EVIDENCE

City police have—and still are—checking cities south of Montgomery in an effort to come up with new evidence. They have made investigations in Troy, Luverne, Brewton, Union Springs, Greenville and Prattville.

Brown said Birmingham police and other law enforcement agencies are cooperating in the investigation. He added that he would "welcome any law enforcement officer or private citizen" who wished to aid in the investigation. Adv. 1-18-57

The Jan. 10 bombings of four Negro churches and the homes of the Rev. Graetz, white pastor of a Negro congregation, and the Rev. R. D. Abernathy, leader in the Montgomery Improvement Assn., caused the City Commission to halt bus service.

It was resumed Wednesday and there have been no additional reports of violence. Since buses were integrated here Dec. 21, there have been six ambushes of city buss involving gunfire.

AT KING'S CHURCH

CENTER OF ACTIVITY

The Dexter Avenue church has been the center of much activity by Negroes in their bid for integration on city buses. The Rev. King, its pastor, led a bus boycott to successful conclusion when the Supreme Court ordered that buses be integrated.

Although the homes of the Rev. R. D. Abernathy, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church, and the Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of the Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, were among those bombed, King's was not.

Although situated only a block from the state capitol and across from the Highway Department Building, King's church is considered vulnerable to would - be bombers from the Decatur Street side, which is relatively quiet during late night hours. Adv. 1-12-57

King keeps his home spotlighted at night as a precautionary measure, since his home was bombed during the early days of the boycott.

The time at which the three men were seen near the Dexter Avenue church places the reported incident a short time after the fourth bomb of the night—at the First Baptist Church—and before two others which followed.

The fifth and sixth bombing of the morning, at the Bell Street Baptist Church and Mt. Olive Baptist Church on Old Selma Road, happened about an hour after the men were reported seen leaving the area.

Arrival Of State Employe May Have Halted Bombing

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 1-12-57

By GEORGE WHITTINGTON

Montgomery police have been provided information that three men in an automobile were believed to have been foiled early Thursday in an attempt to dynamite the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church of which the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. is pastor.

The three were spotted by a state employe who arrived at the Highway Department Building, across from the church, in the middle of a series of six bombings during Thursday's pre-dawn hours.

Capt. E. P. Brown, chief of Montgomery detectives, verified the report, but said the description of the auto was "general." He said he also had not been told whether the men were white or colored.

Capt. Brown said he had not talked to the man, and did not have his name.

However, is was learned, the information has been passed on to the office of Gov. James E. Folsom, who has already offered to throw state investigators into the bombing probe. The city so far has declined all offers of outside assistance.

The state employe, whose name was not revealed, has the routine duty of going to the post office about 3 a.m., and delivering mail to the various offices in the Highway Department.

According to the account given The Advertiser, the man was following this procedure Thursday after four bombs already had exploded at churches and the homes of ministers in the city when he drove up to a spot near the Decatur Street entrance to the building.

He was quoted as saying that when he stopped his vehicle, he noticed a car parked by the Dexter Avenue Church which fronts on the corner of Dexter at Decatur. Advertiser

The spot where he parked is less than 30 yards from the church.

The state employe said he watched the men for a minute or so, then got out and carried a mail bag into the highway building. When he started turning on lights in the building, he said, the three men drove away. P. 7-A

Bombed pastors ask moral courage over race issue

News Birmingham, Ala. p. 13 Mon. 1-14-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 14—(AP)—A prayer for "moral courage for city officials to do the right thing" to stop violence in Montgomery was offered yesterday by a Negro minister in a bomb-damaged church.

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy also said that if President Eisenhower "would just say a word to the city, it would have great value." Abernathy's home was also bombed early Thursday in the worst outbreak of violence in the current drive by Montgomery Negroes for racial equality.

Four Negro churches and the home of two pro-integration ministers were bombed, with no injuries reported. The city bus system, on which Negroes won an end to segregation by federal court order three weeks ago, was halted indefinitly by the city commission.

WHILE MOST other Negro churches held regular evening services yesterday, Abernathy said all night services at his First Baptist Church have been halted "because we feel it might endanger the lives of our congregation."

No violence has been reported since the bombings.

In the bomb-blasted Hutchinson St. Baptist Church, the Rev. H. H. Johnson gave a sermon he said was intended "to give the congregation the assurance that none of these things have softened me, made me want to turn around and give in" on the integration fight.

In the borrowed basement of another church, the Rev. U. J. Fields said some of "those in responsible positions" whom he declined to identify had contributed to violence by advocating opposition to integration. Fields' own Bell Street Baptist Church was declared unsafe for use by the Fire Department after it was bombed.

In a sermon to his Negro Trinity-Lutheran congregation entitled "How often shall we forgive," the Rev. Robert Graetz, a young white minister, asked forgiveness for his attackers. The bombing of his home Thursday was the second time in five months.

Abernathy said both his home and church were fully insured and plans were being made to repair them. Fields said he was calling for contributions from both Negroes and white persons for rebuilding.

FBI INVESTIGATION

FBI Probing Bombing of Four Negro Churches in Alabama

Dispatch Fri. 1-18-57 P. 1

Oklahoma City, Okla.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(ANP)—Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation began "looking into the Montgomery bombing situation" last week after four Negro churches and two homes—one of a white minister—were ripped by explosions.

The bombings were the worse outbreaks of violence since the fight over desegregation of city buses began here nearly 14 months ago.

The Montgomery city commission suspended bus service indefinitely following the Wednesday night terrorism.

Meanwhile, there were three other developments in the growing struggles over bus integration in the South.

In Atlanta, six Negro ministers were arrested and released under bonds of $1,000 each after they rode in the white section of a bus.

In Mobile, where a similar campaign against segregated buses is being waged by Negroes, an explosion damaged a Negro's home Thursday night and attempts apparently were made to bomb the homes of two others. Crosses also were burned in front of three other Negro homes.

And in Chattanooga, where buses were integrated last week by city officials, two bottles of gasoline were thrown against buses Thursday night but no damage was reported. Dispatch P. 21

The Montgomery bombings resulted into a hasty meeting of the city commission, which announced later that bus operations were being halted "until further notice."

The suspension forced thousands of riders, both white and Negro, to find other means of transportation. Many were forced to walk to and from their jobs.

Rev. Robert Graetz, a white minister of a Negro Lutheran church, escapped uninjured with other members of his family when one of the bombs knocked down a door at his home.

But police said another unexploded bomb containing 11 sticks of dynamite, found in Gaetz' front yard, might have caused death or serious injury except for a faulty fuse.

Bomb throwers also shattered the home of Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a Negro leader of the bus protest, and the four churches including the First Baptist church, of which Abernathy is pastor.

Other bombs ripped holes in the Bell Street Baptist church and the Mount Olive church. The Hutchinson Baptist church near Abernathy's home was the six target.

FBI probes bombings

Afro-American Sat. 1-19-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — FBI teams from Memphis, New Orleans and Miami, Thursday, converged upon this city to investigate the six bomb blasts which imperiled the lives of two families and damaged four churches and two homes.

Baltimore, Md.

The bombings here occurred between 2 a.m. and 5 p.m. and came less than 12 hours after a racially integrated city bus was fired upon from ambush as it made one of the first runs since night bus service was banned in the wake of several shootings by whites. P. 1

Both the home and church of the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, pastor of First Baptist Church and a leader of the successful bus boycott here in the capital of the old Confederacy, were ripped by explosions.

THE BOMBS, apparently made of dynamite, tore the front part of the Rev. Mr. Abernathy's home and heavily damaged the church.

The Rev. Mr. Abernathy, who said he was in Atlanta attending the Southwide Ministerial Conference, stated that his wife and 2-year-old daughter were alone in the home when the 2 a.m. blast rocked the house. Afro-American

"Luckily, they were asleep in a back bedroom," the minister said, adding that his wife was "suffering from shock." P. 2

He said that the bomb hurled at the church did "a great deal of damage" to the first floor and basement," so much so that we will not be able to use them for meeting purposes."

The worst damaged of the bombed edifices was the Bell St. Baptist Church, of which a whole corner of about 20 feet, containing the choir loft, was blown off.

"A miracle saved my life," the Rev. Robert J. Graetz, white pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, at whose home two bombs were thrown, only the smaller of which exploded.

"THE LARGER of the bombs," the Rev. Mr. Graetz told the AFRO, "contained 11 sticks of dynamite wrapped around a chunk of TNT. This was enough explosive to destroy a 15-story building," he pointed out.

The Rev. Mr. Graetz chuckled as he stated that the bombing culminated threats that "I have been receiving all the time since I assisted the bus boycott leaders."

He said the small bomb tore up his porch and damaged his front door. He, his wife, their four small children and his mother, all asleep in the house were unharmed.

ASKED IF he had been promised police protection, the young minister scornfully said that he had not even talked to the police. "What good would that do?" he asked.

Indicating that violence directed at him would not drive him out of town the Rev. Mr. Graetz asserted: "The Lord will protect me. He is a lot stronger than anything they (the would-be assassins) can throw at me."

Churches bombed other than the First and Bell Baptist were the Hutchinson Street and Mount Olive Baptist Churches, all of which had been headquarters of the bus boycotters.

THE REV. MR. GRAETZ told the AFRO that the violence culminating in the bombings was an expression of the frustration of the segregationists who were "so mad" at the necessity of accepting bus integration they wanted "to kill us all—anyone who had any part in it.

"They're like cornered rats," he said, "so mad they'd rather stop the buses from running than accept desegregation."

AS A MATTER of fact, Mayor W. A. Gayle of Montgomery ordered bus service halted "until further notice" as a precautionary measure, announcing that an informal emergency meeting of the city council would be called later.

Gayle said he had talked to Gov. James E. Folsom about the situation. "I told him I didn't think we need any help (the National Guard). I think we have the situation in hand."

Governor Folsom offered $2,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of one person or persons who carried out the bombings.

SURRENDER TO SHERIFF

2 More Get Bomb Writs

Advertiser 2-1-57 Montgomery, Ala.

Two white men surrendered to the sheriff yesterday on grand jury indictments charging they dynamited an occupied residence—a capital offense.

Sheriff M. S. Butler said James D. York and Henry Alexander came in with an attorney three days after the indictments were returned on results of racial violence here.

They were immediately bonded. York on $12,500 bonds Alexander on $12,800 bonds.

Butler said York was charged with dynamiting an occupied residence and also the bombing of an unoccupied building.

ASSAULT CHARGE

Alexander was charged with the same two counts and also with assault to murder, the sheriff said.

The capiases (warrants) sent him by the grand jury did not specify the actions involved in the charges, Butler said.

City police had earlier charged York and Alexander with dynamiting the occupied home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, Negro leader of an effort to end segregation.

Alexander had also been charged by police with dynamiting a taxi stand and shooting at the driver of a racially integrated city bus.

SEVEN BOMBINGS

Seven bombings and six shootings at buses followed a federally ordered end to bus segregation on Dec. 21.

The sheriff said York and Alexander came to the county jail late Saturday afternoon in the company of Atty. Joe Pilcher of the law firm of Hill, Hill, Whiting and Pilcher.

They were fingerprinted and photographed, the sheriff said. He refused to name the bondsmen who posted bonds for the defendants.

Two other white men named in the jury indictments surrendered Sunday and are scheduled for trial Feb. 28 on charges of bombing unoccupied buildings. They are Raymond C. Britt Jr., and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr.

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said that any persons charged with capital offenses probably would not be tried until a circuit court term beginning May 27. The venire has already been drawn for the current term and a new one is not expected to be drawn.

Two White Men Arrested In Alabama Bomb Scare

Post & Times Herald P. 15-a Tues. 2-19-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 18 (AP)—The arrest of two white men charged with bombing two Negro churches and a Negro taxicab stand during recent racial violence in Montgomery was disclosed today.

Washington D.C.

They were among an unspecified number of defendants indicted by the Montgomery grand jury last Saturday.

Raymond C. Britt Jr., was charged with bombing the Negro First Baptist Church Jan. 10 and the Peoples Cab Co. Jan. 27.

Britt and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., were indicted together for the bombing of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, also on Jan. 10.

Livingston was released on bond of $2500 and Britt on bonds totaling $7500.

The number and identity of the other defendants indicted by the grand jury for the bombing of Negro churches and residences following the end of bus segregation in Montgomery was still kept secret.

However, sheriff's officers reportedly were looking for two others in addition to the two booked at the county jail last night.

An element of mystery surrounded the booking of Britt and Livingston. Sheriff Mac Butler's office said the men were booked and released on bond last night but that somehow the information apparently was not logged.

White men indicted in race bombing

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 18—(AP)—The arrest of two white men charged with bombing two Negro churches and a Negro taxicab stand during recent racial violence in Montgomery was disclosed today.

They were among an unspecified number of defendants indicted by the Montgomery Grand Jury Saturday.

RAYMOND C. BRITT JR., was charged with bombing the Negro First Baptist Church here the morning of Jan. 10 and the People's Cab Co. Jan. 27.

Britt and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., were indicted together for the bombing of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, also on Jan. 10.

Livingston was released on bond of $2500 and Britt on bonds totaling $7500.

Their trials were set for Thursday, Feb. 28. Maximum punishment is 10 years in prison on each offense.

THE NUMBER and identity of the other defendants indicted by the Grand Jury for the bombing of Negro churches and residences was still kept secret.

However, sheriff's officers reportedly were looking for two others in addition to the two booked at the county jail last night.

If any of the others were indicted for the dynamiting of inhabited dwellings, they probably won't be tried until the next term of court in May.

Indictments Returned in Montgomery Bombings

Journal + Constitution P. 1 Sun. 2-17-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 16 (AP)—A Montgomery County Grand Jury Saturday returned an unspecified number of indictments in the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches in Montgomery.

Atlanta, Ga.

The number of indictments and names of the defendants were withheld until they could be taken into custody.

SEVEN WHITE MEN were arrested by city police because of the bombing last month and are free on bond in city court. But if any of them were among those indicted by the grand jury they must be rearrested on the grand jury warrants.

The grand jury report read by Foreman Herbert R. Nation said that in returning the indictments "we believe we are expressing the feeling of our citizens who believe in law and order and that they are the great majority of our people."

That is a capital offense under Alabama law. Any defendant facing a capital charge who hadn't been arraigned by the time the jury panel was drawn for the February term of court today, automatically won a continuance until a later term, unless another jury is drawn.

Among the seven men arrested by city police last month, besides Britt and Livingston, were two defendants charged in city court with bombing the occupied home of the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, a Negro integration leader. Those men were Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York.

Whether they were indicted by the Grand Jury, however, still wasn't known.

An element of mystery surrounded the booking of Britt and Livingston. Sheriff Mac Butler's office said the men were booked and released on bond last night but that somehow the information apparently wasn't logged.

CHIEF DEPUTY W. J. Williams said earlier this morning that no arrests had been made as far as he could tell.

John Blue Hill and Joe Pilcher, attorneys for the two men, said they surrendered at their law office late yesterday and were taken to jail.

Meanwhile, arraignments for the current term of court were scheduled today and any defendants indicted on capital charges for the recent racial violence would have to be in custody or under bond by that time in order to be tried at this term.

Judge Carter Asks Indictment Returns If Evidence Justifies

By JO ANN FLIRT

Montgomery frowns on crimes of violence, Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter told a Montgomery County Grand Jury yesterday as he charged the group to investigate the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches.

"And if the evidence justifies it, it is your duty to return an indictment," he said, speaking of the felony charges lodged by city police against four white men.

Because of inferior courts with final jurisdiction such as City Recorder's Court, the grand jury is not compelled to return indictments on charges of misdemeanors facing three other white men, Judge Carter explained.

"However, if you jurors think it necessary for the public good, it is the function of the jury to return an indictment even in misdemeanor cases; it is your sworn duty in felony cases if the evidence justifies it," he said.

The 18-man, all-white investigating body began its probable weeklong session less than an hour after reporting to the court.

PROCEEDINGS SECRET

All proceedings before it are secret. It is not known when the jurors will hear evidence in the cases of the seven men charged with bombings and other violence. There is some speculation that the cases will be investigated Wednesday; other speculation is that the jury already has heard the testimony of city investigating officers and has made its decision on the indictments.

The jury decision will not be made public until it returns an official report in court on the number of indictments, and those indicted are served notice by the county Sheriff's department. Twelve of the 18 men must concur on each indictment.

Appointed foreman of the jury by Judge Carter was Herbert R. Nation, printing firm executive and a former chairman of Montgomery County Democratic Executive Committee.

JURORS CHOSEN

Along with 49 other possible jurors, he was summoned to court yesterday and from those present the names of 18 were drawn from a covered hat by Judge Carter. In addition to Nation, grand jurors chosen were:

Raymond C. Britt Jr., Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York, all of Montgomery, have been charged with felonies in connection with the actual bombing of residents and churches.

Alexander and York are charged with dynamiting the occupied home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

Alexander also is charged with firing on a city bus.

The three charged with conspiracy—a misdeameanor — were Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap.

All seven cases came before Recorder's Court Judge Eugene Loe last Friday, but Judge Loe announced in brief courtroom proceedings that the cases had been continued under an agreement between the defense and prosecution to have all cases go before the grand jury.

If indicted by the grand jury, the men will be tried this term of court, probably the last week of February, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said.

City charges will be dropped against any defendants which the grand jury fails to indict, Judge Loe stated.

Although one Negro was listed on the 50-member grand jury panel, his name was not drawn.

Police point finger at Klansmen—

Capital Grand Jury charged to investigate bombing, violence wave

News Mon. 2-11-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 11—(AP)—A judge charged a Grand Jury today to investigate the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches, and added:

"Montgomery frowns on such crimes of violence."

The county Grand Jury heard the charge from Circuit Judge Eugene Carter at the outset of its deliberations. Seven white men have been arrested in connection with the recent racial violence and evidence will be presented to the Grand Jury this week.

Carter told the jurors "Montgomery has for many years been free of such crimes and we want to keep it so."

MEANWHILE, city police blamed "members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan" for the dynamiting that followed the end of city bus segregation.

But a Klan spokesman said "the Klan as an organization does not sanction nor does it condone such violence."

The Klansman, who refused to be named, said he "understood" some of the seven white men charged with participating in the violence belong to the KKK.

FOUR MEN ARE charged with four of the seven bombings Jan. 10 and 27 of Negro churches and homes and a service station-taxi stand since Montgomery city buses were racially integrated Dec. 21.

The other three are charged with misdemeanors of conspiracy in connection with dynamite bundles that failed to go off at two homes of pro-integration ministers, one Negro and one white.

ONE OF THE FOUR is also charged with shooting at one of the city buses racially integrated by Federal Court order. Five other times buses were ambushed with gunfire between Dec. 26 and Jan. 9.

News P. 6

Any of those indicted face trial in Circuit Court next week.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said he met yesterday with "prosecuting officials who will present these cases to the Grand Jury and all law enforcement officers who actively participated in the investigations."

After the meeting he said "our investigation, corroborated by statements of some of the accused themselves, shows that these (four) bombing were perpetrated by members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan."

"Investigation is continuing as to the unsolved bombings," Ruppenthal added.

The Klan spokesman said "it is not our intention to have any violence. The main thing we're trying to do now is to build a vote bloc and this has set us back a long way."

LAST SEPTEMBER KKK leaders from Georgia and the Birmingham area held an organizational meeting in Montgomery, where one of them said the Klan had been "dormant." A second cross-burning rally about two months later drew fewer persons after city officials refused permission for a Klan parade downtown.

Referring to the Klan, Ruppenthal said "this organization, through its members and friends, are now engaged in collecting money for the defense of those accused of these acts of violence."

Two groups were formed a week ago to collect money for legal defense of the seven. Chairmen of both stoutly denied that they were acting for the Klan.

Jack Brock, chairman of the Alabama Segregation Defense Fund that has set a $60,000 goal for door-to-door collections, said:

"The purpose of Ruppenthal's statement was obviously to prevent the securing of funds with which to employ adequate legal counsel, and also to try to prejudice these seven defendants before the public."

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE other group, Ira Fred Watson of the Committee for Legal Defense, said "all members of our committee are members of the board of directors of the Montgomery County White Citizens' Council.

"Our committee was formed with the knowledge and approval of" the council chairman and board of directors, Watson said.

Ruppenthal said that "from information received by this department, I feel the public should know that this money is not being collected by the White Citizens' Council as has been reported, nor is such collection sanctioned by the White Citizens' Council."

Brock declared it is untrue "that the Citizens' Council does not sanction or approve the legal defense of these seven defendants. . . ."

The three city commissioners are leaders in the county Citizens' Council.

THE POLICE CHIEF ALSO said that "a charge was recently made in a local newspaper that these prosecutions were inspired by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

"Nothing could be farther from the truth. The prosecutions are in faced based on evidence gathered by the Alabama Department of Public Safety and the Montgomery police department."

The seven were charged Jan. 31 and Feb. 1. Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York were charged with dynamiting the occupied home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, conviction of which could carry the death penalty.

Alexander was also charged with the bus shooting and the explosion at the service station.

Raymond C. Britt Jr. was charged with bombing two Negro churches and the service station, and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. was charged with dynamiting one of the churches.

DYNAMITING OF uninhabited buildings is punishable by up to 10 years' imprisonment.

The three charged with conspiracy were Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap. Maximum penalty on the charge is six months' hard labor and $1000 fine.

All seven were released on bonds ranging from $250 to $13,000.

When preliminary hearings for them came up last Friday, City Judge Eugene Loe said by agreement of the prosecution and defense all evidence would go to the Grand Jury and if any aren't indicted the charges in City Court against them will be dropped.

Curfew Lifted On City Buses

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Wed. 2-20-57

A curfew which has kept racially integrated buses off the streets of Montgomery after dark for nearly six weeks was lifted by the City Commission yesterday. The commission removed all restrictions on bus operations effective immediately, but Manager J. H. Bagley of Montgomery City Lines Inc., said it will be March 1 before service is restored to normal.

The commissioners took note of the racial tension in voting to lift the bus curfew, but said the unrest appears to have abated somewhat.

"Because of certain unrest, there have been ordered certain changes and certain curtailment of bus service in the city," a resolution said. "It now appears that said bus service may safely be resumed."

SERVICE NEEDED

Bagley said it will take time to restore full bus service because equipment must be put in condition for operation and drivers laid off by the curtailment must be recalled.

The curfew was first imposed Dec. 29 after the newly integrated buses had been fired on four times. It was removed several days later but restored after new attacks.

Finally, after the sixth shooting and the bombing of four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers, the curfew went into effect again Jan. 10.

For the first six days after that, all bus service was suspended, day and night. Then daytime operations were restored with police escorts assigned to guard buses unable to complete their final runs before darkness fell.

NOW SEGREGATED

The end of the curfew yesterday found few signs of actual race-mixing on the buses even though segregation barriers have been hauled down under a Supreme Court order.

Bagley and a pro-integration spokesman, the Rev. Robert Graetz, agreed that Negroes for the most part are riding in the rear of the buses where they once were compelled to sit.

Graetz, the white pastor of an all-Negro church, said "in general the old pattern seems to prevail most of the time."

But there is one difference, the clergyman pointed out: under the segregation laws, Negroes were forbidden to sit in certain parts of a bus. Now they can and sometimes do when other seats are filled.

Graetz said he has seen white and Negro passengers sitting together on the long seats running lengthwise at the front of a bus, "and I've never seen the white person object."

POLICE REMOVED

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said that police escorts which have followed final bus runs on the different routes will no longer be provided. He said periodic checks will still be made by police cars, however.

Bagley announced the following schedule for Court Square departure time for each of the last buses:

Maryland Road—6:22 p.m.; South Jackson—5:45 p.m.; Washington Park—5:55 p.m.; S. Cloverdale-Court Street—6:10 p.m.; Capitol Heights — 6:05 p.m.; Highland Avenue—6 p.m.; Day Street — 6 p.m.; Maxwell Field—6:20 p.m.; Oak Park—6 p.m.; Veterans Court —6:07 p.m.; Cleveland Avenue—6:05 p.m.; Boylston — 5:35 p.m., and Ridgecrest—5:40 p.m.

City Drops Bomb Cases

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. 2-23-57

City cases against seven men accused in recent anti-Negro bombings here were dropped yesterday in Recorder's Court by Judge D. Eugene Loe.

Under an agreement between the city prosecution and defense lawyers, Judge Loe had ruled last week his court would not prosecute after the Montgomery County grand jury acted.

All seven, with their attorney, John Blue Hill, appeared in the lower court yesterday to hear the official ruling.

The grand jury has indicted four of the men, who were charged by the city with felonies, but it did not return indictments against the three police had charged with misdemeanors.

Indicted were Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., Raymond Britt Jr., Henry Alexander and James D. York. Their trials have been postponed until the May term of Circuit Court because of the illness of Hill's legal partner, John Harris.

Formerly accused of misdemeanors in connection with the acts of violence but who were not indicted were Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap.

The Grand Jury indicted four men—Henry Alexander, James D. York, Raymond C. Britt Jr., and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr.—for the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches. Their trials are scheduled for May.

Anderson Criticized For 'Boycott' Article

Courier Publishing, Pa. p. 1 (Sec. 2)
Sat. 12-1-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Trezzvant Anderson, the Courier's "Roving Reporter," was criticized by Dr. L. D. Reddick of Alabama State College for his series of articles regarding the Montgomery bus boycott.

Dr. Reddick asserted, "We may expect to see some of Mr. Anderson's words reprinted by the White Citizens Council."

Mr. Anderson was accsued of having written "unfavorable stories."

Dr. Reddick stated, "The second article in his series (Nov. 11) is the worst—so far. It is based upon false assumptions and filled with insinuations and inaccuracies.

The main false assumption is that the test of the success of the Montgomery movement is to be found in what it has done for the Negro community of this city. On the contrary, the organization, strategy and sustained drive of the Montgomery Improvement Association have had a positive national and international effect, far more significanat than any local effects.

"And yet Montgomery itself is a better place today than it was."

MR. ANDERSON is also accused by the educator of having left hanging the question of whether Montgomery Negroes bombed their own homes and churches. "This is unforgivable."

Dr. Reddick continued, "Moreover, he charges the MIA leaders with undue attention to publicity. The fact is that the public relations side of the movement was one of its weakest. Publicity came in spite of this inadequacy.

"Mr. Anderson reflects on the honesty of MIA officials in handling funds that were contributed. If Mr. Anderson but knew, he would paraphase Churchill and say 'never were there so many opportunities for dishonesty and so few taken.' The MIA officials had to be secretive about the organization's financial resources in order to keep this information from the enemy.

"It is a pity that a talented, crusading journalist should have gone so far astray this time."

Bus Boycott Sponsors Celebrate Second Year

Defender p. 3. Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 12-7-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The Montgomery Improvement Association will celebrate its second anniversary during the second week of Dec. (5-9), with special seminars on non-violnece and social change highlighting the program.

"Freedom Through Civic Responsibility" will be the general theme of the meetings which will have Dr. Archibald Carey, pastor, Quinn Chapel AME church, Chicago, and Paul Simon, of the Illinois legislature, as guest speakers.

Montgomery citizens will be informed during the conference that although the bus boycott was successful, ways and means must be found to make the city account for $900,000 it proposes to spend of the taxpayers money for a museum-library for white people while $100,000 is to be spent for a "branch" library for Negroes — who constitute 46 percent of the population, a MIA Newsletter said recently.

The Newsletter also pointed out the case of a 17-year-old boy who was beaten, arrested and fined for "walking through a park for whites." The case was appealed and eventually dropped by the judge.

Martin Luther King will be the principal speaker at the opening night mass meeting, Thursday, Dec. 5. Two of the four seminars scheduled for the Institute will be given over to the youth of the city and surrounding areas.

Constestants will vie together in the annual oratorical contest for the three scholarships that are awarded annually. After the contest, Friday night the Institute preacher will deliver the Institute sermon at a mass meeting.

The last two seminar sessions will be conducted during Saturday, Dec. 7. Nothing has been scheduled for Saturday night so that visitors might have free time to acquaint themselves with the citizens of Montgomery.

In addition to the seminars and mass meetings will be the fireside chats. These will be held in the various homes after mass meeting each night.

The Institute will close after the huge mass meeting which is to be held on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 8. The speaker for this occasion will be Dr. Archibald Carey, pastor of the Quinn AME church of Chicago. The public is invited to participate.

NEGRO GIRL FINED FOR BUS INCIDENT

18-Year-Old Was Accused Of Striking White Girl

Commercial Appeal
Memphis, Tenn.
Sat. 11-30-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 29. —(UP)—An 18-year-old Negro schoolgirl charged with striking a white girl who refused to let her share a seat on a city bus was fined $50 and costs here Friday in City Court.

Fannie Robinson and her mother, Daisy Lee Alexander, also were fined $10 each for contempt of court for testifying earlier the Negro girl was 17 years old.

Fannie Robinson was charged with assault and battery by Barbara Smith, 15, recently married, who testified during a hearing Nov. 8 that the Negro girl sat in her lap after she refused to let her share a seat. Mrs. Smith, unmarried at the time of the incident, said she shoved the Negro girl off her lap and that the Negro then struck her.

She testified she had schoolbooks on the seat beside her and was doing homework when the Negro girl asked for the seat. She said there were other empty seats on the bus.

City buses were ordered integrated here last December after the United States Supreme Court held city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutional, thus ending the 371-day bus boycott by Montgomery Negroes.

Recorder's Court Judge Eugene Loe turned the Negro girl over to Juvenile Court Nov. 8 after she and her mother testified she was 17. Juvenile court authorities returned the case to City Court with a birth certificate showing the Negro girl's age was 18.

The Negro girl paid the $10 contempt fine Friday but appealed the assault and battery conviction.

Mrs. Smith said other seats were available on the bus, but witnesses testified there were not. City buses have been integrated since last December.

"At a former term of the court, the solicitor's office, representing the state, vigorously prosecuted the strongest case it had against those accused of bombing Negro churches in Montgomery. No stont was left unturned to secure a conviction. Every piece of incriminating evidence which had been secured after weeks of diligent and painstaking investigation . . . was presented to the trial jury—a jury composed of citizens who represented the highest type of our people.

"After carefully listening to the testimony, both for the state and for the accused, the jury, having a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, acquitted them, rendering a verdict which the county would itself have given. The proceedings were in strict accordance with the law of the land."

The statement by the judges also said they were of the opinion that if the trials of the impending bombing cases were held "there would be no convictions."

Criminal Charges Dropped In Bus Case

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The state of Alabama Tuesday dismissed all of the remaining criminal charges which resulted from the Montgomery bus boycott and from the dynamiting of Negro churches and homes.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., however, has agreed to pay a fine of $500 for violating the state's anti-boycott law and to dismiss an appeal now pending in the State Supreme Court, according to Circuit Court Sol. William F. Thetford who announced the dismissal of charges.

The trial of approximately 89 Negroes had been postponed, pending a hearing of Dr. King's appeal. The trial of two white men, charged with bombing four churches and several homes, was postponed following the acquittal of two other whites on the same charges.

Ford's Dismissal Motion:

Following is the text of the motion of Solicitor William F. Thetford to dismiss bombing charges against three white men charged with bombing and 89 Negroes, charged with carrying on an illegal boycott:

"Over the past few years, this county has been plagued with racial incidents culminated with the bombing of a number of Negro churches in January, 1957. These cases were carefully and fully investigated by our police department and indictments were returned by the Montgomery County Grand Jury against [illegible] persons.

"The case against two of these individuals have already been [illegible] trials in these cases would be a acquittals. The jury acquitted these two individuals in spite of vigorous prosecution by the state and in spite of introduction of confessions by both defendants. The cases against the remaining defendants are not so strong as against those already tried.

"In view of the sentiment of the people of this community, especially since the government is now using federal troops to enforce integration in the schools of little Rock, Ark., I see absolutely no possibility of the remaining so-called bombing case. Further trials in these cases wauld be a useless waste of the state's money and would only serve to rekindle and keep alive hatreds which are better forgotten.

"I therefore move the court to enter a nolle pross in the following cases: number 7872, 7874, 7887 and 7888.

The bombing cases are not the only cases on our docket arising out of racial conflict. Two years ago, certain individuals instigated an illegal acial boycott of the buses of this city. A Montgomery County Grand Jury conducted an investigation which resulted in indictment of more than eighty persons charged with violating the boycott statue.

"The ringleader of the bus boycott, Martin Luther King, was tried in this court, the trial resulting in a conviction and a fine of $500. This case is now on appeal to the Supreme Court of Alabama.

"Inasmuch as the bombing case are being nolle prossed, I see no useful purpose to be served by continuing the prosecution of the remaining boycott defendants. The "Inasmutch as the bombing cases boycott itself has long since terminated.

"I have, therefore ,entered into an agreement, subject to the approval of this court, that this defendant, Martin Luther King, will dismiss his appeal and pay the fine assessed against him and I will nolle pross the remaining boycott case. I therefore move the court to enter a nolle pross in the following cases, except as to the defendant, M. L. King: numbers, 7399, 7400, 7401, 7402, 7403, 7405, 7406, 7407, 7408 and 7409.

"Prior to 1955, Montgromery County has enjoyed enviable race relations for generations. It is my hope that, with the dismissal of these racial cases, we will return to the mutual respect and trust which formerly existed in this county between the races and that all of our citizens will endeavor to live within both the spirit and the letter of our laws and customs. If so, there will be no occasion in the future for any prosecutions in our courts resulting from racial disturbances.

Nonviolence Comes To America

World Wed. 1-2-57 P. 6

Something may be happening in Alabama which could be of unprecedented significance in the resolving of interracial problems in the United States.

B'ham, Ala.

Last May, when the Negro boycott of Montgomery's segregated city buses was scarce six months old, the Mayor and the police commissioner testified before the federal district court that the end of such segregation would bring "violence and bloodshed."

Last week, when official notification was on its way that the Supreme Court had voided state and local legislation requiring segregation in public conveyances, circulars were distributed by the Montgomery Improvement Association, the Negro organization which had coordinated the bus boycott. Addressed to the Negro community, they admonished:

Do not deliberately sit by a white person unless there is no other seat.

If cursed, do not curse back. If pushed, do not push back. . .

If struck, do not strike back . . .

If another person is being molested, do not arise to go to his defense.

Evidence love and good will at all times.

Here is a doctrine of nonviolence the like of which America has rarely seen since the days colonial Quakers left their latchstrings out as their defense against hostile Indians. The scriptural prompting is manifest:

. . . . . whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. (Matthew 5:39).

Thus far Montgomery has responded overwhelmingly to this approach — if not with inward enthusiasm, certainly with outward calm. The few and minor exceptions reported have been so transparently contrived that they are much more likely to arouse sympathy for the Negroes than to stir up trouble against them:

A white youth slapped a Negro woman and pushed her to the ground; several others "beat up" a 15-year-old girl (acts which the most barefaced propagandist could hardly make heroic).

A white woman claimed a Negro who had boarded a bus had "muttered" at her, and she belabored him with a book in her hand. Neither he nor other Negroes on the bus attempted to stop her. She hurled a reproach at the driver, got off, and entered a car filled with white men which had been following closely.

Someone fired a shotgun blast at the front door of the Rev. Martin Luther King, one of the principal leaders of the boycott and a force in keeping it orderly. No one was injured. The Rev. King quietly told his congregation of the attack the next morning (Sunday), reminding his flock that, no matter what happened, God's love for all things and for all men would continue.

Now the nation is watching Tallahassee, Florida, and Birmingham, Alabama, where Negroes also are beginning to put the Supreme Court's latest ruling into practice. It is not clear as yet whether they have been equally well counseled and self-disciplined in nonviolence. And we cannot know whether Montgomery has seen the end of provocative incidents.

Be that as it may, the Negroes of Alabama's capital have written a saga that cannot but appeal to the Christianity and fairness of Americans, South as well as North, whether or not they welcome this break with their past attitudes and conventions.

Something may be happening in Alabama which could be of unprecedented significance in the resolving of interracial problems in the United States.

Last May, when the Negro boycott of Montgomery's segregated city buses was scarce six months old, the Mayor and the police commissioner testified before the federal district court that the end of such segregation would bring "violence and bloodshed."

Last week, when official notification was on its way that the Supreme Court had voided state and local legislation requiring segregation in public conveyances, circulars were distributed by the Montgomery Improvement Association, the Negro organization which had coordinated the bus boycott. Addressed to the Negro community, they admonished:

Do not deliberately sit by a white person unless there is no other seat.

If cursed, do not curse back. If pushed, do not push back.

If struck, do not strike back.

If another person is being molested, do not arise to go to his defense.

Evidence love and good will at all times.

Here is a doctrine of non-violence the like of which America has rarely seen since the days colonial Quakers left their latchstrings out as their defense against hostile Indians. The scriptural prompting is manifest:

. . . Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. (Matthew 5:39.)

Thus far Montgomery has responded overwhelmingly to this approach—if not with inward enthusiasm, certainly with outward calm. The few and minor exceptions reported have been so transparently contrived that they are much more likely to arouse sympathy for the Negroes than to stir up trouble against them:

A white youth slapped a Negro woman and pushed her to the ground; several others "beat up" a 15-year-old girl (acts which the most barefaced propagandist could hardly make heroic).

A white woman claimed a Negro who had boarded a bus had "muttered" at her, and she belabored him with a book in her hand. Neither he nor other Negroes on the bus attempted to stop her. She hurled a reproach at the driver, got off, and entered a car filled with white men which had been following closely.

Someone fired a shotgun blast at the front door of the Rev. Martin Luther King, one of the principal leaders of the boycott and a force in keeping it orderly. No one was injured. The Rev. King quietly told his congregation of the attack the next morning (Sunday), reminding his flock that, no matter what happened, God's love for all things and for all men would continue.

Now the nation is watching Tallahassee, Florida, and Birmingham, Alabama, where Negroes also are beginning to put the Supreme Court's latest ruling into practice. It is not clear as yet whether they have been equally well counseled and self-disciplined in non-violence. And we cannot know whether Montgomery has seen the end of provocative incidents.

Be that as it may, the Negroes of Alabama's capital have written a saga that cannot but appeal to the Christianity and fairness of Americans, South as well as North, whether or not they welcome this break with their past attitudes and conventions.—The Christian Science Monitor.

CITY POLICE CAR FOLLOWS BUS LEAVING DOWNTOWN AREA
Armed Officers Watched All Final Runs Here Last Night

NIGHT CURFEW STILL IMPOSED

Daytime Bus Return Peaceful In City As Police Force Keeps Close Watch

Montgomery city buses peacefully went back into service yesterday following a six-day suspension imposed by city commission.

No bus was permitted to start on a route after 5:15 p.m., under a continued nighttime curfew resulting from a series of pre-dawn bombings last week and nighttime shootings earlier.

As each bus started its final run from the downtown area last night, a police car pulled up behind it and followed for the complete of the route.

All carriers were at the company's garage by 6:05 p.m. and runs were scheduled to resume this morning at 5:30 a.m.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said squad cars also made spot checks of buses during the day. He said earlier the city's corp of reserve police officers will be used 'to some extent" to give aid to the regular force.

On the Oak Park bus, several passengers talked only of the refuge the bus gave from yesterday's chilling winds and others made only normal conversational comments.

When the bus "picked up" its police escort at Adams and Lawrence, one man said "Well, we've got our friends with us from now on it seems."

The only tension noticed was at one residential area corner when the bus pulled up to a curb and a sharp noise was heard. Two passengers appeared startled, but one woman rider said in a loud voice, "Someday the city's going to clip off those tree limbs. In fact, I might bring my clippers with me in the morning." Everyone laughed.

As three people got off at another stop, each spoke to the driver. One said, "Now, don't you have any trouble tonight." Another commented, "Hope it's quiet for you the rest of the way," and the last said, "Looks like we'll see you again in the morning."

Two Advertiser photographers added possibly the only other "tension" when they began following a police car which was tailing a bus at Columbus and Lawrence. Somewhere in the Chisholm area it became "too apparent the police were worried about us," the photographers said.

One later added, "When the patrolman 'riding' shotgun made it clear to us he was armed, we figured it best to identify ourselves."

The bus stopped at an intersection, and the pair identified themselves. The policemen's only comment was, "Oh." P. 2-A

"This I'll say for them," one of the photographers said. "Both policemen were extraordinarily cautious and watchful."

Riding in the squad car were Lt. L. D. McGhee and Patrolman Paul Headley.

Runs Resume Tomorrow—Bricks Fly In Florida

ATLANTA CITES NEGROES

Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

ATLANTA, Jan. 15. — The South's fires of racial unrest flickered up in one trouble spot Tuesday as quickly as they were stamped out in another.

Montgomery, Ala. decided to resume daytime runs of integrated buses with police cruiser escort. But a shower of bricks on Negro establishements broke the calm at Tallahassee, Fla. In Atlanta, a grand jury indicted six Negro preachers for violating the Georgia Jim Crow law by riding in the white section of a bus.

Courts, Legislatures Fight

In legislatures and courts the struggle also ground on with the issue always the same—will the South bow to Federal orders to break up its old pattern of racial segregation.

Montgomery buses will resume runs Wednesday morning after a six-day suspension following a wave of dynamitings of Negro churches. It was in that city that the first Deep South bus integration began three weeks ago by order of the United States Supreme Court.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said a police car would accompany each bus on its 5:15 p.m. run, the last of the day under the continuing sundown curfew. The night runs were suspended during the holidays when six buses were fired on and a Negro rider wounded.

MONTGOMERY

POLICE PROTECTION

Unidentified persons riding in a jallopy hurled bricks through the windows of two Negro groceries in Tallahassee, where the bus service has just been resumed by permission of Gov. Leroy Collins.

Governor Collins had used his emergency powers to stop the buses after violence in the Florida capital where Negroes last year conducted a boycott of segregated buses similar to one at Montgomery.

Negroes Sit In Rear

Negroes have not attempted to mingle with whites on Tallahassee buses since service was resumed under a new ordinance authorizing drivers to assign seats and, in effect, continue segregation.

One brick volley smashed three windows at the grocery operated by Dan Speed, Tallahassee Negro integration leader. Another broke the plate glass at a market run by George Dupont, another Negro leader. Vandals also smashed windows of two cars parked near Florida A. and M. University for Negroes.

Speed said the Negroes regretted the vandalism "very much."

"We did not think we had such persons living around here," he said. "We thought everybody was interested in . . . advertising Florida's famous sunshine but it seems like some things happen in the moonlight, too."

Six Negro ministers who boarded an Atlanta bus last week and rode six blocks in front seats traditionally occupied by whites were included on misdemeanor charges of violating state segregation laws. The Negroes, who are free on $1,000 bail each, said at the time of their arrest "this is just what we wanted"—an opportunity to make a quick court test of the Georgia Jim Crow Statute which has not been passed on directly.

Virginia Order Stayed

These other developments reflected the complex nature of the integration issue across the far-flung South:

1. Judge John J. Parker of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals stayed for 30 days his order for integration of schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County, Va., which had been scheduled for Jan. 31. The stay was granted to permit an appeal by the State of Virginia to the Supreme Court.

2. Bills were introduced in the Georgia Legislature to abolish compulsory attendance and give the Governor broad powers to act in the event of integration attempts. Gov. Marvin Griffin pointed out that a compulsory attendance law was used to carry out integration in Clinton, Tenn.

3. A bill was put before the South Carolina House to close any integrated public school and invoke state police powers to give the Governor direct control.

Capital buses will run with police escorts

Mont. Ala. Times 1-15-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 15— (AP) —The city commission today authorized city buses to start operating again in Montgomery tomorrow, but only in daylight hours. Some of the buses will have a police escort.

ENDING A SIX-DAY ban on all bus service, the commission voted to permit buses to make their runs until 5:15 p.m. No bus can leave downtown Montgomery after that hour.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said squad cars will accompany all buses that have to run after dark in order to complete their last runs. On some runs, darkness comes before they can complete their routes even though they leave downtown by 5:15 o'clock.

Sellers also said police will "spot check" buses during the daylight operations.

BUSES HAVE been fired on six times since racial segregation ended Dec. 21. One Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs, but no one else has been reported hurt.

Four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers were bombed last Thursday morning in another outbreak of violence. The city commission suspended all bus service that day.

Meanwhile, at a Negro mass meeting last night, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., asked in prayer that if "anyone should be killed, let it be me."

So emotional was the mass meeting that King broke off a prayer and returned to his seat with two other ministers at his side. The young spokesman for Montgomery Negroes denied reports that he had "collapsed in tears."

THE ONLY CASUALTY in six shootings and six bombings since buses were racially integrated Dec. 21, was a Negro woman shot in both legs.

King spoke to a moaning crowd at a regularly scheduled mass meeting. He told the Negroes that they had been "the victims of the most startling and appaling expressing of man's inhumanity to man.

Meanwhile, John Kasper was in Montgomery on what he called private business "indirectly" related to the violence. He said private citizens including some Ku Klux Klan and some Citizens' Council members are arranging rallies for him in the area. Rallies might be scheduled in about a month in Montgomery and in Mobile, Ala., he said.

Leader urges Negroes not to 'sign rights away'

Mobile, Birmingham, Ala. Jan. 29-31

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 29 —(AP)—The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., says some Montgomery Negroes reportedly have been asked "by white persons" to sign a petition seeking permission to operate an all-Negro busline.

King, a Negro Baptist minister who has led the fight against racial segregation, told the Montgomery Improvement Assn. about it last night. He urged the Negroes to stop "before you sign your rights away."

The MIA president said "two or three" Negroes reportedly were approached by white persons on Montgomery city buses and asked to sign the petition.

A GROUP OF white persons have formed a "club" and asked the City Commission for authority to operate a "private" busline which only "club" members could ride.

King made no mention of that last night. City authorities have asked for a federal court ruling on whether the proposed all-white busline would violate an injunction against continued enforcement of segregation restrictions on "public" buses.

The MIA president introduced a visiting Negro minister last night, the Rev. J. Raymond Henderson of the Second Methodist Church in Los Angeles. Henderson contributed $500 raised by his congregation to help Montgomery Negroes in their "struggle for equality."

Montgomery jury deplores violence, blasts high court

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 16—(AP)—A Montgomery County Grand Jury today returned an unspecified number of indictments in the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches in Montgomery.

...number of indictments and names of the defendants were withheld until they could be taken into custody.

...white men were arrested by city police because of events last month and are charged in City Court. But they were among those named by the Grand Jury they recommended on the Grand Jury indictments.

THE GRAND JURY report signed by Foreman Herbert R. ... said that in returning the indictments "we believe we are expressing the feeling of our citizens who believe in law and order, and that they are the majority of our people."

Continuing, the jury said, "we are not unmindful that there is a feeling among some that the people connected with the bombings should go unpunished," but added:

"We believe this feeling can be a complete disregard for law and order; we prefer that problems of maintaining segregation be met openly and honestly rather than with cowardly stealth and violence under cover of darkness."

The jurors said another Grand Jury a year ago took note of the tension between the races and warned that the course of action being directed by the NAACP and the Negro leaders of Montgomery would lead to trouble. That course of action has continued and violence has followed.

THE WARNING WAS A reference to the indictment of 90 Negro leaders in the early part of the boycott of segregated city buses which preceded the end of bus segregation in Montgomery. The Grand Jury returned those indictments at the time that violence threatened if the Negroes continued their boycott.

The Negroes were indicted on charges of violating the state's anti-boycott law but only one, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., has been tried. King was fined $500 and costs and trials of the others have been postponed pending the Negro minister's appeal from that conviction.

IN THE REPORT Saturday, the current Grand Jury spoke critically of recent decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court reversing convictions of two Alabama Negroes, one convicted of rape and the other convicted of nighttime burglary with intent to rape.

The jury said, "The Supreme Court's disregard of the due legal processes of this state lessens our people's respect for justice and law. We attribute our recent violence partly to the decrease in respect for law and order."

CONTINUING, the jurors said:

"We reaffirm our belief in complete segregation. We are determined to maintain it and to maintain law and order as it applies both to those who support segregation and to those who oppose it.

"Our action in returning indictments in these cases of bombing and other violence should not be construed as any weakening in the determination of the people of Montgomery to preserve our segregation institutions."

The grand jury spoke critically of some of the actions of pro-integration Negro leaders in Montgomery and of the United States Supreme Court in reversing convictions of Negroes convicted in Alabama courts.

buses.

The grand jury is expected to make its report tomorrow afternoon or Saturday.

Buses were ambushed six times and a Negro woman passenger shot in both legs after racial segregation was ended last Dec. 21 under federal court order.

Later, four Negro churches, a service station-Taxicab stand and three residences were shattered by dynamite, but no one was hurt. Unexploded bombs were found at the homes of two pro-integration ministers.

Seven white men were arrested by city police and, Commissioner Clyde Sellers said, some of them signed statements admitting participating in the bombings.

Four of the men were charged with bombing two of the Negro churches and the home of one Negro minister, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy. The other three defendants were accused of conspiracy in the unsuccessful attempts to blow up the homes of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and the Rev. Robert Graetz.

King is the leader of the Negro integration movement. Graetz is the white pastor of an all-Negro church.

Charges against the seven men have been continued in city court under an agreement that the warrants will be dismissed if the grand jury fails to indict any of the defendants.

The grand jury convened Monday but has spent most of its time since then investigating other matters.

Call for firm, honest stand against mixing

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 16—(AP)—A Grand Jury, returning indictments in the recent outbreak of racial violence in Montgomery, served notice Saturday that segregation must be preserved without bombs and bullets.

An unspecified number of defendants were indicted on charges growing out of the bombing of Negro homes and churches following the end of segregation on city buses.

Their names and the specific charges against them were withheld until they were taken into custody.

Sheriff's officres were expected to start serving the warrants during the afternoon.

Previous arrests

SEVEN WHITE MEN were arrested by city police last month after four Negro churches, a service station-taxicab stand and three residences were dynamited and integrated city buses were fired on six times.

Circuit Clerk John Matthews who delivered the warrants to the sheriff's office said no indictments were returned against three of the seven defendants who had been charged with misdemeanor offense.

These were Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap, who had been charged with conspiracy to commit a felony in connection with unexploded bombs found outside homes of two pro-integration ministers.

All seven defendants are free on city bonds and, the others if indicted, must be rearrested on the Grand Jury charges.

The 18-man all-white Grand Jury, in returning the indictments, said "We believe we are expressing the feeling of our citizens who believe in law and order, and that they are a great majority of our people."

Continuing, the report said "We are not unmindful that there is a feeling among some that the people connected with the bombings should go unpunished," but added:

'Openly and honestly'

"WE PREFER that the problems of maintaining segregation be met openly and honestly rather than with cowardly stealth and violence under cover of darkness."

News

The jurors said "We are determined to maintain" racial segregation in Montgomery but also to "maintain law and order as it applies both to those who support segregation and to those who oppose it."

P.2-A

"Our action in returning indictments . . . should not be construed as any weakening in the determination of the people of Montgomery to preserve our segregated institutions."

The Grand Jury spoke critically of some of the actions of pro-integration Negro leaders in Montgomery and of the U. S. Supreme Court in reversing convictions of Negroes convicted in Alabama courts.

Warned of violence

RECALLING that another Grand Jury a year ago had warned of threatened violence because of "the course of action being directed by the NAACP and the Negro leaders of Montgomery who were fighting segregation," the jurors observed today:

"That course of action has continued and violence has followed."

The warning last year came from a Grand Jury which indicted 90 Negro leaders of the mass boycott of segregated city buses which preceded the end of segregation.

A federal court suit which brought the Supreme Court decision outlawing bus segregation laws grew out of the long boycott. Negroes who had refused to ride segregated buses for more than a year gave up their protest last Dec. 21 when the bus integration order went into effect.

Woman shot

VIOLENCE followed within a few days. Buses were ambushed with gunfire and a Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs.

Then early in the morning of Jan. 10, dynamite bombs shattered four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy and the Rev. Robert S. Graetz. Another bomb failed to explode at the home of Graetz, a white pastor of a Negro church.

Seventeen days later, a Negro service station-taxicab stand and an adjoining Negro residence were bombed and an unexploded bomb containing 12 sticks of dynamite was found at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a Negro minister who has led the integration fight.

Arrests followed quickly and on Jan. 30 Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers called a news conference to announce the arrest of the seven white men. He said "some of them" had signed statements admitting participation in the violence.

Court criticism

THE GRAND JURY'S criticism of the Supreme Court dealt with the reversal of the convictions of Jeremiah Reeves, who was sentenced to death for raping a white woman in Montgomery, and William Earl Fikes, given the death penalty for burglary with intent to rape at Selma.

The Fikes conviction was set aside because the high court said a confession was improperly obtained. No reason was cited for the Reeves reversal, but his attorneys has challenged the absence of Negores on the trial jury.

The Grand Jury said the Supreme Court's actions constituted a "disregard of the due legal processese of this state" and that it "lessens our people's respect for justice and law."

"We attribute our recent violence partly to the decrease in respect for law and order," the report declared.

Jury's Report On Bomb Case Awaited Today

Advertiser p. 1 Sat. 2-16-57 Montgomery

By JO ANN FLIRT

The Montgomery County Grand Jury last night completed its investigation of recent bombings and bus shootings here and voted its decision on whether to return indictments against seven men linked with the violence.

Results of the vote in which 12 of the 18 jurors must agree will not be known until after the jury reports at noon today and the persons indicted, if any, have been arrested.

Yesterday's testimony marked the second day of the jury's probe into the incidents for which seven Montgomery white men were arrested by city police.

Preliminary Recorder's Court hearings in the cases were passed until Feb. 28 after prosecution and defense counsel agreed that the four felony cases and three misdemeanor cases would go before the grand jury which ordinarly indicts only on felonies.

FELONY CHARGES

Charged with dynamiting the occupied home of a Negro minister, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, are Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York. Alexander also is charged in connection with a bus shooting.

Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. are charged with felonies in connection with the bombing of unoccupied dwellings.

Conspiracy charges—misdemeanors—in connection with the violence have been placed against Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap.

In and out of the grand jury room yesterday were city detectives J. D. Shows and T. J. Ward and State Toxicologist Van Pruitt Jr. Detective Capt. E. P. Brown testified for about 30 minutes during the morning but remained on hand all day as did others who had testified.

OTHER WITNESSES

Other law enforcement officers testifying were Chief State Investigator T. J. Carlisle and Lt. Louis H. Phillips, both of the State Department of Public Safety, and Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler.

Present in the witness room but not called to testify were State Toxicologist William T. McVay and State Investigator Jacob D. Kreiss.

On Thursday the grand jury heard testimony from Shows, Van Pruitt, J. H. Bagley, manager of Montgomery City Lines; William H. Fullilove, driver of one of the buses fired upon, and J. D. Brooks, another bus line employe.

The two days of testimony were capped by the presentation to the grand jury of two tape recordings. Although a sound machine had been brought to the witness room, Toxicologist Pruitt entered the jury room with only the tapes and remained for about 20 minutes, leaving the machine outside.

45-MINUTE DELIBERATION

Shortly afterward, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford and Deputy Solicitors Robert Stewart and Maury Smith left the jurors during their 45-minute deliberation on the cases. p. 16-A

Earlier in the afternoon jurors heard brief testimony from five white men not connected with either the state or local police force.

They were C. A. Alexander, father of defendant Henry Alexander; A. T. Parker, Jimmie Clyde Poole, George Sexton and one unidentified man.

Poole and Parker had waited all day Thursday to testify; the unidentified witness appeared for the first time yesterday morning, and Sexton arrived in midafternoon. Sat. 2-16-57

It was 4:45 p.m. when the jury began its long deliberation. Solicitor Thetford was not signalled to return to the room until 5:30. Ten minutes later the jury ended its week-long session during which nearly 200 witnesses had been examined and numerous cases not connected with racial violence had been considered.

3 In Bus Case Will Not Face Grand Jurors

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Tues. 2-5-57

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said yesterday the charges pending against three of the seven white men held for racial violence in Montgomery won't be presented to a grand jury.

Thetford explained that Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap are charged only with misdemeanors and City Judge Eugene Loe will have final jurisdiction.

The other four men—James D. York, Henry Alexander, Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr.—are charged with felonies and could be indicted by the grand jury and tried in state court.

Hall, Bodiford and Dunlap are accused of conspiracy in the throwing of bombs which failed to explode during the wave of violence which followed the end of racial segregation on city buses in Montgomery.

FINAL DETERMINATION

Since the charges are misdemeanors, the solicitor said Loe will have the final determination when he conducts hearings Friday morning. Maximum penalty for the misdemeanors is $1,000 fine plus six months' hard labor.

Although Loe is city recorder, he also is ex-officio justice of the peace and committing magistrate for the state.

All seven men face hearings before Loe Friday—Hall, Bodiford and Dunlap on the misdemeanors and the other four on preliminary hearings on the felony charges against them.

If Hall, Bodiford and Dunlap are convicted, they can appeal to state court.

TRIALS TO OPEN FRIDAY

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 5.—Seven white men charged with the recent bombings of integration leaders' homes and Negro churches here have all stated they are innocent, their lawyers said Tuesday.

The law firm of Hill, Hill, Whiting and Harris, in a prepared statement, said the charges against the seven are "false, and directly inspired by the NAACP."

Kasper Offers Aid

Meanwhile, segregationist John Kasper of Washington, visiting friends here, said he will help the seven white men "if there is any way I can. I would be only too glad to help."

Three of the seven are charged only with misdemeanors and their cases will be handled by City Judge Eugene Loe, who will have final jurisdiction.

Eugene Hall, hCarlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap are charged with conspiracy in throwing dynamite bundles that didn't explode at the homes of pro-integration leaders. Hearings on the misdemeanors will be conducted Friday morning.

The other four, who also will be heard Friday before Judge Loe, are James D. York, Henry Alexander, Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr.

Ministers Criticized

York and Alexander face charges that carry possible death sentences.

Attorneys for the men Tuesday blasted Rev. M. L. King and Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy for signing the wararnts that formally arrested the men.

"The defendants all state emphatically that they are innocent of these false charges which have been brought against them," the law firm stated.

"They are convinced that these charges were directly inspired by the NAACP, of which Martin Luther King Jr. and Ralph D. Abernathy are admitted nationwide leaders.

Attempt To Destroy Them

"They are further convinced that these charges were brought in an attempt by the NAACP to destroy them because of their conscientious and active fight against the NAACP to maintain segregation in our schools and elsewhere and to maintain our Southern heritage and way of life."

The law firm said it would "fight these charges every inch of the way." The attorneys also said they hoepd the men "will be acquitted and vindicated by a jury of their peers."

Slated to go before the investigating body are the cases of seven white men arrested by city police and charged in connection with the several incidents of firing upon city buses and the bombings of Negro homes and churches.

Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York are charged with the capitol offense of dynamiting the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr. are charged with felonies in connection with the bombing of unoccupied buildings, both residences and churches and Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap are charged with conspiracy in connection with the violence.

CHIEF WITNESS

The chief witness before the jury yesterday was City Detective J. D. Shows who testified for more than an hour and a half.

His testimony was followed by that of William H. Fullilove, driver of a city bus which was fired upon during the wave of violence that followed the integration of buses by court order Dec. 21. J. D. Brooks, another city bus line employe, also testified.

Testifying briefly was J. H. Bagley, manager of Montgomery City Lines.

The last witness to go before the jury before it recessed at 5 p.m. was Vann J. Pruitt, state toxicologist. An unidentified Negro man testified immediately after the jury began its afternoon session, but it was not known whether he was connected with the bombing probe.

Witnesses observed waiting to appear before the investigating body included C. A. Alexander, father of one of the defendants, Henry Alexander; Det. Capt. E. P. Brown and Det. T. J. Ward of the Montgomery City police force; Cheif State Investigator T. J. Carlisle, Lt. Louis H. Phillips and Jacob M. Kreiss, also of the State Department of Public Safety, two Selma highway patrolmen, and others.

RESUMES TODAY

Investigations are scheduled to resume today at 9 a.m. with possible testimony by witnesses not called yesterday and any others whom the jury might choose to hear.

Conducting the testimony yesterday were Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford and Deputy Solicitors Robert Stewart and Maury Smith.

Despite the small number of witnesses to file into the small, soundproof jury room yesterday, speculation still sets late today or tomorrow morning as the time when the jury will make its final report.

Findings will not be made public until any indictments which might be returned are served on the defendants by the sheriff's department. Advertiser P. 2-A

City Recorder's Court Judge Eugene Loe has stated that any of the defendants, first scheduled to come before his court, whom the grand jury fails to indict will not be prosecuted by the city.

The Recorder's Court hearing originally set for Feb. 8 was continued until Feb. 22 with an agreement between the defense and prosecution that all seven cases would go before the grand jury.

The county grand jury convened Monday and has already heard testimony from more than 100 witnesses in other cases before it.

White-Only Buses Asked In Alabama

Compiled From Wire Reports

Reported efforts to organize a new all-white bus system for Montgomery, Ala., came to light Friday in the wake of racial violence that left that city without public transportation for the second day.

The only exising busline, Montgomery City Lines, Inc., was ordered by the city commission to suspend service indefinitely Thursday after four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were bombed.

Buses have been targets of violent attacks, too, since segregation was abolished Dec. 21 under federal court order. Five buses have been ambushed with gunfire, one of them twice, and a Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs.

Meanwhile, in Chattanooga, Tenn., about midnight Thursday a man crouching in a culvert hurled two gasoline-filled bottles at a Chattanooga bus near Rossville, Ga., a suburb.

Walker County, Ga., Sheriff John Brock said driver Frank Bailey reported he was making his final run when the bottles, which Russian guerrillas called "Molotov Cocktails" in World War II, were thrown. One hit the road in front of the bus and the other bounced off the rear bumper without doing damage. Six or seven white passengers were on the bus at the time.

Actually, there had been no integration of buses in Chattanooga. But the Southern Coach Lines, operators of city buses which also run from the Tennessee city to suburbs in North Georgia, announced early this week that the last screens separating the races had been removed from the vehicles.

Negroes, however, had continued to file toward the rear for seats with whites sitting up front in the traditional Dixie pattern.

Constitution p. 3

In Norfolk, Va., meanwhile, U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman ruled that Virginia's new law providing every pupil in the state is subject to placement in a particular school is unconstitutional because it is "directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court."

Hoffman denied motions for dismissal of segregation suits against the school boards of Norfolk and Newport News, Va. Attorneys for the school boards said the new pupil-placement program offers administrative remedies for Negro plaintiffs before going into federal court. The law provides appeal first to the three-man state placement board, then to the governor and finally to the state courts if the pupil assignments are not satisfactory.

Two Montgomery city attorneys and a member of the Alabama Legislature conferred with U.S District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., more than an hour Friday reportedly about the proposed new all-white transit line.

Johnson is one of two federal judges who ruled bus segregation invalid last June 5 and issued an injunction prohibiting continued enforcement of segregation laws on city lines buses "or any other public bus transportation facility."

The injunction was suspended pending an appeal to the Supreme Court and went into effect Dec. 21 after the higher court upheld the integration decree.

Attorneys who conferred with Johnson today reportedly sought to learn whether an all-white bus line operated by a "club" whose "members" alone could ride the buses would violate the court injunction.

The proposed bus line would operate as a "private" system with only members of a "club" allowed to ride. Membership would be limited to white passengers.

In Tallahassee, Fla., Gov. Leroy Collins Friday ordered Tallahassee bus service resumed.

The governor had suspended operation of buses Jan. 1 after incidents of violence followed a decision by Tallahassee Negroes to start "riding integrated."

He said the resumption of service will test "the good will prevailing among and between the people of both races and of the ability of the bus company to furnish a needed public service with due regard to every citizen."

Plans Announced To Organize White Bus Line In Montgomery

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Sat. 1-12-57

By JO ANN FLIRT

A local attorney confirmed last night that he represents a group seeking to organize a new all-white bus system to operate in Montgomery on a "club" plan.

State Rep. O. J. Goodwyn, who declined to name the persons who retained him, reportedly conferred earlier yestrday with city officials who would have to approve a new transit line before it could operate.

He later accompanied City Attys. Walter Knabe and Drayton Hamilton in an hour-long conference with U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., one of two federal judges who ruled bus segregation here unconstitutional last June.

Neither Judge Johnson nor members of the delegaion would comment on the subject of the conference. City officials presumably are concerned with the possibility of being in contempt of a federal court injunction ordering them to refrain from enforcing segregation laws on public buses.

Speculation yesterday centered around a legal move planned by city officials, but no papers had been filed when the District Clerk's office closed.

Knabe declined to say whether the city will seek federal advice —possibly by a petition requesting further instructions, or by clarification of the recent court order.

The proposed new transit system would operate as a "private" line with only members of a club allowed to ride. Membership would be limited to white persons.

Negro leaders were turned down when they requested authority to operate their own bus service here during the year-long boycott. The City Commission denied its request on grounds that Montgomery City Lines, Inc., only existing bus line here, offered "adequate" bus service.

Advertiser

The bus line has halted all operations following an outbreak of violence culminated by six bombings in Negro neighborhoods before dawn Thursday. Earlier, five buses were ambushed by gunfire and a Negro woman passenger wounded in both legs.

The planned all-white bus service would be the third type transportation system other than the city lines proposed here during the past year.

A car pool, composed largely of church - owned station wagons, was operated by Negro boycotters before halted by court order. City attorneys argued the motor pool operation was a "private enterprise" operating without a license rather than a share-the-ride pool as Negroes claimed.

Whites Seek Private Line In Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (ANP)- Resumption of the city's newly integrated bus service and the organization of a new-all-white bus system to operate on a "club" plan, are the latest developments in the city's transportation picture.

Bus service was resumed again after a six-day stoppage, ordered after shots were fired at six buses and some Negro churches had been bombed.

The buses operated on a limited, daylight schedule, with the last trips starting at 5:15 P.M. Police guards are assigned to buses finishing their last runs.

Sat. 2-2-57

Somes buses carried Negro passengers only. Others carried a few whites and no Negroes. When Negroes and whites rode the same buses, Negroes could be found in the middle and onto the rear, while the whites occupied the front section.

While this seems as if the citizens were working out their own methods of integration, there was still another group of whites, headed by a local Atty. and state representative, which is seeking to organize an all-white bus system to operate on a "Club" plan.

O. J. Goodwyn, who declined to reveal names of persons who retained him, conferred with city officials and later with U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., one of two jurists who ruled bus segregation unconstitutional here last June.

The proposed bus line would operate as a "private" line with only members of a club allowed to ride--such membership being limited to white persons.

During the height of the boycott, some Negroes petitioned the city to operate their own bus service, but the request was denied.

Bus Curfew Seems Likely To Continue

Advertiser Wed. 1-2-57 Montgomery, Ala. P. 1

Montgomery city buses probably will continue to be held to a 5 p.m. curfew, a city commissioner said last night.

City Commissioner Frank Parks said, however, that he doubted the city commission would vote to curtail early morning runs of Montgomery City Lines buses. All runs were ordered halted at 5 p.m. daily by decision of the commission last Saturday.

The subject is slated for discussion at the commission's regular 11 a.m. meeting today in City Hall. No special session on the bus shootings — which total five in 10 days — is scheduled, Parks said.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers last night was hopeful that 20 newly created openings on the police force will be filled as soon as possible.

The commissioners voted Monday night at an informal meeting to increase the force "in the interest of public safety."

Advertiser P. 2-a

Sellers said successful applicants will be put to work immediately after screening. They will be thoroughly briefed in theory and practice of police routine and will work with experienced officers.

The police commissioner said the boosting of the force to 175 uniformed and plain clothes officers has had the effect of building morale on the force. He added that the city's police force now is at the highest point in its history.

Montgomery bus curfew extended

News Thurs. 1-3-57 P. 3A Montgomery, Ala.

BY TRUDY CARGILE
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 3— A curfew on Montgomery's city buslines was extended another week yesterday while the City Commission at the same time ordered an additional budget to provide more police protection for the capital city.

Stating that outbreaks of violence over integration on the city buslines constitutes a state of emergency, the commission extended a temporary 5 p.m. curfew to avert "loss of life, health and property" in Montgomery.

The resolution extending the curfew period, however, is subject to revocation or suspension before Jan. 8 through which it is valid.

In the meantime, members of the personnel department are taking applications toward adding an authorized 20 men to the police force in Montgomery.

An emergency appropriation of $60,000 was approved by the commission yesterday to meet the necessary expense incidental to adding the 20 policemen.

HOPES OF filling the quota immediately were slim yesterday although more than the number needed had filed application. Examinations, both mental and physical, must be passed before the men can qualify, examiners stated.

The Commission, in authorizing the additional police force, stated that it was the board's opinion that all possible steps should be taken to provide peace and order and to prevent further disorder growing out of unrest over the integrated bus system olence here yesterday.

Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioners Frank Parks and Clyde Sellers took the action at an extraordinary commission meeting yesterday morning spurred by dynamite blasts that rocked four Negro churches and the homes of two leaders of the Negro Montgomery Improvement Assn.

The mayor said the proposed curfew of Montgomery youth was only a safety precaution. He said he did not think that teen-agers were responsible for the bombings.

Earlier yesterday, a City Lines bus had been fired upon with a shotgun. The shooting took place scant hours after the commission had lifted a 5 p.m. curfew placed on city buses as a result of previous shootings.

BOMBINGS DEPLORED

The commission said they deplored the bombings and urged Montgomerians to remain calm while police restored law and order.

"Parents of all teen-age children, white and colored, male and female," were urged by the commission to "know the whereabouts of their children at all times and have them at home by 12 o'clock midnight unless accompanied by a parent."

Bus service is halted, the commission said, to protect "life, limb and property" of city residents.

"This has become necessary because of the firing on a bus last evening, making a total of six such incidents. The suspension is for an indefinite period or until something further can be worked out," the commission said.

NO HELP NEEDED

"The Board of Commissioners does not deem it necessary to call for extra help from any other agency at this time as we are of the opinion that our forces are adequate to maintain law and order within our jurisdiction."

"The City Commission deplores the recent bombings and are thankful that no injuries or loss of life resulted from the incidents. We are using every effort possible to apprehend the persons guilty.

'REMAIN CALM'

"The City Commission admonishes the people of Montgomery to remain calm and cool-headed, in order that we may enjoy the peaceful and progressive life to which we are accustomed in this city.

"The Board of Commissioners has already authorized 20 additional new policemen to supplement our present police force. The Personnel Boad is calling for applications and is acting on them immediately.

"Commissioner Sellers has called his auxiliary policemen into action to assist the regular police force in patroling the city to maintain law and order."

Montgomery Sundown Curfew On Buses Will End Tonight

Courier Journal Louisville, Ky. P. 3

By The United Press

The City of Montgomery, Ala., decided yesterday to lift the sundown curfew on buses, because of "good co-operation" from the public.

In Florida, Governor LeRoy Collins said in his inaugural address the State is ready for bus integration if it is not made compulsory.

Shots Brought Curfew

A series of sniper shots from the dark prompted Montgomery to put a curfew on bus runs after 5 p.m. during the Christmas holidays and the curtailed service later was extended through last night. One Negro rider was wounded by the sniper fire.

It was in Montgomery that the first court-approved integration on buses began last month after the United States Supreme Court ordered bus segregation ended. Negroes boycotted the bus line for a year before they won their case.

The City Commission decided not to extend the curfew further when Mayor W. A. Gayle reported, "We have had a number of requests to reinstate the service."

"We have had good co-operation from the public," he said.

Extra Police Likely

When the buses return to normal night service tonight no extra-ordinary precautions will be taken, said Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers.

However, the City has authorized the hiring of 20 additional police officers to handle possible outbreaks in connection with the integration program.

Florida's Governor Collins, inaugurated for a second term, said that schools cannot be integrated in his state in "the foreseeable future." But he said Florida appears ready for some forms of racial integration, such as on the buses, and can gain nothing by defying the courts.

At the same time Collins added, "It is folly for anyone to expect judicial distinction to compel social adjustments." The Governor devoted half of his address to the segregation-vs.-integration problem.

Collins asserted, "Boycotts, ultimatums, and peremptory demands can never achieve what persuasion, peaceful petition, and normal judicial procedures can do for the Negro race."

'Setting An Example'

Negro leaders hailed Collins for "setting an example" for officialdom on the integration issue.

But Negro leaders in Tallahassee attacked the new City plan to make bus drivers responsible for assigning seats so as to preserve order, without regard to race as such.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of integration forces, called the new ordinance "merely a delaying tactic to evade the spirit and letter" of court decisions against segregation on common carriers.

Montgomery Buses Halted After Violence

Courier-Journal P. 7 Fri. 1-11-57 Louisville, Ky.

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 10 (AP)—The worst outbreak of violence since the fight began over bus segregation left troubled Montgomery without public transportation today.

City authorities halted bus service indefinitely after night-riding assailants bombed four Negro churches and the homes of two antisegregation ministers today. No one was reported injured.

Resolution Adopted

The City Commission order suspending bus-line operations "until further notice" forced thousands of bus riders, both white and Negro, to find other means of transportation to and from work.

The City Commission adopted a resolution at an emergency meeting to prohibit further bus service "until further action of the commission."

At the same time, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers ordered all auxiliary policemen on duty.

The Rev. Robert Graetz, a pro-integration white clergyman who has been active in the fight against racial barriers, escaped unhurt along with members of his family when one of the bombs tore down a door at his home.

But police said another bomb tossed in Graetz' front yard might have caused death or serious injury except for a faulty fuse. Officers found 11 sticks of unexploded dynamite tied to a metal tube.

Home, 4 Churches Hit

The bomb throwers also shattered the home of another integration leader, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a Negro minister, and four churches, including the Negro First Baptist where Abernathy is pastor.

Governor James E. Folsom inspected the damage and offered a $2,000 reward for arrest and conviction of the bomb throwers.

Folsom also conferred with Mayor W. A. Gayle and said he is ready to offer State police or National Guard troops if needed.

Ministers Issue Statement

A grou pof about 25 white ministers, including Graetz, issued a statement calling for "an act of repentance" by all citizens and an offer of "fervent thanks" that there were no injuries.

"Whatever our differences of opinion may be, we cannot remain silent and allow our community to lapse into the barbarity of terrorism and intimidation," the ministers said.

The Montgomery Advertiser said in an editorial that "buses should run on schedule . . . as a symbol that the police apparatus of our Government has not abdicated."

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 3—(AP)—Handbills urging Montgomery Negroes to rebel against their leadership were distributed in Negro residential neighborhoods again today.

The circulars apparently were directed this time against the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn. and leader of the bus boycott.

As before, the message circulated before dawn today professed to speak for a segment of the Negro population. It referred to "Luther" and said "we get shot at while he rides." It said "he is getting us in more trouble every day," and added:

"Wake up. Run him out of town."

City buses have been fired on five times and one Negro woman passenger wounded since bus segregation ended here Dec. 21.

Montgomery, Ala. — Handbills urging Negroes to repudiate the leadership of Rev. Martin Luther King were passed out here for the second time in recent weeks.

The leaflets, which purports to speak for a segment of the Negro population, were obviously aimed at Rev. King. They referred to "Luther" and said "we get shot at while he rides."

The handbills urged: "Wake up. Run him out of town."

As on a previous occasion, the leaflets, which possibly is the work of pro-segregationists, were distributed before dawn.

So far no faction of the Negro population is known to be favoring Rev. King's ouster.

'Carry On In Christian Way For Rights' Urges Rev. King

Weekly Sat. 2-9-57 New Orleans, La.

"We can't understand how the federal government can be so concerned about what happens to Hungary and the Hungarians and not be concerned about what happens to the Negroes in the South."

That was the down-to-earth, though-provoking parallel of the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery during his address Friday night at the Coliseum Arena before approximately 2500 "tired and true souls" who braved the inclement weather and White Citizen's Council threats." The Mass meet was sponsored by the United Clubs, Inc.

"The problems in Birmingham," asserted the noted minister who has been repeatedly named the "Modern Moses" because of his fighting spirit to free his people to live by law and not by the whims of bigoted Dixiecrats, "are as important as the problems in Budapest."

"We have come a long, long way," declared Dr. King, "and we have a long long way to go," in noting the changing attitudes during the advancement of Negroes.

Commenting on the present-day conditions in the Southland, he explained: "The tension in the South can be traced to the Negro's determination to suffer, sacrifice and even die if necessary for his freedom," pointing out that "we will be able to see old man segregation come to his death-bed despite of the fact that many will mourn the passing of the dear old brother."

Charging that the formation of so-called White Citizens Councils are merely the revival of the notorious Ku Klux Klan, Dr. King said that "there have been actual reprisals against Negroes and even whites who dare to take action in behalf of freedom. But we will somehow reach the point of pushing the image of God into the head of even the most ardent segregationist."

Making an overt appeal to the U. S. government's legislative and executive branches and judicial branch, he stated that Negroes today are either extremely optimistic or extremely pessimistic about progress in race relations.

"The extreme optimist," he added, "would say that we've come a long, long way. And points proudly to the enormous strides made over the last few decades, and concludes that the problem is now just about solved. That we can sit down and take it easy."

Pic 2-9-57

However, he continued, the extreme pessimist would say only minor strides have been made and would contend that the present tension is certain sections indicate that "we have created more problems than we have solved."

These attitudes, he said, must be balanced one against the other in arriving at the truths of the two opposites.

He said: "We are still confronted with hidden segregation in the North and glaring segregation in the South. But I say that if Democracy is to live, segregation has to die. It is an evil we must seek to eliminate."

"Unfortunately," he reported, "we are a race that has been betrayed by both the Democrats and the Republicans. The Democrats have betrayed us to the Dixiecrats and the Republicans have betrayed us to the radical nothern Republicans. But I tell you we are not going to be a political football any longer. The most decisive step we can make is that walk to the voting booth and we've got to continue to give big money to the cause of freedom."

Stating that the White Citizens Councils are aware of the losing battle they are waging to block the Supreme Court decisions, he urged Negroes to "carry on the struggle in a Christian-way, without violence," predicting that the legal fight for integration will be won by 1963 if the Negro refuses to "cooperate" with segregation.

Others appearing on the program were the Rev. Eugene P. McManus, S.S.J., chairman of the Louisiana Council of Human Rights, invocation; Joseph Verret, vice-president of the UCI; Rev. T. J. Jemison, pastor of Mount Zion Baptist church, Baton Rouge; Belford V. Lawson, Washington, D. C. attorney; Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., head of the New Orleans Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance; Dr. Leonard L. Burns, president, UCI; the Rev. Robert D. Hill, minister of Mt. Zion Methodist Church; Dr. W. R. Adams, president, New Orleans Imprivement League, and Raymond Floyd, master of ceremonies.

Dr. King Enters Hagiology Of Methodist Church

A BAPTIST, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, has attained sainthood in a Methodist publication. This seems notable for at least two reasons, and maybe more.

Montgomery, Ala.

The hagiographer (one who writes of the lives of saints) who calls Dr. King "saint" is a professor of Christian doctrine at Candler School of Theology, Emory University—Claude Thompson.

In a Sunday school lesson guide, Prof. Thompson writes:

WE ARE not aware of the evaluation process employed by Theologian Thompson in sainting Dr. King. Whether the "vision" recently described by Dr. King as having come to him was the clinching qualification is undisclosed. But perhaps so inasmuch as Dr. King's coadjutor, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, an equally commanding figure in the Negro leadership here, is not certified a saint by Prof. Thompson.

IT HAS often seemed to us that Dr. King is as little known in Montgomery as he is in the North, where citizens must rely upon a hysterical Harriet Beecher Stowe press that recklessly and incompetently makes the infinitely complex as simple as falling off a log.

The Eliza-on-the-ice newspapers of the North have already consigned Dr. King to The Ages in a seat on the same row with A. Lincoln.

They chatter about the triumph of the bus boycott. They are such superficial, unstable reporters that they have never stopped to consider a mountain of a fact, which is to say that the boycott never seated one single colored passenger by one single white passenger. Not one.

In that single respect, the boycott accomplished nothing but a glowering division between the white and colored communities in Montgomery and a killing drain on the Chicago treasury of the bus line.

The whites had the buses to themselves, colored citizens had their forms of transportation, and the boycott could have gone on for years without achieving a single incident of mixed seating.

By last summer whites had even ceased to discuss the boycott; it was out of sight and out of mind.

This is not to deal with the possibility that the boycott served the aspiration of colored leaders in indirect ways—only that the boycott achieved not one of its stated goals.

WHAT the Northern press overlooks is that it was not the boycott, but the United States Supreme Court that made the difference. The boycott ended with the court order. And the court order could have been obtained without the hardship of the boycott to colored citizens and the bus line.

The boycott was a remarkable demonstration, but it did not accomplish its stated goals. And today, even with the court order, there is generally a state of voluntary apartness on buses.

learned, he is a visionary with a remarkable lack of grasp of Montgomery circumstances and attitudes. The Rev. Abernathy and other colored leaders understand whites much better than Dr. King.

Many Montgomerians over-simplify what exists here. They like to believe that if Dr. King had not assumed leadership, there would be no struggle. The truth is, of course, had Dr. King not emerged as leader, any of 25 others would have, as everywhere else. What Montgomery faces is a phase of a long historical process that commenced in 1865 and will be going on years from now.

NEGRO leadership in the South has come to think that what it seeks can be obtained by policies of governments and decrees of courts. It can't, of course. Economic importance alone is worth more than all the court decrees, and recognition won by that means does not have to be policed.

Rash Northern zealots suppose that there is going to be some breakthrough that will uncork a tidy Hollywood ending. A lot of Southerners say that nothing will ever change, and a few of these believe it.

What seems to be happening is that the loud, headlong battering on the structure has unscrambled the groups and arrayed them into opposing, hostile groups. A condition of stalemate and checkmate, shifting and changing in their forms, is apparently developing.

More and more it seems to us that nothing much is going to change soon.

The reason for this is that you are dealing primarily with attitudes and convictions. One way or the other, the essential apartness of the races will endure in the South, as it does in the North.

Alabama Court Frees 3 Negroes, Fines White

Post-Times Herald 5-B
Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 22 (AP)—A 31-year-old white man was fined $50 and costs today for hitting a Negro woman in a fight over a seat on a racially integrated city bus.

City Judge Eugene Loe told James E. Grice Jr. of Montgomery in pronouncing the sentence that "your past record for violence is known to the court." Loe said Grice had been convicted previously of fighting and resisting arrest.

Loe dismissed charges against one of three Negro women also arrested after the scuffle last Tuesday. He acquitted the other two after hearing the evidence.

The fight, which developed after Grice asked Josephine Boldin, 19, to give him her seat and move to the rear of the bus was the first reported incident of violence since shortly after city buses were ordered integrated last Dec. 21.

Loe acquitted Miss Boldin and Annie Burch, 37, who said she went to the other woman's assistance when Grice started beating her with a wrench. Mrs. Burch said the man also struck her.

Charges against Johnnie Mae Eaves were dismissed after evidence indicated Mrs. Eaves wasn't involved.

All three women testified Grice started beating Miss Boldin after ordering her to move. Grice didn't take the stand himself, but police had quoted him earlier as saying Miss Boldin slapped him first.

Grice said he would appeal.

Man Fined $50, Women Freed In Bus Fight

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Aug 4 3-3-57

By NELSON COLE

A 31-year-old white man was found guilty yesterday of "provoking a fight" with two Negro women on a Montgomery city bus and fined $50 and costs for assaut and battery.

Assault and battery cases against the women were dismissed.

Recorder's Court Judge D. Eugene Loe found James E. Grice Jr., 17 Pickett St., guilty and told him "your past record of violence is known to this court." Grice appealed the decision to the Circuit Court.

Cases were dismissed against Josephine Boldin, 20, and Annie Burch, 37, both of Route 3, Lower Wetumpka Rd. A third case against Johnnie Mae Eaves, 32, Route 3, Flatwood Rd., was dropped after seven witnesses and Grice said she was not involved in the scuffle.

Witnesses said the fight, on a Boylston bus, developed last Tuesday when Grice gave up his seat to a white woman, then ordered Johephine Boldin to get up and used abusive language.

The Boldin woman testified Grice started hitting her on the arm with a pipe wrench before she could attempt to get up. Annie Burch said she entered the fight "to help Josephine and after Grice also hit me with the wrench."

The police record to which Judge Loe referred showed that since 1950 Grice has been convicted of four disorderly conduct charges as well as for assault and battery, resisting arrest and fighting.

Racist Draws $50 Fine In Ala. Bus Row

Courier Pitts. Sat. 5-4-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (ANP)—A $50 fine was levied on a white man here who allegedly struck a Negro woman with a wrench when she refused to move to the rear of a racially integrated bus after he ordered her to take another seat.

The man James E. Grice, jr., was convicted in City court by Judge Eugene Loe on charges of assault and battery after witnesses testified he struck Mrs. Josephine Boldin, 19, and Mrs. Annie Burch. Mrs. Boldin was reportedly struck with a wrench.

The incident was the first act of violence stemming from the racially integrated buses since shortly after the vehicles were ordered desegregated by a federal court order last Dec. 21.

Southern Courts Still Uphold The Law

IT WILL in all probability be ignored completely by the Northern press, but an Alabama court this week fined a white man for assault in attempting to force a Negro woman to give up her seat in a desegregated city bus in Montgomery. 5-3-57

The man drew a $50 fine and costs in Montgomery city court for hitting a Negro woman. All charges against three Negro women involved in the affair were dropped by the judge.

Testimony showed the man gave up his seat in the front of the bus to a white woman and then demanded that the Negro woman in a center seat give him the seat she was occupying. She refused, he struck her, the two other Negro women went to the first one's defense. The bus driver stopped the vehicle and called a policeman.

It is of course unfortunate that it occurred. But Montgomery's city court and police department should be given credit for acting promptly and properly in handling the matter. It also should be noted that it was not necessary for the NAACP to make capital of the matter and bring in a battery of lawyers to help the city prosecutor.

The South is not as wild and disorderly and rebellious as it is sometimes painted. Neither are its courts as one-sided as some outsiders would have the public believe.

There are matters which it cannot accept under present circumstances. But its people as a whole are not going to condone brutality and violence in resisting the change.

White Man Fined In Bus Seat Row

Hit Negro Woman In Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, April 22 (AP)—A 31-year-old white man with a past "record for violence" was fined $50 and costs today for hitting a Negro woman in a fight over a seat on a racially integrated city bus.

City Judge Eugene Loe told James E. Grice Jr., of Montgomery in pronouncing the sentence that "your past record for violence is known to the court." Loe said Grice has been convicted previously of fighting and resisting arrest.

Loe dismissed charges against one of three Negro women also arrested after the scuffle last Tuesday and acquitted the other two after hearing the evidence. Grice and the Negroes were charged with assault and battery.

The fight, which developed after Grice ordered Josephine Boldin, 19, to give him her seat and move to the rear of the bus, was the first reported incident of violence since shortly after city buses were ordered integrated last Dec. 21.

Loe acquitted Miss Boldin and Mrs. Annie Burch, 37, who said she went to the other woman's assistance when Grice started beating her with a wrench. Mrs. Burch said the man also struck her.

Before the hearing was concluded, City Prosecutor David Crossland asked the court to dismiss the charges against another defendant, Mrs. Johnnie Mae Eaves. He said the evidence indicated she wasn't involved in the disturbance.

All three Negro women testified Grice started beating Miss Boldin after ordering her to move. The white man didn't take the stand himself, but Detective Capt. E. P. Brown had quoted him earlier as saying Miss Boldin slapped him first.

At one point in the hearing Grice interrupted to tell a witness she didn't have to answer questions from Negro Atty. Fred Gray. Later Grice apologized to the court.

Loe said the evidence convinced him that Grice was the "aggressor" and that he "provoked" the fight.

Grice said he will appeal the $50 fine.

The Montgomery leader made the statement after a 12-stick dynamite bomb misfired at his home Sunday night. A nearby home and service station were bombed, however. There are 50,000 colored citizens in Montgomery.

Rev. King's Appeal

Montgomery, Alabama Journal
Montgomery, Ala.

ORAL arguments on the appeal of the Rev. M. L. King's conviction of violating state anti-boycott laws are scheduled Thursday before the State Court of Appeals, but there is a good chance the appeal will be dismissed without any arguments.

The state contends the appeal should be dismissed because King's attorneys failed to meet a time deadline in filing their briefs with the court.

King was convicted of the charge in Montgomery Circuit Court last spring and fined $500 and costs. He was the only Negro bus boycott leader tried among the 90 indicted by a grand jury.

Attorneys for King were required by the Court of Appeals rules to file their briefs in a specified time, but for reasons unknown they failed to do so. Legal observers on Capitol Hill say the dismissal of the appeal will be nothing but mere formality.

If such happens, King's fine will be imposed and all legal routes will be blocked for further litigation in the case.

Say Effect Of U. S. Supreme Court Decision Must Await Coming Of Favorable Public Opinion

Montgomery, Ala., March 25 — (DSN) — Visiting Newsmen who have come here from many sections of the country to make on-the-spot observations and report on the segregated seating pattern on Montgomery buses, have found no change, after the year-long boycott by local Negroes recently ended, and the constant stream of nationwide, as well as international publicity and prominence, given the Montmgomery Negro Improvement Association and its leaders.

What is seen as having brought newsmen and reporters here for on-the-spot observation was the picture of the Rev. Martin Luther King, the originator of the Bus boycott movement, the man who is credited with being the first to bring the idea of non-violent resistance to American Negroes, and the President and Founder of the Montgomery Negro Improvement Association, which recently appeared on the front page of Time Magazine with an accompanying article proclaiming the success of the Montgomery bus boycott.

Owen Asks Bus Firms To Segregate

Post-Herald
Sat. 4-13-57
Birmingham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, April 12 (U.P.) —C. C. (Jack) Owen, president of the State Public Service Commission, today urged all bus companies to adopt voluntary Jim Crow laws to continue segredation on public transit.

Owen asked the transportation companies to enforce their own rules and regulations regarding separation of the races in an effort to get around the Supreme Court decision which declared segregation on buses unconstitutional.

Owens directed the carriers attention to the resolution adopted last week by the Southeastern Association of Railroad and Utilities Commission at its convention in Biloxi, Miss.

The resolution called on transportation companies in the South to voluntarily adopt rules of their own requiring segregation so "the federal courts will be less likely to disturb the practice."

Owen said voluntary adoption of rules by transportation companies would insure "that the journeys of passengers may be peaceful, quiet and comfortable and will not be disturbed by discomforts, unpleasantness riots or breach of the peace."

Birmingham Defends Bus Segregation

Herald Tribune
Tues. 3-19-57
New York, N.Y.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Mar. 18 (U.P.).—The city of Birmingham declared today that bus segregation was necessary for law and order and the city had the right to enforce it with police powers despite any Federal rulings to the contrary.

Recorders Court Judge Ralph Parker heard argument for two hours and then took under advisement the city's case against twenty-two Negroes charged with violating bus segregation ordinances. They were taken to jail Dec. 26 after more than 100 Negroes staged a mass unsegregated riding attempt.

City Attorney James J. Willis also asserted that the Federal courts had "so confused" the segregation picture that it was hard to determine "where we are." The United States Supreme Court had "constantly dodged" giving reasons why segregation ordinances affecting buses or public parks were in violation of the civil rights amendment, he said.

Mr. Willis argued that the city must continue to maintain law and order and it was in the interest of both white and Negro that they remained segregated.

The twenty-two Negroes were represented by attorney Arthur Shores. He entered not guilty pleas but rested his case on the Supreme Court's order voiding Alabama bus segregation ordinances.

MINISTERS URGE PEACE

'School' Prepares Negroes For Mass Return To Buses

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Staff Writer

Negroes awaiting the end of bus segregation in Montgomery are being schooled by their leaders to remain peaceful "even if others strike first."

And to guide them, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy disclosed in an interview yesterday that an effort will be made to have a Negro clergyman or civic leader aboard "every bus day and night" during the early stages of integration.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutional but the formal order has not been issued pending action on a request for city and state authorities for a re-hearing.

If the court acts on the re-hearing petition Monday, the integration notice may reach Montgomery later next week.

CLASSES HELD

Meanwhile, Abernathy said as many as 1,000 Negroes are attending weekly classes designed to "prepare our people for the return to the buses and for integration in general." He did not elaborate on the latter.

The weekly instruction periods, held in Negro churches, are conducted by the Montgomery Improvement Assn., the organization which has directed the long mass Negro boycott against segregated city buses. Abernathy is vice president of the MIA.

Ministers and other MIA laders along with officers of civic clubs and volunteers in each neighborhood are acting as instructors, the Baptist minister said. Besides the weekly classes, Negro civic clubs also are urged to spread the doctrine of nonviolence at their meetings.

"We are trying to get over the idea of courtesy," Abernathy explained.

OUTLINES 'RULES'

Abernathy said his people are being told, in substance:

1. "If anyone argues with you at least we feel the channel of communication has been opened. If we can discuss it, that's good. But we must remain calm, talk in the spirit of love, and maybe we can win them."

2. "If they strike or push us, the strong thing to do is to refrain from striking or pushing back. We must be calm and reason with them. We must say to them, 'If you want to hit me again, do it, because I'm not going to hit you back. If you want to fight me, you will say to everyone on this bus that you're weak.'"

3. "If they threaten us with arrest, for disorderly conduct, we must go to jail peacefully because if they arrest one of us for violating no law, there are 50,000 other Negroes they'll have to arrest, too."

MINISTERS HELP

Abernathy said the presence of Negro ministers and lay leaders on the buses "will give our people strength and let them know someone is with them. And it will help show them how to act."

In other fields of integration—the Negro minister did not disclose any plans for specific action—Abernathy said his people at the weekly meetings are told to "encourage cleanliness and politeness" and to take part in "campaigns to beautify their homes and their lawns."

The clergyman emphasized that "we're not giving up any of our rights. We intend to ride the buses again and to ride them integrated. But we want to do it peacefully."

And, he added, "we hope the white community will join with us in this endeavor."

Bus Seating Appeals May Face New Delay

Unless the United States Supreme Court acts by Monday on bus segregation petitions submitted by state and city attorneys, rulings on the motions may be delayed until the middle of January.

The court will recess from Monday until Jan. 14, 1957, according to an announcement in yesterday's issue of "The United States Law Week," a subscription publication surveying current law and published weekly in Washington, D.C.

The petitions now before the court were submitted by the Alabama Public Service Commission and the city of Montgomery. They seek a rehearing of the court's recent decision upholding a three-judge federal panel ruling declaring Alabama bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

The ruling also provided for an injunction restraining enforcement of segration on Montgomery city buses. The injunction, suspended pending the Supreme Coourt appeal and subsequent petitions for rehearings, will go into effect here upon issue of a formal mandate from the Supreme Court.

Negroes Freed, White Fined In Ala. Bus Fight

MONTGOMERY, Ala — Three Negro women were set free and a white man fined $50 and cost in city court here Monday on charges in connection with a fight that occurred on a racially integrated city bus.

After witnesses testified that the white man, James E. Grice Jr. struck two of the women after ordering one to move to the back of the bus Judge Eugene Loe convicted Grice of assault and battery. Judge Loe dismissed charges against 31 year old Johnnie Mae Evans. He also acquitted Josephine Boldine, 19 and Annie Burch, 37.

City Prosecutor David M Crosland recommended dropping of the charges against Mrs Evans. He said indications from the testimony were that she was not involved in the fight.

Judge Loe ruled Grice the aggressor in the disturbance and acquitted the other two women. The disturbance was the first rcorded since the immediate period following the Supreme Court's December 21 order that knocked out segregation on buses.

The women told the court Grice struck the Boldin woman with a wrench after ordering her to exchange seats. Mrs Burch said she was struck when she attempted to aid the attacked woman.

Montgomery Buses Now Segregated 'Voluntarily'

MONTGOMERY, April 8 (AP)—City buses pulling out of Court Square in downtown Montgomery these days generally have white patrons seated in the front, Negroes behind them.

That's the way it was a year and a half ago, when city and state segregation laws required separate seating by the races.

Today those restrictions have been outlawed by a U. S. Supreme Court decision. But segregation hasn't disappeared.

An injunction against continued enforcement of the laws went into effect last Dec. 21. Negroes took seats in front of white persons. Prominent among the Negroes were leaders of the Montgomery bus boycott, a mass protest against bus segregation that lasted more than a year. It ended on Dec. 21.

The boycott began Dec. 5, 1955, the day a Negro seamstress was fined $14 in City Court for violating a bus segregation ordinance.

For 381 days after that, Montgomery Negroes boycotted city buses. Most of that time the Montgomery Improvement Assn. operated a car pool to transport Negroes, but a state court order stopped it about a month before the federal injunction went into effect.

But starting on the evening of Dec. 26, city buses were fired upon from ambush six times. A young Negro woman was shot in one attack.

Bus patronage dwindled.

Early on Jan. 10 four Negro churches were dynamited. Homes of two ministers prominent in the Negro leadership were bombed. And on Jan. 27 a seventh explosion damaged a Negro home and taxicab stand.

Within a few days of the Jan. 27 bombing city police arrested seven white men and charged them with participating in the terrorism. Four were indicted and await trial in May.

Since the arrests, no further acts of racial violence have been reported.

And bus patronage has climbed back toward pre-boycott figures. Still, the buses appear segregated in fact if not by law.

The bus company manager, J. H. Bagley, reported that riders tend to seat themselves separately. Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said his observations indicate buses are actually segregated 98 per cent of the time. Sail Sellers:

"I guess people like to ride with their friends. Anyway, the Negroes seem to be segregating themselves most of the time."

Court Rejects King's Appeal

Wed. 5-1-57 Montgomery Ala.

P.1

The Rev. M. L. King Jr.'s appeal from a conviction for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law during the long Negro boycott of Montgomery city buses was thrown out of court yesterday by the Alabama Court of Appeals.

The appellate court acted on a technicality because the Negro Baptist minister was late in filing a transcript of testimony of his trial.

King was one of 90 Negroes indicted by a Montgomery County grand jury early in 1956 on charges of violating the state's anti-boycott law during the mass refusal of Montgomery Negroes to ride segregated city buses. He was the only one tried.

The young minister was fined $500 and costs. Trials of the other 89 defendants were posponed pending King's appeal.

Since then Montgomery buses have been integrated under a ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court and the boycott was ended after more than a year.

STATE LAW

The Court of Appeals, in a decision written by Judge Aubrey M. Cates Jr., cited a state law that requires the court reporter to file a transcript of testimony of a trial within 60 days but which gives a convicted defendant the right to ask for an extension of time.

Cates said King's attorney failed to ask for an extension of time when it became evident that the court reporter would be unable to transcribe the testimony within the 60-day limit.

The Negro minister was convicted March 22, 1956, and the transcript should have been delivered to the clerk of Montgomery Circuit Court, where King was tried, on or before May 21.

QUESTION RAISED

The Court of Appeals threw out the case without going into the merits of the trial itself. The question of the deadline on filing the transcript of testimony had been raised by Atty. Gen. John Patterson on behalf of the state.

After that, King's attorney filed an affidavit from court reporter W. Hallowell Lewis which said he was unable to get the transcript in time because of a heavy backlog of other cases and because he was kept busy taking testimony in subsequent trials.

The law under which the Court of Appeals acted recognizes that additional time might be needed, but Cates said no effort was made by the Negro minister's attorneys to ask for an extension.

CAN APPEAL

King now has 15 days to ask the Court of Appeals to reconsider its decision and if the court declines, he can appeal to the Alabama Supreme Court.

King's attorney, Fred D. Gray of Montgomery, said he hasn't had a chance to read the decision and that he would have nothing to say at this time.

The anti-boycott law under which King was convicted prohibits two or more persons from conspiring to hinder, delay, or prevent a company from doing business unless they have "a just cause or legal excuse" for carrying on a boycott.

The noted minister had earlier been convicted of violating an antiquated bus boycott law and fined $500 when he appealed. The fine was changed to a 386 day jail sentence in the case.

The court did not even investigate the merits of the case in ruling against the militant minister from Mongomery.

Some 90 other Negro leaders were indicted along with Rev. King by a Montgomery county grand jury in early 1956 on charges of violating an old city anti-boycott law. The action came about when Negro leaders led a mass Negro refusal to ride segregated city buses.

The boycott ended Dec. 21, 1956 when the U. S. Supreme Court issued a mandate ending city bus segregation in this city.

King Requests New Hearing On Jail Appeal

Advertiser P.1 Wed. 5-15-57 Montgomery Ala.

Attorneys for the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. yesterday asked the Alabama Court of Appeals to grant a rehearing of his appeal from a 386-day jail sentence.

The sentence was handed the young Negro leader for violation of Alabama's anti-boycott law during the year-long Negro bus boycott in Montgomery.

On April 30 the court threw out an appeal on a technicality. It said the Baptist minister's attorneys had failed to file a transcript of testimony in his trial within the required time.

SUCH CASES

The request for rehearing contended that King's constitutional rights had been denied by the conviction and that in such cases involving constitutional guarantees the court is not bound by its rules on time to file a transcript.

In the opinion written by Judge Aubrey M. Cates Jr. dismissing the appeal, the merits of the case were not discussed. This was pointed out by the rehearing request, which asked for a test of the conviction on its merits.

King was one of 90 Negroes indicted in connection with the boycott. He was the only one tried so far, his case being used as a test.

Appraisal Of Boycott Chief Made

Writer Says He Lacks Maturity For Politics

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott, is an estimable young man, and an excellent pulpit orator, but he is not yet ready for the political big-time.

This estimate of the Rev. Mr. King is based on a year's observation, during which this reporter heard him speak at the Elk's convention in Los Angeles, the National Baptist convention in Denver, and at the Prayer Pilgrimage at the Lincoln Memorial here, and attended two press conferences he held.

At his press conference here, after he and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernethy, another leader in the bus boycott, talked with Vice President Nixon for more than two hours, he showed that he has more home the Senate calendar for consideration in the next few weeks.

Their strategy is to by-pass the Senate Judiciary committee, where Chairman James O. Eastland (D) Miss., has kept a companion measure bottled up for months.

An alternate "compromise" plan would permit the House bill to be referred to the Senate committee. work to do if he is to become a political as well as a spiritual leader.

His answer to political questions, even those relating to Alabama, were in generalities. He gave no particulars about the low registration of colored voters in Alabama, why more colored persons were not able to register, or what efforts had been made by colored Alabamans themselves to register.

Public Relations Bad

On top of that, the public relations of the Rev. Mr. King were badly managed. News reporters hung around the entrance to the formal office of Vice President Nixon just off the Senate chamber in the Capitol for more than two hours waiting to see Mr. King.

After the conference with the Vice President ended, Mr. King was ushered out a side door and down stairs. Reporters with deadlines to make rushed after it. When they got outside, Bayard Ruston, who is his public relations director, was helping him to get into a waiting automobile and telling reporters that Mr. King had nothing to say until his 6 o'clock press conference at the Raleigh hotel.

Mr. King was a half hour late in entering the room at the Raleigh where the press conference was held.

Asks Three Things

Before he came in, Mr. Ruston distributed a statement, attributed to Mr. King, in which it was stated that the bus boycott leader had appealed to Mr. Nixon to do three things:

1. To come South and speak in "moral terms" to give strength to southern liberals who are afraid to speak or act with understanding and equality.

2. To urge southerners to support the right of colored people to vote.

3. To call together Republican members of Congress and impress them with the importance of supporting civil rights legislation.

Actually, what Mr. King got from Vice President Nixon was a commitment to hold a regional meeting of the President's Government Contracts Committee in Atlanta or some other southern city.

The Government Contracts committee is concerned with the policing of the clause in standard government contracts forbidding the contractor or subcontractor to discriminate in employment under such contracts.

Mr. Nixon is chairman of the committee. Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, who also was present at the talk between Mr. King and Mr. Nixon, is vice chairman of the committee.

Mr. Mitchell told reporters that the Rev. Mr. King and the Rev. Mr. Abernethy gave the Vice President a number of ideas and opinions as to the importance of the civil rights bill.

In Favor Of Bill

"The Vice President assured them," Mr. Mitchell said, "that the President, he (Mr. Nixon), and the Republican leadership were firmly in favor of the civil rights bill."

Mr. Mitchell said the conferees also discussed the equal job opportunties program and the President's Government Contracts committee and its work.

The two Alabamans pointed out to the Vice President, Mr. Mitchell said, the small number of colored persons in the South who had any voting rights and the difficulty colored people are experiencing in obtaining those rights in most, if not all, of the southern states.

Mr. Mitchell said the Rev. Mr. King and the Rev. Mr. Abernathy suggested that the contracts committee come South to hold a regional meeting.

The Vice President assured them, the Labor Secretary said, that one of the southern cities would be a point which the committee would visit in the near future.

Atlanta Is Suggested

The Rev. Mr. King suggested Atlanta, Mr. Mitchell said, adding that the committee is meeting Wednesday and it will probably be decided then as to the southern city in which to hold a meeting.

The Rev. Mr. King told reporters that he accepted the invitation to convey to the executive branch of the government, through Vice President Nixon the conditions which exist in the South for 11,000,000 colored people, including the bombing of colored homes and churches to such an extent that it is "a scandal, morally and legally."

He also said colored people were being intimidated, segregation was being continued, and colored people were being deprived of the right to vote.

At the same time, he said, he emphasized the determination and single-mindedness of colored people "to end these indignities firmly though non-violently." He said he tried to give the Vice President "a glimpse into the hearts and spirit" of colored people who are united in their effort to obtain their rights.

He said he made it clear that he does not believe either the Republican or Democratic party has done enough with the moral and spiritual tools available to them to achieve civil rights.

Asked what was the Vice President's reaction, the Rev. Mr. King replied that the problem is "very important" and that it is "important and significant" for him to go South and make some type of statement in that area.

"Does that satisfy you?" a reporter asked.

"That would be a step," the Rev. Mr. King replied. "I am not saying it is a total solution."

He added that Secretary Mitchell agreed with the Vice President that it would be a good move to have the contracts committee meet in a southern city.

The Rev. Mr. King also said he thought President Eisenhower "could do much more than he has done."

He said he and Mr. Nixon also discussed the possibility of a meeting with the President at a later day, and Mr. Nixon agreed that "might be a very favorable idea and it is quite possible that we might meet with the President."

The Rev. Mr. King also said it was made clear in the discussion that "there are many white people of good will in the South and that the real problem is that these people are afraid to speak out and take a positive stand."

He added that he made it clear that the White Citizens Councils and the Ku Klux Klan represent a minority view.

He said he would welcome a conference with any outstanding Democrat of the House or Senate.

VICE PRESIDENT GREETS BUS BOYCOTT LEADER.—Vice President Richard M. Nixon shakes hands with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Montgomery, Ala., in a meeting held Thursday, June 13, to discuss racial problems. Nixon, as the Senate's presiding officer, may play a leading role in Senate maneuvering over civil rights legislation. King, leader of Montgomery's year-long boycott of buses, reported to Nixon on conditions in the South as the minister saw them. King was accompanied to the conference by the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, another Montgomery minister.

The committee pointed out that the reciepts from ticket sales conducted by the various church groups will be used to aid Negroes in their fight for full equality in America.

King Loses His Appeal

Pittsburgh Pa. 5-11-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (ANP)— Acting on what it called his failure to appeal within time and present a transcript of testimony, the Alabama Court of Appeals last week here threw out of court the appellate action of Rev. Martin L. King.

The noted minister had earlier been convicted of violating an antiquated anti-boycott law and was fined $500 when he appealed. The fine was changed to a 386-day jail sentence and suspended.

The Alabama appellate court stated that a transcript of testimony in Rev. Mr. King's trial in March, 1956, had not been filed within the appeal time and that no extension of time was requested in the case.

(Final Installment

When Mahatma Gandhi's saintly, selfless fight for the independence of India was brought to a brutal close as an assassin's bullet plowed through his frail body, the shock which penetrated the world caused the Los Angeles Times to comment:

Sat. 5-11-57

"He used death as a weapon and swayed a subcontinent by holding his life, like a bottle of nitroglycerin, balanced on his fingertips."

Yoganander wrote of Gandhi's execution: "Judas was the best publicity agent for the message of Christ. So was this Indian assasin who killed Gandhi. His assassination will help spread his doctrine of Ahimsa or fighting evil by non-violence. By following it, India won her independence without a single shot."

JUST SUPPOSE

The murder of Gandhi did not bring victory to his enemies. In fact, it served to make even more firm the gentle but resolute social and religious gospel he had died teaching and preaching.

What would be the effect if America, one morning, should awake to learn that young Rev. Martin Luther King, the Gandhi of the South, had been struck down by a hate bullet, blown to bits by a terrorist's bomb or killed by a lynch mob?

Would the 50,000 Negroes of Montgomery, Ala. forget, in a rage-blinded surge of avenging wrath — the very lessons of love and non-violence for which the young leader would have forfeited his life?

Would the blood of colored and the blood of white wash down the sewers of Montgomery streets in a terrible race war? Would Negroes all over the South and all over America, who have come to regard King as a shining symbol of their deeprest dreams and aspirations, rise up in awful fury and turn city streets into bloody battlefields?

ANSWER IS NO

We believe the answer is no— that these bloody consequences would not happen.

Certainly, there would be a boiling indignation which would surpass that which took hold of Negroes in America even with the slaying of Emmett Till. Certainly, Montgomery, scene of King's heroic stand against segregation, would seethe with a great sorrow, a great wrath and the greatest tenseness which has existed since the days of horrible lynchings against King's assassin and the system which produced him.

Certainly, a great avalanche of condemnation would conume the nation's colored citizens and millions of Southern and Northern whites.

But Negroes — even in Montgomery where King is best-loved — would not converge in drawn battle lines for a senseless, suicidal blood-letting. Negroes in Montgomery are willing to die for freedom. They are not willing to kill for revenge.

King, himself, has spoken words which would rate as prophecy in the event such a terrible thing should happen — to him or to others of his fellow-leaders or followers.

CONTINUE STRUGGLE

"Even in the tace of death, we have no choice but to continue the struggle, not for ouselves, but for all America," the young pastor has stated.

"For, if in carrying out this obligation, we are killed, others more resolute than we, will rise up to continue the drive to free the U. S. of the scourge of racial conflict."

On still another occasion, the minister-leader declared: "We've got to let it be known all over Montgomery that to stop our quest for equality, it is going to be necessary to kill 50,000 Negroes, to blast 50,000 homes."

To some, King's declaration about the determination of Montgomery Negroes may have sounded like oratory. It wasn't. The leader of the Miracle of Montgomery knew whereof he spoke.

For there is a truth about what happened in Montgomery which illustrates the strength of the revolutionary movement there.

That truth is that — as brilliant a symbol as he is — Martin Luther King is ONLY a symbol of the struggle of colored citizens for justice, of their deep faith in the righteousness of their cause, their stalwart ability to withstand the greatest pain in waging that cause.

The truth is that the Montgomery movement led by King does not DEPEND upon King. It is not a one-man operation, not an hysterical flocking behind a demagogue or a Pied Piper's march toward some fantastic goal.

King doesn't want to be the leader of that kind of parade. King wants to be the leader of what he is — a march up freedom highway so compelling, so resourceful that it can sweep ahead even if the Grand Marshall should fall in his tracks.

Marching behind King are other men of the cloth — other dedicated men who have proudly acclaimed him leader. These other men are willing and capable to ascend to leadership.

More important, the Miracle of Montgomery has fired the hearts and brightened the eyes of youths who have stopped believing the battle is lost. They have been inspired by what has happened in the South.

They have a new and resolute strength. They are the followers who have learned that Negro leaders can lead and that Negro people can follow. They have learned that white and colored can join hands — yes, in Dixie, as well as elsewhere — for the betterment of humanity.

The Montgomery Miracle was not accomplished by one man. It was brought about by the creative, prayerful and brilliant planning of a group of unselfish leaders who are not interested in publicity but in justice. They are lawyers. They are ministers. They are business men and social workers, teachers, doctors, laborers, domestic workers, youth leaders. They are the people.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, stated recently.

"Everyone has been paying tribute to the leadership in Montgomery, Ala. I do not wish — nor could I — to take away one iota of credit from that fine leadership.

But I want to say that great tribute must be paid, not only to the leadership of Montgomery, but also to the splendid, militant, united followship — the people who walked together, prayed together and stayed together in an all-out crusade for justice."

God willing, Rev. Martin Luther King will come to no harm at the hands of the hate-mongers. God willing, he will continue to exert his calm, intelligent influence not only over Montgomery but also throughout the nation which has knighted him a noble leader in the high traditions of Christ and Gandhi.

But if he should become a martyr in the cause, the followship of Montgomery will march on. They will march on a little stronger, a bit more resolute, heads held a little higher — because a great fallen leader has spelled out for them the way to live for freedom and the way to die for it.

Writer Says He Lacks Maturity For Politics

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott, is an estimable young man, and an excellent pulpit orator, but he is not yet ready for the political big-time.

This estimate of the Rev. Mr. King is based on a year's observation, during which this reporter heard him speak at the Elk's convention in Los Angeles, the National Baptist convention in Denver, and at the Prayer Pilgrimage at the Lincoln Memorial here, and attended two press conferences he held.

At his press conference here, after he and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernethy, another leader in the bus boycott, talked with Vice President Nixon for more than two hours, he showed that he has more home the Senate calendar for consideration in the next few weeks.

Their strategy is to by-pass the Senate Judiciary committee, where Chairman James O. Eastland (D) Miss., has kept a companion measure bottled up for months.

An alternate "compromise" plan would permit the House bill to be referred to the Senate committee, work to do if he is to become a political as well as a spiritual leader.

His answer to political questions, even those relating to Alabama, were in generalities. He gave no particulars about the low registration of colored voters in Alabama, why more colored persons were not able to register, or what efforts had been made by colored Alabamans themselves to register.

Public Relations Bad

On top of that, the public relations of the Rev. Mr. King were badly managed. News reporters hung around the entrance to the formal office of Vice President Nixon just off the Senate chamber in the Capitol for more than two hours waiting to see Mr. King.

After the conference with the Vice President ended, Mr. King was ushered out a side door and down stairs. Reporters with deadlines to make rushed after it. When they got outside, Bayard Ruston, who is his public relations director, was helping him to get into a waiting automobile and telling reporters that Mr. King had nothing to say until his 6 o'clock press conference at the Raleigh hotel.

Mr. King was a half hour late in entering the room at the Raleigh where the press conference was held.

Asks Three Things

Before he came in, Mr. Ruston distributed a statement, attributed to Mr. King, in which it was stated that the bus boycott leader had appealed to Mr. Nixon to do three things:

1. To come South and speak in "moral terms" to give strength to southern liberals who are afraid to speak or act with understanding and equality.
2. To urge southerners to support the right of colored people to vote.
3. To call together Republican members of Congress and impress them with the importance of supporting civil rights legislation.

Why Segregationists Don't Want Him Killed

Chicago, Ill.

By ALFRED DUCKETT

(Fourth In A Series Of Five Articles)

"In the presence of din and noise, neither party shall take the law into his own hands. All disputes are to be decided by reference to private arbitration or the courts of law. This is the only pact immediately necessary. I am sure all else will follow. Unless this elementary condition is recognized, we have no atmosphere for considering the ways and means of removing misunderstanding and arriving at an honorable and lasting settlement."

"Non-violence is not a weapon of the weak but of the strong. Virtue lies in being absorbed in one's prayers."

The above words might have well been said by Dr. Martin Luther King, the thoughtful young Southern leader who has pointed U. S. Negroes to a new and effective technique for making gains in social justice.

They were not.

They were spoken - and often repeated - by Mahatma Ghandi, the father of non-violence, the author of the use of love as a weapon. Ghandi spoke the first admonition in 1924 when counselling his people about the way that differences between the Hindus and Moslems of India should be handled. He spoke the second bit of advice on many, many occasions when advising his fellow countrymen how to solve dissensions among themselves and with outside forces.

Even though King did not speak these words originally, he has eloquently paraphrased them and many times given them even more eloquent translation into action during his leadership of the Miracle of Montgomery. Martin King became impressed with Gandhi's theories and practice of the strength of soul force when King was a student at Crozier Theological Seminary in Chester, Pennsylvania. A lecture by an educator who had visited India and studied Gandhi and Gandhi techniques motivated the young theology student to delve deeply into the history of the Gandhi revolution and into the philosophy which India's leader taught.

The Mahatma once told a conference of British statesmen that Great Britain must come to regard India as "a valuable partner, not held by force, but by the silken cord of love." Love - the application of it to the traumatic problem of the Negro in the South - has been preached and utilized by King as a positive force, as a shield and a weapon. It is a remarkable preachment in the midst of such violence as has greeted the Supreme Court decision and the determination of Negroes to take advantage of that decision. But the preachment has not been as remarkable as its acceptance by 50,000 Negroes who have heretofore recognized only two extremes - absolute, degrading resignation with undercurrents of smouldering resentment or suicidal open rebellion.

There could have been open rebellion in Montgomery on each occasion when Pastor King was bombed. There could have been rebellion when thousands of Negroes heard of their leader's arrest (on a trumped-up traffic charge as part of a plan of wholesale arrests of car pool drivers.) On this occasion, thousands of colored Montgomery citizens congregated about the jail. Authorities backed down from their original refusal to release King on bail. There could have been terrible violence when the United States Court handed down a decision giving the legal victory to Negroes in the bus segregation controversy.

It was when this victory came that King and other Montgomery leaders realized the greatest crisis in the long struggle was at hand. White racists have long employed the argument that racial desegregation would plunge Dixie into a bloodbath of violence. There has been violence. But thanks to the Gandhi-like King leadership, the blood stains the hands of white supremacists - not Negroes.

REV. M. L. KING

King certainly recalled the words of Gandhi in this crisis. Throughout the weary months of the Montgomery struggle, he and his fellow-ministers had been preaching about the power of returning good for evil. Now, when it seemed the fight had been won, the people could obey the lofty advice and continue to triumph. Or they could upset the delicate balance of their gains as the professional agitators wished desperately they would do.

At the handsome Dexter Avenue Baptist Church which King pastors, thousands of Montgomery's colored citizens attended a mass meeting. After the opening hymn, the Scripture was read by Rev. Robert Graetz, a young white Lutheran who has stood, shoulder to shoulder, with the Negro clergymen during the bus controversy. The presence of the Rev. Graetz, King recalls, was a reminder to the people that the fight for democracy in Montgomery is not a fight which Negroes wage alone. Rev. Graetz read from Paul's letter to the Corinthians: "When I was a child, I spoke as a child. I understood as a child. I thought as a child. But when I became a man, I put away childish things."

Defender

Spontaneous shouting, cheering and waving of handkerchiefs interrupted the reading of the Bible.

"And now abideth faith, hope and love - but the greatest of these is love," Rev. Graetz continued.

Sat. 5-4-57

Another spontaneous outburst issued from the congregation.

"I knew then that non-violence, for all its difficuties, had won its way into our hearts," Rev. King remembers gratefully. "The people knew that they had come of age, that they had won new dignity. They would never again be the old, subservient, fearful appeasers. But neither would they be resentful fighters for justice who could overlook the rights and feelings of their opponents."

That same night, when Rev. King himself addressed the people, he told them that they must return to the buses not as a right, but as a duty.

'If we go back as a right, there is a danger that we will be blind to the rights of others," he declared. "We Negroes have been in a humiliating position because others have been chiefly concerned with insisting on their own rights. This is too narrow a basis for human brotherhood and certainly will not overcome exisiting tensions and misunderstandings. Secondly, if we insist on our 'rights,' we will return to the buses with the psychology of victors. We will think and say by our manner if not our words - that we are the victors. This would be unworthy of us and a barrier to the growth we hope for in others. In the past, we have sat at the back of the buses and this has indicated a basic lack of self-respect. It shows that we have thought of ourselves as less than men. On the other hand, the white people have sat in the front and have thought of themselves as superior. They have tried to play God. Both approaches are wrong. Our duty in going back on these buses is to destroy this superior-inferior relationship from whatever side it is felt. Instead of accepting the division of mankind, it is our duty to act in the manner best designed to establish man's one-ness. If we go back in this spirit, our mental attitude will be one that must in the long run bring reconciliation."

It is this manner of high-level instruction which King has voiced and to which the people have responded which has won him the respect, not only of his followers, but also - grudgingly - of the majority of the very Montgomery whites who vigorously oppose King's overall program. Ironically enough therefore, the majority of Montgomery whites - from the Mayor on down - are almost as solicitous that no harm come to Dr. King as are his followers. Each time a bombing has occurred at the minister's home, Mayor W. A. Gayle and Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers have been among the first to arrive on the scene. The concern of authorities stems - not from their approval of what King is doing as their passion to keep the city from being plunged into a holocaust of violence and rioting. Regardless of their devotion to segregation, top city officials desire no armed warfare between the 50,000 Negroes and 75,000 whites of Montgomery. King, today, represents the best guarantee the city has of peace - or at least true. For Montgomery's Negroes have given loving ears and obedient hearts to the leader who has taught them to face hatred with love and violence with a literal turning of the other cheek.

King's power to quell resentment and avert riot has been amply demonstrated. After the first bombing of his home, police were unable to disperse throngs of angry Negroes. But a few words from Dr. King - a reminder that the bomb-throwers needed love and that those who live by the sword must die by the sword - was listened to readily by the crowd which obeyed his instructions to go to their homes and pray.

This gospel of love and refusal to strike back physically has themed the entire crusade which began in December of 1955 when Negro seamstress Rosa Parks was arrested for refusing to give up her seat on a bus to a white girl. Negroes have conducted themselves so that it is impossible to accuse them of creating "incidents." This is the way authorities want to keep the situation. So, while passionately opposing Martin King, they look up to him and seek to protect him.

There are other reasons why Montgomery whites do not wish to see King hurt. The most ardent segregationists realize that martyrdom of a man of King's stature could create such a crisis that Federal justice and Federal troops would have to be brought in. Such intervention, in addition to being highly distasteful as an idea, could spell an even more immediate and final death toll for segregation than seems in the cards at the moment.

Then too, there are Montgomery whites who oppose violence as a matter of principle, quite as vigorously as they oppose racial integration - still others who feel the issue has become one between law and anarchy rather than between segregation and integration.

In spite of these reasurring arguments, it is the tragic truth that it is not always the responsible citizenry which controls the destinies of great men. Sometimes, hate-filled, trigger-tense shadow men sulk along the lunatic fringe.

It was thus that Lincoln was killed by John Wilkes Booth.

It was thus that Gandhi died at the hand of an assassin.

What would happen in Montgomery - in America - if Martin Luther King fell to his death with a furtive executioner's bullet in his heart?

We will discuss that possibility in the final installment next week.

Where Does King Go From Here?

Internationally Famous At 28, Rev. Martin Luther King Wonders What Course To Follow, Aware That Fame Has Its Drawbacks Since Some Expect Too Much

TED POSTON IN THE NEW YORK POST

[Ted Poston is a Negro reporter for the New York Post. The article appearing below was the last in a New York Post series about Dr. M. L. King, a well known Montgomery Negro minister. The question dealt with by Reporter Poston may be of interest, perhaps more than passing interest, to Montgomerians. It is authoritative as Poston spent some time here recently with Dr. King.—Ed.]

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

THE buses of Montgomery are no longer segregated. The bombings of Negro churches and homes have, for the moment at least, ceased. And the leader of the historic non-violent struggle here has received international acclaim as a young man of unusual ability.

But where, at 28, does Martin Luther King Jr. go from here?

The youthful minister pondered the question the other day in his comfortable home here, and his brooding gaze went far beyond the walls of the tastefully furnished living room.

He had returned only the day before from Washington, where he, Roy Wilkins of the NAACP, and A. Philip Randolph, AFL-CIO vice president, had conferred with scores of the most influential Negro leaders in America to plan a May 17 "Pilgrimage of Prayer" to the nation's capital.

His slanted eyes were almost closed as he considered his answers. And then he said:

"Frankly, I don't know."

A pause, and then:

"There's so much remaining to be done here in Montgomery and I feel I have a responsibility to stay and help get things done. I feel that whatever your job is, you should do it as well as if you thought it was to be your last job. But when you are as young as I am—"

HAT TRICK

HIS voice trailed off for the moment.

But it was not a new thought for King. Just a year ago, when he had first been firmly catapulted into the headlines, he discussed the problem with Rev. J. Plus Barbour, his friend and mentor at Crozier Theological Seminary.

Barbour teased him about his nationwide publicity, and King said:

"Frankly, I'm worried to death. A man who hits the peak at 27 has a tough job ahead. People will be expecting me to pull rabbits out of the hat for the rest of my life. If I don't or there are no rabbits to be pulled, then they'll say I'm no good."

He reverted to the theme of early success as he discussed his future the other day.

"One of the frustrations of any young man is to approach the heights at such an early age," he said. "The average man reaches this point maybe in his late 40s or early 50s.

"But when you reach it so young, your life becomes a kind of decrescendo. You feel yourself fading from the screen at a time you should just be starting to work toward your goal.

"And no one knows better than I that no crowds will be waiting outside churches to greet me two years from now when some one invited me to speak."

The question of Martin Luther King's future is not a theoretical one. For he has been receiving offers of jobs and positions across the country.

There has been widespread discussion, for instance, of offering him the presidency of Fisk University in Nashville, to fill the post left vacant by the recent death of Dr. Charles Johnson, one of the country's most responsible Negro spokesmen.

King had heard of the discussion and felt flattered when he was unofficially "sounded out" on the proposal. But he gave little indication the other day that he might accept such a position.

"I feel a responsibility for continuing my work in the field of civil rights," he said, "and the church offers me more freedom to continue that work.

"When I first entered the ministry, I thought I might like to teach or be an educator like Dr. Benjamin Mays at Morehouse College, who so greatly influenced my life, but I have learned to love the pastorate now and I don't think I would like to leave it.

"I don't think I could have the same kind of freedom I have now if I were a college president. After all, colleges have boards of trustees, and many of the white trustees in the South might feel — and with justification — that my activities might hurt the institution economically."

DESIRE TO SERVE

HE PAUSED again and idly fingered the hair of his active little 17-month-old daughter, Yolande Denise ("Yoki"), who had halted her destructive course around the living room to come to rest at his knee. And he rephrased the point.

"I do have a great desire to serve humanity," he said, "but at this particular point, the pulpit gives me an opportunity and a freedom that I wouldn't have in any other sphere of activity."

Although he probably is the only man who hasn't, King said he had not heard of increasing suggestions that he become national executive of the NAACP and help direct the national fight for civil rights. But he immediately rejected the idea.

"They've got some of the ablest men in the country directing the NAACP right now," he said, "there would be no need of my services there.

"And I feel that it is the duty and responsibility of the clergy to supplement the work of the NAACP. That is why I insisted that every member of my congregation join the local chapter here long before the bus protest began.

"For the NAACP is a vital weapon in our fight for freedom. We must continue our struggle in the courts. Our major victories there have come through the work of the NAACP.

"One thing the gradualists don't seem to understand is that we are not trying to make people love us when we go to court, we are trying to keep them from killing us.

"At the same time, we must support organizations like the NAACP that are trying to mold public opinion. Legislation changes man's external relations with other men; education changes them internally."

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY

HIS own mention of "trying to keep them from killing us" brought King back to the original question of where does he go from here. For he recalled the two attempts to bomb his own home and the danger faced by Yolando and Mrs. Coretta Scott King.

"If ever I get around to thinking about my future," he said, "I must also think of my family. I've got to think of what's best for them also. It is not pleasant to live under the threat of death even if Coretta and I reject such threats personally. But I do have a responsibility to my family, and that must always be a consideration."

The young minister feels deeply about his obligation to Montgomery and is aware of the magnitude of the obstacles still facing Negroes here in their quest for full citizenship. And much of his immediate local activity may be devoted to efforts to establish a bridge of communication between the Negro and white communities here.

"Since Time magazine published a cover story on our movement recently," he said, "I think I have observed a lessening of the tensions and feelings against me and the movement itself."

But this means no slackening, of course, of King's Montgomery Improvement Association's efforts to gain full citizenship for all Montgomerians. That was quite evident last Monday night when the still-weekly mass meeting of the former bus boycotters was held in King's Dexter Avenue Baptist Church.

Speaker after speaker, King included, stressed the MIA's next local project—the matter of Negro registration and voting. The MIA has long been conducting classes on registration for prospective Negro voters, but now they conduct tests to see how the "students" are progressing.

As Rev. S. S. Seay told the cheering throng Monday night (a throng not as large but as enthusiastic as any which attended the twice-weekly bus boycott meetings for a full year):

"We're going to test you ourselves before you go down there to the board of registrars. And if you pass our test and don't pass theirs, we'll have good reason to go down there and find out why you didn't pass. Knowledge is knowledge and the white folks don't have no corner on it, and we'll find out why you didn't pass just as sure as you are born to die."

Both Seay and the Rev. H. H. Hubbard, another older minister, twitted King that they were making their first appearance in his pulpit since he came to Montgomery in 1954. And both pointed out that Dexter Avenue Baptist is an "uppity" Negro church where the shout "Amen" is frowned on.

ADOPTED SON

BUT James Pierce, the Alabama State College economist and long-time Dexter member, defended his church by saying:

"Dexter Avenue may be one of those sophisticated churches, but I'm here to testify that Rev. King has ruined more faces with crying than anybody else I know. Because I almost broke out crying myself yesterday when he preached on his recent trip to the birth of Ghana."

Inferentially, both sides were referring to King's original aversion to the ministry because of his suspicion of the "emotionalism" in religion in Negro churches.

But King no longer fears or rejects that shouting, amen-ing emotionalism. He knows that without it — displayed twice weekly — in different Negro churches here for a full year, the bus boycott movement would never have been a success.

In fact, King's ability to hold all Montgomery's varied Negro factions together for the long 12-month struggle, was cemented in the near-worship of the elderly, emotional domestics who form the mass backbone of the Montgomery Improvement Association.

In Martin Luther King Jr., at 28, they see the son they never had or would like to have had. As one old lady explained to this writer:

"He makes up to me for all my two boys didn't do. You know, my boys is the biggest whisky-drinkers in Montgomery. But he at least brought them half the way to salvation. During the whole bus protest, they never rode the buses—even if they did save the bus fare to buy more whisky."

THE WAR IS NOT WON

AND no one is more aware than King that the diehards have by no means given up their fight against equal rights for Negroes in Montgomery, even if the arrest of a half dozen suspected arsonists and bombers has outlawed violence momentarily in large sections of the white community.

atic fringe.

It was thus that Lincoln was killed by John Wilkes Booth.

It was thus that Gandhi died at the hand of an assassin.

What would happen in Montgomery - in America - if Martin Luther King fell to his death with a furtive executioner's bullet in his heart?

We will discuss that possibility in the final installment next week.

Internationally Famous At 28, Rev. Martin Luther King Wonders What Course To Follow, Aware That Fame Has Its Drawbacks Since Some Expect Too Much

TED POSTON IN THE NEW YORK POST

[Ted Poston is a Negro reporter for the New York Post. The article appearing below was the last in a New York Post series about Dr. M. L. King, a well known Montgomery Negro minister. The question dealt with by Reporter Poston may be of interest, perhaps more than passing interest, to Montgomerians. It is authoritative as Poston spent some time here recently with Dr. King.—Ed.]

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

THE buses of Montgomery are no longer segregated. The bombings of Negro churches and homes have, for the moment at least, ceased. And the leader of the historic non-violent struggle here has received international acclaim as a young man of unusual ability.

But where, at 28, does Martin Luther King Jr. go from here?

The youthful minister pondered the question the other day in his comfortable home here, and his brooding gaze went far beyond the walls of the tastefully furnished living room.

He had returned only the day before from Washington, where he, Roy Wilkins of the NAACP, and A. Philip Randolph, AFL-CIO vice president, had conferred with scores of the most influential Negro leaders in America to plan a May 17 "Pilgrimage of Prayer" to the nation's capital.

His slanted eyes were almost closed as he considered his answers. And then he said:

"Frankly, I don't know."

A pause, and then:

"There's so much remaining to be done here in Montgomery and I feel I have a responsibility to stay and help get things done. I feel that whatever your job is, you should do it as well as if you thought it was to be your last job. But when you are as young as I am—"

HAT TRICK

HIS voice trailed off for the moment.

—But it was not a new thought for King. Just a year ago, when he had first been firmly catapulted into the headlines, he discussed the problem with Rev. J. Plus Barbour, his friend and mentor at Crozier Theological Seminary.

Barbour teased him about his nationwide publicity, and King said:

"Frankly, I'm worried to death. A man who hits the peak at 27 has a tough job ahead. People will be expecting me to pull rabbits out of the hat for the rest of my life. If I don't or there are no rabbits to be pulled, then they'll say I'm no good."

He reverted to the theme of early success as he discussed his future the other day.

"One of the frustrations of any young man is to approach the heights at such an early age," he said. "The average man reaches this point maybe in his late 40s or early 50s.

"But when you reach it so young, your life becomes a kind of decrescendo. You feel yourself fading from the screen at a time you should just be starting to work toward your goal.

"And no one knows better than I that no crowds will be waiting outside churches to greet me two years from now when some one invited me to speak."

The question of Martin Luther King's future is not a theoretical one. For he has been receiving offers of jobs and positions across the country.

There has been widespread discussion, for instance, of offering him the presidency of Fisk University in Nashville, to fill the post left vacant by the recent death of Dr. Charles Johnson, one of the country's most responsible Negro spokesmen.

King had heard of the discussion and felt flattered when he was unofficially "sounded out" on the proposal. But he gave little indication the other day that he might accept such a position.

"I feel a responsibility for continuing my work in the field of civil rights," he said, "and the church offers me more freedom to continue that work.

"When I first entered the ministry, I thought I might like to teach or be an educator like Dr. Benjamin Mays at Morehouse College, who so greatly influenced my life, but I have learned to love the pastorate now and I don't think I would like to leave it.

"I don't think I could have the same kind of freedom I have now if I were a college president. After all, colleges have boards of trustees, and many of the white trustees in the South might feel — and with justification — that my activities might hurt the institution economically."

DESIRE TO SERVE

HE PAUSED again and idly fingered the hair of his active little 17-month-old daughter, Yolande Denise ("Yoki"), who had halted her destructive course around the living room to come to rest at his knee. And he rephrased the point.

"I do have a great desire to serve humanity," he said, "but at this particular point, the pulpit gives me an opportunity and a freedom that I wouldn't have in any other sphere of activity."

Although he probably is the only man who hasn't, King said he had not heard of increasing suggestions that he become national executive of the NAACP and help direct the national fight for civil rights. But he immediately rejected the idea.

"They've got some of the ablest men in the country directing the NAACP right now," he said, "there would be no need of my services there.

"And I feel that it is the duty and responsibility of the clergy to supplement the work of the NAACP. That is why I insisted that every member of my congregation join the local chapter here long before the bus protest began.

"For the NAACP is a vital weapon in our fight for freedom. We must continue our struggle in the courts. Our major victories there have come through the work of the NAACP.

"One thing the gradualists don't seem to understand is that we are not trying to make people love us when we go to court, we are trying to keep them from killing us.

"At the same time, we must support organizations like the NAACP that are trying to mold public opinion. Legislation changes man's external relations with other men; education changes them internally."

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITY

HIS own mention of "trying to keep them from killing us" brought King back to the original question of where does he go from here. For he recalled the two attempts to bomb his own home and the danger faced by Yolando and Mrs. Coretta Scott King.

"If ever I get around to thinking about my future," he said, "I must also think of my family. I've got to think of what's best for them also. It is not pleasant to live under the threat of death even if Coretta and I reject such threats personally. But I do have a responsibility to my family, and that must always be a consideration."

The young minister feels deeply about his obligation to Montgomery and is aware of the magnitude of the obstacles still facing Negroes here in their quest for full citizenship. And much of his immediate local activity may be devoted to efforts to establish a bridge of communication between the Negro and white communities here.

"Since Time magazine published a cover story on our movement recently," he said, "I think I have observed a lessening of the tensions and feelings against me and the movement itself."

But this means no slackening, of course, of King's Montgomery Improvement Association's efforts to gain full citizenship for all Montgomerians. That was quite evident last Monday night when the still-weekly mass meeting of the former bus boycotters was held in King's Dexter Avenue Baptist Church.

Speaker after speaker, King included, stressed the MIA's next local project—the matter of Negro registration and voting. The MIA has long been conducting classes on registration for prospective Negro voters, but now they conduct tests to see how the "students" are progressing.

As Rev. S. S. Seay told the cheering throng Monday night (a throng not as large but as enthusiastic as any which attended the twice-weekly bus boycott meetings for a full year):

"We're going to test you ourselves before you go down there to the board of registrars. And if you pass our test and don't pass theirs, we'll have good reason to go down there and find out why you didn't pass. Knowledge is knowledge and the white folks don't have no corner on it, and we'll find out why you didn't pass just as sure as you are born to die."

Both Seay and the Rev. H. H. Hubbard, another older minister, twitted King that they were making their first appearance in his pulpit since he came to Montgomery in 1954. And both pointed out that Dexter Avenue Baptist is an "uppity" Negro church where the shout "Amen" is frowned on.

Court Rejects King's Appeal

Wed. 5-1-57 Montgomery, Ala.

P.1

The Rev. M. L. King Jr.'s appeal from a conviction for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law during the long Negro boycott of Montgomery city buses was thrown out of court yesterday by the Alabama Court of Appeals.

The appellate court acted on a technicality because the Negro Baptist minister was late in filing a transcript of testimony of his trial.

King was one of 90 Negroes indicted by a Montgomery County grand jury early in 1956 on charges of violating the state's anti-boycott law during the mass refusal of Montgomery Negroes to ride segregated city buses. He was the only one tried.

The young minister was fined $500 and costs. Trials of the other 89 defendants were posponed pending King's appeal.

Since then Montgomery buses have been integrated under a ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court and the boycott was ended after more than a year.

STATE LAW

The Court of Appeals, in a decision written by Judge Aubrey M. Cates Jr., cited a state law that requires the court reporter to file a transcript of testimony of a trial within 60 days but which gives a convicted defendant the right to ask for an extension of time.

Cates said King's attorney failed to ask for an extension of time when it became evident that the court reporter would be unable to transcribe the testimony within the 60-day limit.

The Negro minister was convicted March 22, 1956, and the transcript should have been delivered to the clerk of Montgomery Circuit Court, where King was tried, on or before May 21.

QUESTION RAISED

The Court of Appeals threw out the case without going into the merits of the trial itself. The question of the deadline on filing the transcript of testimony had been raised by Atty. Gen. John Patterson on behalf of the state.

After that, King's attorney filed an affidavit from court reporter W. Hallowell Lewis which said he was unable to get the transcript in time because of a heavy backlog of other cases and because he was kept busy taking testimony in subsequent trials.

The law under which the Court of Appeals acted recognizes that additional time might be needed, but Cates said no effort was made by the Negro minister's attorneys to ask for an extension.

CAN APPEAL

King now has 15 days to ask the Court of Appeals to reconsider its decision and if the court declines, he can appeal to the Alabama Supreme Court.

King's attorney, Fred D. Gray of Montgomery, said he hasn't had a chance to read the decision and that he would have nothing to say at this time.

The anti-boycott law under which King was convicted prohibits two or more persons from conspiring to hinder, delay, or prevent a company from doing business unless they have "a just cause or legal excuse" for carrying on a boycott.

Late In Filing Trial Transcript

MONTGOMERY, April 30 (AP)—The Rev. M. L. King Jr.'s appeal from a conviction for violating Alabama's anti-boycott law during the long Negro boycott of Montgomery city buses was thrown out of court today by the Alabama Court of Appeals.

The Appellate Court acted on a technicality because the young Negro Baptist minister was late in filing a transcript of testimony of his trial.

Cates said King's attorneys failed to ask for an extension of time when it became evident that the court reporter would be unable to transcribe the testimony within the 60-day limit.

The Negro minister was convicted March 22, 1956 and the Court of Appeals said the transcript should have been delivered to the clerk of Montgomery Circuit Court, where King was tried, on or before May 21.

But the transcript wasn't filed within the deadline and neither the trial court nor the Appellate Court was asked to extend the time.

The Court of Appeals threw the case out without going into the merits of the trial itself. The question of the deadline on filing the transcript of testimony had been raised by Atty. Gen. John Patterson on behalf of the state.

After that was done, King's attorneys filed an affidavit from Court Reporter W. Hallowell Lewis which said he was unable to get the transcript in time because of a heavy backlog of other cases and because he was kept busy taking testimony in subsequent trials.

Rev. King Loses Appeal In Alabama

Court fails to pass on case merits

Baltimore, Md.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "Of course we shall ask the Alabama Court of Appeals to reconsider its action," Fred D. Gray, counsel for the Montgomery Improvement Association, told the AFRO Saturday.

He was discussing the Appeals Court dismissal this week of the petition of the Rev. Martin Luther King for a retrial of his conviction of violating Alabama's anti - boycott law during the 381-day boycott of Montgomery buses.

The Rev. Mr. King is one of the 90 colored persons indicted by a Montgomery County grand jury in 1956 on charges of violating the state's law during the mass refusal of the city's populace to ride segregated buses.

THE NOTED minister was fined $500 and costs for leading the boycott movement and the cases against the 89 other leaders in the successful fight to desegregate the buses were postponed pending the appeal of the Rev. Mr. King's case.

The reason given by the Court of Appeals for throwing out the Rev. Mr. King's appeal petition was that his attorneys had been late in filing a transcript of testimony of his trial.

The state law requires the court reporter to file a transcript of testimony of a trial within 60 days. However, a convicted defendant is given the right to ask for an extension of time.

Sat. 5-11-57

COURT REPORTER W. H. Lewis said he was unable to get the transcript in time because of a heavy backlog of other cases and because he was kept busy taking testimony in subsequent cases.

Mr. Gray, the MIA attorney, emphasized that the merits of the Rev. Mr. King's case had never been considered by the Appeals Court.

* * P.2

"WE HAVE 15 days to ask the court to reconsider its dismissal of the case without a hearing on this sort of technicality," he said.

Pointing out that there are five other lawyers in the battery interested in the case—Messrs. Shores, Hall, Disney, Birmingham and Langford — he stated that if the Appeals Court refused to reconsider, they would take the case to the Alabama State Supreme Court.

CITIZEN OF YEAR — Rev. Martin L. Emancipation Proclamation Anniversary

Rev. King To Speak At Big Bethel Today

An estimated 5,000 are expected to hear the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., when he delivers the featured speech at the 94th Anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation at noon today at Big Bethel AME Church, 220 Auburn Ave., N. E. He is expected to arrive here just before the scheduled meeting.

The Emancipation Proclamation was issued by Pres. Abraham Lincoln Jan. 1, 1863 declaring all slaves in the United States to be "then, thenceforward and forever free". A preliminary proclamation had been issued Sept. 22, 1862.

Rev. King pastor of a Baptist church in Montgomery, Ala., won national attention last year after he headed the Montgomery Improvement Association which was instrumental in effecting the famous Montgomery Bus Boycott.

He advised the members of the organization to use "Passive resistance," in order to break down racial segregation on intra-city buses, which was recently accomplished when the U. S. Supreme ruled against segregated buses.

Dr. King, a native Atlantan, is the son of Rev. M. L. King, Sr. pastor of Ebenezer Baptist church here.

The featured speaker will be introduced by Rev. Samuel Williams professor of philosophy at Morehouse College and pastor of Friendship Baptist church.

Also appearing on the program will be Rayford McIver, who will read excerpts from the Emancipation Proclamation and Miss Victoria W. Butts who will read excerpts from the 1954 Supreme Court's decision on de-segregation of public schools.

Music will be supplied by the famous organist, Graham Jackson Baritone Eulrich, a student at Morris Brown College and Big Bethel's Choir No. 2.

Other scheduled to speak at the annual celebration will include Rev. A. S. Dickerson and Rev. Benjamin W. Bickers of Mt. Pleasant Baptist church, who will make a presentation to Dr. King.

The celebration is being sponsored by the local branch National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP Campaign Committee will explain the financial needs it is facing for the next year. The committee is asking every member and guest to bring a financial donation. Dean Edward C. Mitchell of Morris Brown College is chairman of the celebration.

Montgomery Pastor 'Not Acceptable'

Jaycees Nix King As 56 Honoree

DALLAS, Tex. (ANP)—Alabama Attorney General Ben Shepperd can claim at least one victory over his toughest opponent to date—Dr. Martin Luther King, minister who led the successful Negro boycott of Montgomery, Ala., buses.

Shepperd has been named by the national Junior Chamber of Commerce as one of the nation's "Ten Outstanding Young Men" for 1956.

King, whose name was submitted by the Associated Negro Press, was turned down by the JCC as "not acceptable at this time."

Shepperd, who will be honored at the chamber's annual session next week in Dallas, was given the honor for his cleanup of gambling operations in Phenix City, Ala., where racketeers killed his father in 1955.

THE ALABAMA Attorney General also was prominent in court action by his state to defeat a suit filed by the Montgomery Improvement Association testing the constitutionality of Alabama and Montgomery laws requiring segregation of the races on public buses.

Shepperd prepared the state brief in the case, asking the Supreme Court to uphold the bus segregation laws "to protect the peace and property of the sovereign state of Alabama."

The high court ruled in favor of the Negro organization headed by King, knocking out the Alabama race laws.

M. L. King to be cited by newsmen

CHICAGO—The Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the successful Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott that resulted in a Federal court ruling that outlaws segregation on Alabama public transportation, will be honored as "Man of the Year" by the Windy City Press Club at the annual awards banquet on Thur day.

The dinner affair will be held in the Parkway Ballroom at 45th and South Parkway at 7 p.m. The Rev. Mr. King will shart the platform with Langston Hughes, uoet and lecturer, who will be the principal speaker.

In naming The Rev. Mr. King for the club's highest honor, members of the Press Club stated that the Montgomery boycott ranked as the nation's most important news in the area of civil rights.

The Rev. Mr. King's leadership based on a philosophy of love and passive resistance, was described as the most effective anti-segregation weapon evolved in the last quarter of a century.

King Says Vision Told Him To Lead Integration Forces

Advertiser Montgomery Ala
Mon 1-28-57

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. told his congregation yesterday that he had a vision early one morning a year ago telling him to lead the Montgomery Negro Movement against segregation without fear.

After describing the vision to his almost-filled church a few hours after a dynamite bundle failed to explode on his porch when his family was not at home, King said in prayer:

"I realize that there were moments when I wanted to give up (leadership of the pro-integration movement) and I was afraid but You gave me a vision in the kitchen of my house and I am thankful for it."

The 28-year-old Baptist minister said in his sermon that after Montgomery Negroes began a 381-day bus boycott on Dec. 5, 1955, "I went to bed many nights scared to death" by threats against himself and his family.

"Early on a sleepless morning in January 1956," King said, "rationality left me." Then, "almost out of nowhere I heard a voice that morning saying to me:

"Preach the Gospel, stand up for the truth, stand up for righteousness."

King went on, "Since that morning I can stand up without fear. So I'm not afraid of anybody this morning.

"Tell Montgomery they can keep shooting and I'm going to stand up to them; tell Montgomery they can keep bombing and I'm going to stand up to them.

'PROMISED LAND'

"If I had to die tomorrow morning I would die happy because I've been to the mountain top and I've seen the promised land and it's going to be here in Montgomery. The old Montgomery is passing away and segregation is dying," King declared.

King's home was bombed with only slight damage last Jan. 30 and was hit by a shotgun blast Dec. 23, two days after city buses were integrated on federal court order. Since then a young Negro woman shot in both legs while riding a bus was the only serious casualty reported in six gunfire ambushes of buses and seven bombings.

King has constantly urged Negroes to remain non-violent.

Rev. M. L. King Jr. Reveals:

'Vision From Heaven Removed My Fears!'

Courier Sat. 2-1-57 p.2

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Youthful and scholarly Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. admits there were times when he was afraid after he had been selected to lead the crusade against bus segregation in this Southern city, but this fear was wiped away, he says, when he had a vision early one morning a year ago.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

This vision was dramatically described by Dr. King before his congregation two Sundays ago, a few hours after a home-made bomb failed to explode on his front porch.

After giving a vivid description of the vision, he said in prayer:

"I realize that there were moments when I wanted to give up and I was afraid, but You gave me a vision in the kitchen of my house and I am thankful for it.

"I went to bed many nights scared to death."

ONE MORNING in January, 1956, Dr. King said: "Rationality left me." Then "almost out of nowhere I heard a voice that morning saying to me:

"'Preach the Gospel, stand up for the truth, stand up for righteousness . . .'"

Dr. King continued: "Since that morning I can stand up without fear.

"Tell Montgomery they can keep shooting and I'm going to stand up to them.

"If I had to die tomorrow morning, I would die happy because I've been to the mountain top and I have seen the Promised Land and it's going to be here in Montgomery. The old Montgomery is passing away and segregation is dying."

But, I say that if democracy is to live, segregation has to die."

Rev. King was hailed by various speakers as "The King," "The Modern Moses," "Our Caleb and Joshua" and "The Ghandi of the Day."

Other speakers included Dr. William R. Adams, president, New Orleans Improvement League; Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge; Atty. REV. MARTIN LUTHER KING

DR. KING IS INVITED TO INDIA AND AFRICA

Daily World Wed. 2-13-57
Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK — Prime Minister Nkrumah of the West African Gold Coast and Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India have extended invitations to visit their respective countries to Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the Montgomery Ala. bus protest and president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, it was announced here today by "Friendship", and interracial organization providing direct aid and material support to leaders of the integration struggle in the South.

The invitation from the Gold Coast government was tendered in connection with the celebration of independence of this former British colony which will become the foreign Republic of Ghana on March 6th. Dr. King has accepted the invitation and it is expceted that Mrs. King will accompany him.

In addition to the personal messages received from Prime Minister Nehru, former U. S. Ambassador Chester Bowles who is now in India to accept the invitation to India has written Dr. King, urging that he expressed a keen desire to meet not only had India's head of state Rev. King, but many other distinguished Indian leaders have requested that he be their guest. These included Mahates Gandhi's son Devdas Gandhi, publisher of one of India's leading newspapers, and several of the Mahatma's closets associates.

In releasing this information, In Friendship emphasized that these invitations from outstanding international statemen are an expression of world interest in the struggle of Negro Americans to achieve full civil and democratic rights. As stated in Mr. Bowles' letter:

"Nothing would spread more goodwill for American than a visit here by someone who has tried to apply Gandhi's principles in the United States. The stories I have told here of your peaceful boycott and the approach you have adopted in Montgomerf have fortified people's faith in the democratic methods.

"As you know, there is nothing that hurst our relations with Asians more or undermines America's prestige more than our lingering racial discriminations. That is why the progress we make in ending segregation peacefully counts so much for the better American relations with Asia, and indeed with Africa and the whole colored majority of the human race."

Dr. King accepted the African invitation with the proviso that the situation in Montgomery would permit his absence; but stated that he was obliged to delay scheduling a trip to India bceause it would necessitate his being out of the country too long in face of the continued tensions surrounding the Montgomery bus integration efforts. While expressing a keen desire to meet Mr. Nehru "not only because the friendship of the people of India is a highly desirable goal, but also because of the valuable lessons that could be learned which might be applied in America", Dr. King emphasized the seriousness of the situation in Montgomery.

REV. KING FEATURED IN TIME

Daily World Wed. 2-13-57
Atlanta, Ga.

This is a success story about the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. 28-year-old Baptist minister in Montgomery, Ala., who rallied 50,000 people into one of the most successful boycotts in the history of America -- the 1955 Montgomery bus boycott.

This story about King is being told in Time Magazine's February 18th issue.

Time's account not only tells about the time and patience exerted by King, it also tells about his childhood schooling, Christian indoctrination, his faith in accomplishments which can be obtained through love, charity and non-violence.

It also tells about the influence his father, Rev. Martin Luther King Sr., of Atlanta played on him becoming a minister.

King was practically unknown except in a very small circle, less than 15 months ago. Today his name is known around the world. He represents the 16 million Negroes who are seeking relief from the ache of racial segregation and the pangs of discrimination, because of color."

Time's story about King reviews his activities from the time Mrs. Rosa Park refused to yield her seat to a white passenger on a Montgomery city bus, until Negro homes and churches were bombed. It also tells about Negroes riding Montgomery city buses unsegregated.

Montgomery Leader's Home Bombed Again; City Called 'Dangerous' One

Bystander Thurs. 1-31-57
Des Moines, Iowa

Montgomery, Ala.—A second attempt to blow up the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., misfired Sunday but another Negro's home was bombed in a new outbreak of racial violence.

Twelve sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were tossed on the porch at the home of King, a leader in the long and bitter fight against segregation. But the bomb failed to explode.

3 Hurt by Blast

However, another bomb tossed between a nearby Negro house and a service station damaged both buildings. Two Negro taxicab drivers and a third employee at the cab company's headquarters in the service station suffered cuts.

King, 28, a Baptist minister, and members of his family were away from home at the time. The pro-integration leader said he hasn't occupied the white frame residence "for some time."

Another

The bombing was another in a series of outbreaks of violence which began shortly after segregation was ended on Montgomery city buses Dec. 21 under a federal court order.

Buses have been ambushed with gunfire six times and a young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs. Four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were damaged heavily by dynamite explosions Jan. 10.

$2,000 Reward

Mayor W. A. Gayle said the city commission decided Sunday to offer a $2,000 reward for "any information leading to the arrest and conviction of the bombers." After the Jan. 10 bombings, Gov. James E. Folsom posted a similar $2,000 reward.

Bulletin P. 6

A crowd of several hundred Negroes gathered quickly at the scene of Sunday's bombing and King told them:

"We've got to let it be known all over Montgomery that to stop our quest for equality, it is going to be necessary to blow up 50,000 homes."

There are approximately 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery, a city of 125,000.

Later, King told his congregation in Sunday service that "even bombing 50,000 homes would not stop it because others would reach up and take the banner."

"Dangerous" City

Montgomery has become "a city that is dangerous to live in," King told an almost-full church.

So far city authorities have resufed offers of outside help in curbing violence. Negroes have appealed to President Eisenhower to say something about the situation.

Some of the Negroes at the bombing scene were visibly angered and police arrested two on charges of disorderly conduct. They were booked at city jail as Vurlie Wilkins, 28, and Samuel Wallace, 26, and released on $100 bond each.

There Are No Methodist Saints

Advertiser Sun. 2-17-57 P. 4-B

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—I would like to clarify one point regarding your editorial concerning Dr. King in last Sunday's Advertiser. In your opening sentence, you stated: "A Baptist, Dr. Martin Luther King, has attained sainthood in a Methodist publication."

Many people mistook this statement to mean that the Methodist Church had canonized Dr. King and thus made him a saint. This, of course, is not true. The truth of the matter is that the Methodist Church does not make anyone saints.

Dr. Thompson's reference to him as a saint was in the same general sense as any Christian is a saint. This is indicated by the manner he used the term "saint" without a capital and also by the very construction of the sentence itself: "This is not reserved for exceptional saints like Martin Luther King . . . It must come home to every Sunday school student and teacher."

I feel that Dr. G. Stanley Frazer's letter published Feb. 13 makes the position of most of the ministers in the Methodist Church located in the South quite clear, but a clarification of the fact that the Methodist Church has not made Dr. King a saint is certainly in order.

No one person has the power to make even a single statement for the Methodist Church unless it is an interpretation of the "Discipline of the Methodist Church," and even then it must be remembered it is merely one man's interpretation of our law.

Negro Home Dynamited In Alabama

Herald Tribune Mon. 1-28-57
New York, N. Y.

Pastor Escapes A Second Bomb

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 27 (AP).—A second attempt to blow up the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King jr. misfired today but another Negro's home was bombed in a new outbreak of racial violence.

Twelve sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were tossed on the porch at the home of Mr. King, a leader in the long and bitter fight against segregation, but the bomb failed to explode.

Another bomb tossed between a Negro house and a filling station a short distance away did go off, however, and damaged both buildings. Two Negro taxicab drivers and a third employee of the cab company headquartered at the service station suffered cuts and scratches but no one was seriously injured.

Minister, Family Away

Mr. King, a Baptist minister,

and members of his family were away from home at the time. The pro-integration leader said he hasn't occupied the white frame residence "for some time."

The bombing was another in a series of outbreaks of violence which began shortly after segregation was ended on Montgomery city buses Dec. 21 under a Federal court order. The Supreme Court ruled city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

Buses have been ambushed with gunfire six times and a young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs. Four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were heavily damaged by dynamite explosions Jan. 10.

Rewards Offered

Mayor W. A. Gayle said the City Commission decided today to offer a $2,000 reward for "any information leading to the arrest and conviction of any one who has thrown any bombs." After the Jan. 10 bombings, Gov. James E. Folsom posted a similar $2,000 reward.

A crowd of several hundred Negroes quickly gathered at the scene of today's bombing and Mr. King told them:

"We've got to let it be known all over Montgomery that to stop our quest for equality it is going to be necessary to blow up 50,000 homes."

There are approximately 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery, a city of 125,000.

Later, Mr. King told his congregation in Sunday service that "even bombing 50,000 homes would not stop it, because others would reach up and take the banner." Montgomery has become "a city that is dangerous to live in," Mr. King told an almost full church.

Non-Violence Policy

Negroes must continue to follow a policy of non-violence, the twenty-eight-year-old minister said, because, "our oppressors control the police, the National Guard even, and if they send the Federal government in here that will be white folks, too."

So far city authorities have refused offers of outside help in curbing violence. Negroes have appealed to President Eisenhower to say something about the situation.

Some of the Negroes at the bombing scene were visibly angered and police arrested two on charges of disorderly conduct. They were booked at city jail as Veurlie Wilkins, twenty-eight, and Samuel Wallace, twenty-six, and released on $100 bond each.

Three Negroes escaped serious injury when the home of Allen Robertson was shattered in today's explosion. Mr. Robertson, fifty-nine, a hospital attendant, said he and his wife and daughter were asleep. Albert McHanney, James Richardson and Eddie McWhorter, all employees of a taxi company, suffered cuts and bruises.

In the ten-year history of the Russwurm Awards, recognition has been given four times to the N. A. A. C. P. or persons associated with the staff, and three times to the National Urban League or its executives. Recipients have ranged from stars in the entertainment field and motion picture companies to persons in high places in industry and government.

Both President Eisenhower and former president Harry S. Truman have received Russwurm recognition. Such television figures as Edward R. Murrow, Ed Sullivan, and Steve Allen have been named. Sports figures such as Jackie Robinson, Roy Campanella, Joe Louis, and Branch Rickey are holders of the award. On the other hand, some of the recipients have been little known persons in remote sections of the nation who, in the opinion of the newspaper publishers group have made signal advances "toward the American Way of Life."

The Russwurm Awards are part of the national observance of National Negro Newspaper Week, March 17-23 sponsored by the National Newspaper Publishers Association. This marks the 130th Anniversary of the Negro Newspaper.

Look Who's Smearing King!

Afro American

BATON ROUGE, La. — The blast delivered Friday against the Rev. Martin Luther King, who "let the cat out anywhere" drive of the Montgomery (Ala.) Improvement Association, M.A. victorious bus boycott, came from a disgruntled ex-Communist, whose fabrications have been so [illegible] that the Department of Justice no longer uses him as a "paid informer."

He is Manning Johnson, whose attempts to smear Dr. Ralph Bunche as a Communist several years ago brought about the unprecedented action of the Loyalty Board entirely reversing itself and beginning an investigation of its own witnesses, Johnson and another ex-Communist, Leonard Patterson.

The six-member board unanimously found there was "no doubt as to the loyalty" of Dr. Bunche, Nobel Prize winner and chief American member of the United Nations secretariat.

WIDELY PLAYED up by the press in the South this week was Johnson's assertion before the Louisiana Legislative Committee on Segregation, whose avowed purpose is to probe influences behind racial unrest, that he thought the Rev. Mr. King "could stand a close investigation."

What manner of a man is this, who would attack the minister son of a minister by charging that he was "a dastardly misleader, leading the colored people of the South down to destruction and bloodshed?"

The record of the Bunche case shows him up for what he really is.

IN HIS testimony Johnson swore that he and Dr. Bunche "jointly attended a strategy meeting of eight or 10 top colored Communists" at a Howard University conference on race problems held in Washington in 1934.

Leonard Patterson generally corroborated this testimony of Manning Johnson, but Dr. Bunche flatly denied the charge. The latter showed that he had published articles attacking the Communist Party in the period Johnson said he was following the Communist line.

The real climax of the drama was provided by a surprise witness for Dr. Bunche, who admitted that he had been a Communist at the time and who testified that there had never been such a strategy meeting in his office as the gathering described by Manning Johnson.

THE ONLY evidence brought forward by Johnson at the hearing bearing one scintilla of truth was the fact that when Dr. Bunche was attending Amherst College back in 1925, one of the other three colored students there was Benjamin Davis Jr., who later became a leader in the Communist Party.

This was "guilt by association" so remote that the Loyalty Board unanimously scoffed at it and ordered the transcript of the hearing sent to the Justice Department for investigation of possible perjury by Dr. Bunche's accusers.

THE LOUISIANA Legislative Committee, this week, also heard testimony from another ex - Communist, who charged that "the whole force of the Communist Party is concentrated on the NAACP," trying to gain control.

He is Joseph Z. Kornfedder of Detroit, who claims to have helped to form the Communist Party in the United States. In answer to a question by one of the committee members, this "authority on communist strategy" admitted that he left the party in 1919.

Reasons Why Theologian Calls Dr. King Saint

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — A recent editorial has taken me to task for my reference to Dr. Martin Luther King as "an exceptional saint." The editor supports his criticisms by reference to Webster's definition of saint-hood.

24 Mt. 4-H

But the church looks at sainthood a little differently than does the famous lexicographer. The Roman Catholic Church, for example, requires two things in a saint: (1) that he have been dead for an appropriate number of years, and (2) that he shal lhave performed some attestable miracle.

As for Dr. King, he is not dead; though doubtless some of his enemies wish he were. So on this score he cannot qualify.

But as for the other test, he has performed one of the most notable miracles in America. In the midst of a dangerously explosive situation, at grave danger to himself and his family, he guided the Negroes of Montgomery in the achievement of their legal rights as citizens of a democracy. And he did it without violence on the part of the Negroes. Furthermore, and even more remarkable, he has refused to hate or fight back at people who have threatened him, ridiculed him, sought to bribe him, and even have set off bombs at his house.

I submit, this is a miracle of the first order.

Any other candidates care to compete with the Rev. Martin Luther King for the saintly crown in Montgomery? In my way of thinking this is amazingly similar to the way in which Jesus of Nazareth faced the enemies of His day. This is sainthood in man's church.

Rev. Martin Luther King Chats With Union Students

The Rev. Bus-Integration Leader Hoping To See Nixon

Washington, April 5 (AP)—The Rev. Martin Luther King, who led a successful protest by Negroes against bus segregation in Montgomery, Ala., said today he hopes to see Vice-President Nixon soon to discuss "the whole matter of civil rights."

Without going into details, King described as "very fruitful" a discussion he had with Nixon last month in Africa, where both had gone for ceremonies incident to the old African Gold Coast becoming the independent nation of Ghana within the British Commonwealth.

King told reporters here today that Nixon was "quite open-minded," but said he could not repeat what Nixon had said to him.

Vice President Nixon Meets Montgomery's King

World
Sat. 3-16-57 Birm. Ala.

Whether by coincident or on purpose, the general public will be gratified in that Vice President Nixon met in person Montgomery's Martin Luther King, Jr., and had a chat with him.

This was not in the deep South region but was in far away Ghana where both had gone as goodwill emissaries from their heaths.

P. 8

Vice-President Nixon is the much traveled, dashing heir apparent to the presidency, who has made an excellent record on his own accounts. Considered a general favorite for the presidency, his words as well as his gestures are of much import.

Dr. King, of course is the Dexter Avenue pastor who figured so conspicuously in the montgomery bus affair. It was possibly upon his motion that President Eisenhower was asked to make a speech somewhere in the deep South where there were bombings, torch-throwing and demonstrations in process against the integration of the buses and in some points demonstrations against the integration of the public schools.

From the reports the meeting of King and Nixon was cordial; the Vice President is reported to have invited him to Washington where the two will be able to converse more effectively.

As is known, Vice President Nixon is a direct representative of the President. Having intimated such commitment, it would go without saying that the President has his time and method of treatment of the conditions touching those citizens in the deep South upon whom reprisal has been visited because of the school segregation decision. He has not been unmindful of the interest of the citizens invilved and as has been said all along, such will not be passed up lightly.

At the celebration of Ghana, two great Americans met in the persons of Richard Nixon and Martin Luther King, Jr. Both are young and vigorous and each possessing the sense of modern liberality, let it be hoped that more will become of this cordial meeting on African soil. Let there be an understanding between the excellent Vice-President, and young King who is one of our most able and popular young leaders.

'Seven Or Eight' Arrested In Bombings; White Man Confess Shooting Into Bus

Police Probe For Link In Dynamiting, Sniping

Advertiser 1/1
Montgomery, Ala.
Jan 1957

By TOM SELLERS
Advertiser City Editor

The arrest of "seven or eight" white men in connection with recent bombings of Negro homes and churches in Montgomery was announced at a tensely dramatic press conference in City Hall last night.

Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers also said one white man has admitted in a signed confession shooting into a racially integrated bus on the morning of Dec. 31. The man was identified as Henry Alexander, 2[illegible] Tarbrough St.

TO BE CHARGED

Alexander will be charged with assault with intent to murder or assault with a deadly weapon, the commissioner said.

All the men are in city jail and are being questioned extensively. Sellers said police are seeking to determine whether a conspiracy exists in the group linking the bombings and bus shootings.

Sellers declined to say whether any group is connected with the Ku Klux Klan. "I'd rather not answer that at present," he said in answer to questions by newspaper and television men during a conference in the Commission chambers.

NAMES

The commissioner also would not give the public the names of the men held in connection with the bombings and refused to give their ages, saying [illegible] that "seven or eight" were in jail. The suspects have not yet been officially charged, he said.

If formally accused of setting off the dynamite bombs at Negro dwellings which were inhabited, any of the men could receive the death sentence under Alabama law if convicted.

Formal charges will have to be determined by the city attorney, Sellers said.

Announcement of the arrests came one year to the day after the first bomb was exploded in Montgomery during a long and bitter fight which brought a federal court order last Dec. 21 halting enforced segregation on city buses.

It was on the night of Jan. 30, 1956, that a dynamite bomb was set off at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Negro integration campaign and a mass boycott of city buses which preceded the end of segregation. No one was injured in that explosion.

A total of 19 major acts of violence have occurred during the boycott, including nine bombings and 10 shootings. The first bus shooting was on Dec. 7, 1955, only two days after the boycott began.

Alexander, who Sellers said confessed that he shot into driver W. H. Fullilove's bus on Dec. 31, also is implicated in one or more of the bombings, Sellers said.

The commissioner said police have the .38 caliber short pistol used by Alexander, a bullet and a signed confession.

The case was broken early Sunday morning by the work of City Detective J. D. Shows, who "recognized some people in a car and took down the tag number," Sellers revealed.

The suspects were at the scene of the bombing of the Peoples Taxi Co., corner of High and Jackson streets. Nearby, on South Jackson, a bomb had been placed on the porch of the Rev. King's home, but it did not explode.

Sellers said the department has "several confessions and statements tying in with certain bombings." Others are still being questioned, he added. As of now, the confessions only link "certain ones with certain bombings."

Alexander was arrested on suspicion Sunday afternoon at 3:30 in Selma. The arrest was made by City Dets. Shows and J. T. Ward, Sellers said. Also aiding in the pickup were Alabama State Investigators Jake Kreis and Lewis Phillips.

Advertiser

The commissioner said two of the men being held were arrested in Selma, one in Elba, and the others in Montgomery. He added that the confessions and statements obtained tie in specifically with the bombing of the Peoples Cab Co. on Sunday and the dynamiting of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy's home—one of six which occurred here Jan. 10.

1-2-57

"We are most happy to make this announcement," asserted Sellers during his opening statement to the press.

He said he expects other arrests to be made but would not estimate the number. One source earlier had speculated that 18 or 20 persons eventually would be involved.

Sellers said all of the men in custody are residents of Montgomery.

Their names will be released when they are formally charged, he added.

Asked if the FBI had been involved in the bomb investigations, Sellers replied emphatically, "No sir."

The $2,000 reward offered by the city had nothing to do with the break in the case, according to the commissioner. The vital factor was Detective Shows' investigation of the men at the bombing scene Sunday, Sellers said.

Among other confessions, one man admitted throwing an unused bomb into a creek in Chisholm (north Montgomery), the commissioner disclosed. The bomb was found by three boys.

Sellers said the suspects gave "intimidation" as their motive in the bombings. However, he would not divulge any other details of the confessions.

The first two suspects were arrested Sunday, (Jan. 27) a short time after a combination Negro service station-taxi stand and a home next door to it were bombed at 4:30 a.m. The police also found a 12-stick unexploded dynamite bomb a few hundred feet away on the porch of the parsonage of the Rev. Martin Luther King, 28-year-old leader of the pro-integration Negro movement. This predawn explosion-dud combination capped a series of dynamitings that have kept this city on edge for weeks.

On Jan. 10, four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers were targets of the bombers. The Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of a Negro congregation, and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a Negro leader with King in the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which led the 381-day bus boycott. This series of blasts took place between 2 a.m. and 6 a.m.

Graetz and King each have been targets of the dynamiters. King reportedly also was fired on with a rifle but he didn't report it to police.

SIMILAR BOMBS FOUND

In addition to the undetonated bomb found on King's front porch, police also have uncovered others which matched in many details—fuse, cap and capping method, aluminum rod, masking tape and type of dynamite used.

One was found by three youngsters in the Chisholm section, submerged in water under a seldom-used bridge leading to an abandoned gravel pit. The bomb provided many clues for police who made a rush trip to Birmingham to check out some details. They also checked out some suspects living in Birmingham.

The dynamite found near "Vandy's Place" was of the "ditching variety" commonly used in South Alabama. The search, for a time, centered in some down-state cities such as Selma, Troy and Brewton. Prattville also got the once over.

Last Sunday's explosion shattered the Peoples Filling Station and Peoples Taxi Co. and did extensive damage to the home of Alex Robertson, [illegible]-year-old Negro hospital orderly who lives at 342 S. Jackson St.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 8 (AP) — Charges against seven white men arrested after the bombing of Negro churches and home in Montgomery were continued in City Court today with announcement that they will be presented to the Montgomery County Grand Jury next week.

City Judge Eugene Loe announced also that if the grand jury fails to indict any of the seven defendants, the charges against them will be dismissed in city Court.

Loe made his announcement without calling any of the seven men up for trial.

He said defense attorneys asked for a continuance because they needed more time to prepare their case.

The seven white men were arrested following a wave of violence that began shortly after Montgomery buses were racially integrated under a Federal Court order last Dec. 21. The violence began with six gunfire attacks on the buses.

Charged with taking part in one or more of the incidents are: Eugene Hall, Charlie Bondiford, Donald Dunlap, Henry Alexander, James D. York, Raymond C. Britt Jr., and Sonny Kyle Livingstone Jr.

fense attorneys that the evidence against them will be presented to the grand jury next week.

Judge Eugene Loe announced the agreement when the charges were called up for hearing in his court Friday morning. At the same time, he said that if the grand jury fails to indict any of the men, the charges against them will be dismissed in city court.

The defendants, all residents of Montgomery, were arrested after four Negro churches, a service station and taxicab stand, and the homes of two Negroes and a pro-integration white minister were bombed in a wild outbreak of violence following the end of bus segregation. Two other dynamite bombs were found unexploded.

Before that, the newly-integrated city buses were ambushed with gunfire six times and a young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs.

Charged, all

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Montgomery police last week arrested eight white men in connection with recent bombings of Negro homes, churches and businesses and other acts of violence stemming from the city's racial troubles.

Only five of the men were identified by police. They are Eugene S. Hall, a member and former director of a Montgomery White Citizens council; Charles Bodiford, J. D. York, Ray Britt and a man listed only as Dunlap. P.1

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellars, who has done little talking about the case, said four of the men were under $1,000 bond for conspiracy to commit a felony.

The fifth prisoner, Ray Britt, was being held under $10,000 bond in an unspecified charge.

An unidentified official said he was certain that several of the arrested men were White Citizen council members, and that at least one was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Six dynamite bombings had been set off at the homes and churches of Negro leaders who led the successful fight for bus integration. In addition, the integrated buses have been fired upon repeatedly.

The last bomb blast occurred last week, and 12 sticks of unexploded dynamite were found at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., a Negro leader, whose home had already been attacked two other times.

2 Ministers' Homes Also Are Blasted In Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 10 (AP).—Four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers—one white and one Negro—were bombed here early today less than 12 hours after another racially integrated city bus was ambushed with gunfire.

No injuries were reported.

Mayor W. A. Gayle ordered bus service halted "until further notice" as a precautionary measure. He said an informal emergency meeting of the City Commission would be held today.

The mayor said he talked with Gov. James E. Folsom about the situation. "I told him I didn't think we need any help. I think we have the situation in hand."

Reward is Offered

After a survey of damage, Gov. Folsom offered a $2,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of the person or persons who carried out the bombings.

The six bombings were the most violent outbursts of trouble since racial segregation was ended on buses in Montgomery December 21 under a Federal Court order.

Assistant Police Chief J. B. Ruckers said the most severly damaged church was the Mount Olive Church on the southwest edge of Montgomery. What "looked like the biggest charge of all," he said, was apparently placed in the front vestibule of the church and blew the front wall out and the inner wall into the church auditorium.

Church Corner Blown Away

One corner of the Bell Street Baptist Church was blown away at the rear of the building. The choir loft behind the pulpit was wrecked and part of the ceiling above the pulpit knocked loose.

Both the home and the church of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, one of the leaders in the long bus boycott which preceded the start of integration, were heavily damaged by bombs apparently made of dynamite.

A corner of the front porch was blown off Mr. Abernathy's home. The Negro minister was reported visiting in Atlanta, where Negroes also have started a campaign to end bus segration.

Another bomb blew off doors and part of the roof of the Negro First Baptist Church, where Mr. Abernathy is pastor.

Another Home Damaged

The home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, a white minister who serves an all-Negro congregation at the Trinity-Lutheran Church, was another target of the bombing attacks. The front door was blown in and walls damaged.

Eleven unexploded sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were found in front of Mr. Graetz's home. Police de-fused them.

The white minister also was active in the Negro bus boycott and has supported the integration campaign. Another bomb exploded at his home several months ago, but he was out of town and no one was hurt then either.

A three-foot section of wall by a door was blown out of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church in today's outbreak. The pastor, the Rev. H. H. Johnson is another integration leader.

Blast Fired Into Bus

A shotgun blast was fired into a city bus at it was finishing one of the first night runs last night since recent bus shootings brought a ban on after dark operations.

It was the sixth armed attack on buses. A young Negro expectant mother was shot in both legs in one attack.

White Clerics In Report Flay Violence Here

Montgomery, Ala. Star 1-11-57

While a victim of yesterday's bombings looked on, a group of white religious leaders issued a statement deploring a renewal of violence here.

The group of about 25 Protestant ministers and a Jewish Rabbi included the Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of a Negro church whose home was one of the six buildings dynamited in a series of pre-dawn bombings here yesterday.

Nearly two hours in formulating their statement, the church group urged residents to maintain law and order. Segregation was not mentioned in the document.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT

Their statement follows:

"As a group of religious leaders of this community, we feel it our sacred duty to issue this statement to our people and to all the citizens of this community:

"1. We call upon all citizens to join with us in an act of repentance for the violence done against the homes of some of our citizens, against houses of God, against peace, order and good will of our community.

"Whatever our differences of opinion may be we cannot remain silent and allow our community to lapse into the barbarity of terrorism and intimidation.

"2. We call upon you to offer fervent thanks to Almighty God that none were injured in the bombings of Jan. 10 and to pray both publicly and privately that by His grace, we may be guided into the ways of righteousness and peace.

"3. We call upon the God fearing people of Montgomery to highly resolve that violence must not be allowed to continue and that law and order must be maintained in our midst."

FBI QUIZ ALSO URGED

Memphis News

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 13.—A Negro minister whose church and home were bombed recently prayed in the damaged church Sunday for "just a word" from President Eisenhower against violence in Montgomery.

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a pro-integration leader, said he had suspended all night services at his Negro First Baptist Church "because we feel it might endanger the lives of our congregation." 1-14-57

Pledge To Continue

Some other ministers who were the targets of six bombings Thursday urged from their pulpits that their attackers be forgiven. They pledged to continue efforts to obtain complete racial equality.

There were no other reports of night services being canceled.

The bombings came three weeks after Negroes won racial equality on Montgomery buses under Federal Court order. Bus service was suspended indefinitely by the city commission after the bombings. No one was injured in the attacks.

Rev. U. J. Fields, pastor of the Bell Street Baptist Church which the fire department declared unsafe for use after it was bombed, held services for his congregation in the basement of another church. Rev. Fields said the city should assume responsibility for repairing his church since it had not provided proper police protection.

Rev. Fields also called for President Eisenhower to step into the situation.

Rev. H. H. Johnson, pastor of the bombed Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, told his congregation at the damaged church that "there seems every reason for the FBI to come into this."

Study Is Reported

The Justice Department was reported studying whether the Federal Government has jurisdiction to enter the case.

Rev. Abernathy, vice president of the Montgomery Improvement Association that has led Negro integration efforts for 13 months, prayed for the President "to speak out on this situation."

With boarded up windows flanking him where stained glass had been, Rev. Abernathy said, "We know that if the President would just say a word to the city, it would have great value."

The minister also asked "moral courage for the city officials," who he said are not now providing sufficient police protection. He called Sunday a "dark and bleak day for all churches in our city, including our white churches."

The Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of a Negro Trinity-Lutheran congregation, took as his sermon theme "How Often Shall We Forgive," and asked forgiveness again for his attackers. His home was bombed for the second time Thursday night.

The Rev. Mr. Graetz reported that since then he had received one threat, "which isn't more than normal." His young wife spoke up to say there had been several more. "Oh," the minister said, "I hadn't heard about them yet."

4 Negro Churches and Homes of 2 Ministers Attacked in Montgomery Outbreak

Fri. 1-11-57 Newsweek

By The Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 10—The worst outbreak of violence in the fight over bus segregation left Montgomery without public transportation today.

City authorities halted bus service indefinitely after nighttime bombing attacks on four Negro churches and the homes of two anti-segregation ministers. One of the ministers is white.

Two Homes, Two Churches Hit By Dynamite Blasts

World Sat. 1-12-57 B'ham, Ala. P.1

By J. RUSSELL BONER

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS) — A new wave of violence struck Montgomery, Ala. Thursday, as Negro ministers in Atlanta launched a religious war against racial segregation on buses.

Four dynamite bombs exploded in Montgomery early Wednesday morning damaging two Negro churches and the homes of 2 ministers who led a year-long campaign in the Alabama capital city against bus segregation.

Police said no one was injured in the explosions.

A shot was fired into a Montgomery bus last night, and the city immediately suspended night operations, which had only been resumed hours before.

Targets of the early morning bombings in Montgomery — where bus segregation was first ended in the South under U. S. court order — were two Baptist churches, the home of the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, vice president of the Montgomery Improvement Association and the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white minister of the all Negro Trinity Lutheran church.

Both ministers were leaders in the year-long Montgomery "walking and praying" boycott ended last month with a federal court order that bus segregation is illegal.

The Montgomery campaign was adopted as a model for Negro protests against so-called "jim-crow" seating at Birmingham, Tallahassee and Miami, and yesterday a similar campaign got underway in the southeast's largest city, Atlanta.

One of the unexploded bombs was found on the porch of one-time NAACP official J. L. Leflore early Thursday morning. Later Leflore postponed indefinitely a mass meeting that had been scheduled for Thursday night to discuss segregation.

A small explosion did minor damage to the home of Walter Johnson a 51-year-old Mobile man. Two other adults and five children were in the house, but all escaped injury.

A second unexploded bomb was found beneath the bedroom of William Jackson, a neighbor of Johnson. Fuses on both the exploded dynamite bombs had been lighted, but had gone out.

Three crosses were burned before Negro homes during the night in one section of Mobile.

Bombing Scenes . . .

The Mount Olive Baptist Church of Montgomery, Ala., was one of six religious buildings and parsonages ripped by hate bombers in pre-dawn campaign. The church, located on Old Selma Rd., just outside city limits, was the final victim.

Here is an example of what the bigot means when he calls himself a "free White American Christian." The scene was photographed at the Bell Street Baptist Church in Montgomery, Ala., after the edifice was ripped by a hate bomb in the racists' drive against Negro churches and pastors.

No one was reported injured.

The City Commission order suspending busline operations "until further notice" forced thousands of bus riders, white and Negro, to find other means of transportation to and from work.

P. 1

[In Atlanta, five Negro ministers were arrested for refusing to observe the state law on segregated seating on a city bus. The group sought a court test of the law.]

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers ordered all auxiliary policemen on duty, and the commission suggested a midnight curfew for teen-agers. There was the possibility of a Federal investigation of the violence. The Justice Department in Washington said the Federal Bureau of Investigation was looking into it to see if a Federal law had been violated.

Meanwhile in Mobile, 200 miles to the southwest, an explosion slightly damaged a Negro's home. Attempts were made, the police said, to bomb the homes of two others.

In Montgomery the Rev. Robert Graetz, a white clergyman who has fought against segregation, escaped unhurt with members of his family when one of the bombs tore down a door at his home.

11 Sticks of Dynamite

But the police said another bomb tossed in Mr. Graetz' front yard might have caused death or serious injury except for a faulty fuse. Officers found eleven sticks of dynamite tied to a metal tube.

Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said police experts hoped to get fingerprints from a rack attached to the bomb, but that the dynamite itself had been thrown in the river.

Officers removed the two-foot fuse. But Captain Brown said the department had no demolition specialists and the bomb was "too dangerous to fool with."

The bomb throwers also shattered the home of another integration leader, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a Negro minister, and four churches, including the First Baptist, where Mr. Abernathy is pastor.

Part of the basement and roof were damaged at the first church. Across town other bombs ripped large holes in the Bell St. Baptist Church and the Mount Olive Church. The Hutchinson Baptist Church near Mr. Abernathy's home was also hit. Part of a wall and windows were blown out there.

Gov. James E. Folsom inspected the damage and offered a $2,000 reward for arrest and conviction of the bomb-throwers.

Mr. Folsom also conferred with Mayor W. A. Gayle and said he is ready to offer State Police or National Guard troops if needed.

Ala. 1-11-57

Mr. Gayle said "we can handle this situation ourselves. We don't need any additional help."

Mr. Abernathy was in Atlanta at the time of the bombings. Negroes there have begun bus integration efforts. Accompanied by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., another Montgomery integrationist, Mr. Abernathy flew back to Montgomery. He could not be reached for comment.

Three crosses were burned in front of Negro homes in Mobile along with the bombings attempts there.

One bomb caused slight damage to the home of Walter Johnson, a Negro. He said members of his family had escaped unhurt.

J. L. Leflore, executive secretary of the defunct Mobile chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he had found a crude, unexploded bomb at his home.

Another bomb that failed to detonate was discovered later at the home of William Jackson, who lives near Mr. Johnson.

The bombings in Montgomery brought to nine the total of violent explosions there since Negroes started a bus boycott. The boycott preceded the Supreme Court decision holding bus segregation unconstitutional.

Mr. King's home was bombed at one time and hit by shotgun pellets on another occasion. Mr. Graetz' residence was bombed last August, but he and his family were out of town.

The bombings came less than twelve hours after a Montgomery city bus was ambushed with shotgun fire, the sixth incident of that kind since bus segregation ended.

No one was injured aboard the bus. It had no passengers and was on the way to the garage at the end of the day's run.

A Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs in a previous bus attack.

2 Indicted In Bombings Go To Trial Feb. 28

MONTGOMERY, Feb. 18 (AP)—Two white men indicted for the bombing of Negro churches have surrendered and are docketed for early trials, but other defendants may have won a delay in their prosecution.

More than 12 hours after they had turned themselves in, Sheriff Mac Butler's office disclosed today that Raymond C. Britt Jr., and Sinny Kyle Livingston Jr., had been booked on grand jury indictment and released on bond.

Later in the day their trials were set for Feb. 28.

Britt, 27-year-old employe of a flooring company, was charged with bombing two Negro churches,, the Hutchinson Street Baptist and the First Baptist, on Jan. 10 and with dynamiting a Negro taxicab stand Jan. 27. He was released on bonds totaling $7500.

The names of other defendants named in the indictments remained secret pending their arrests.

Livingston, 18, an employe of a road machinery firm, also was accused on the dynamiting of the Hutchinson Street Church, one of four Negro churches and two ministers' homes bombed on Jan. 10. He is free on $2500 bond.

The bombinbs, and earlier gunfire attacks on city buses, grew out of the ending of racial segregation on buses in Montgomery. A Federal Court order banning continued enforcement of city and state segregation laws went into effect last Dec. 21.

Britt and Livingston were indicted under a state law which fixes a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison for the dynamiting of a public building.

Britt could get 30 years on the three charges against him.

Whether either man is a member of the Ku Klux Klan or any other pro-segregation organization wasn't made known. But Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal said recently that the bombings were done by KKK members.

Meanwhile, if any of the other defendants were indicted for the dynamiting of an occupied residence, a capital offense under Alabama law, they apparently won an automatic delay in their trials until the May term of court.

If a defendant charged with a crime for which he can get the death penalty hasn't been arraigned by the time a jury panel is drawn, his case is continued until the next term of court unless a new venire is drawn. That is seldom if ever done in Montgomery courts.

Among the seven white men arrested by city police last month were Britt and Livingston and two others charged with bombing the inhabited home of a Negro minister, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy. Those men are James D. York and Henry Alexander.

Whether they were indicted with Britt and Livingston hasn't been made public because Alabama law prohibits identification of an indicted person until he has been taken into custody.

The men arrested by city police are free on city court bonds which aren't recognized in state courts. Three of them, Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap, are known to have escaped indictment. They were charged by police with conspiracy in the throwing of bombs which failed to explode.

Nine Bombings, Ten Shootings, Aftermath Of Court Decisions

Journal Sat. 2-16-57 Wilmington, N.C.

P. 5

Since December 5, 1955, during the successful 14-month Negro boycott of city buses here, a total of 19 major crimes, excluding many minor incidents, have been prepetrated against Negro citizens.

The series of violence includes nine bombings and 10 shootings by racists who are bent on keeping schools and buses segregated here despite the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court.

The single major casualty was Mrs. Rosa Jordan, a young mother who was shot in both legs while riding a city bus last Dec. 28.

The following is a time-table of violence in the ord - it occurred:

Dec. 7, 1955: The Montgomery bus boycott wa two days old and a city bus was struck by gunfire. The same night two Negro homes were ripped with bullets.

Jan. 30 1956: The home of the Rev. Martin L. King, leader of the boycott, was hit by a dynamite blast. Ne injuries were reported.

Feb. 1: An explosion was reported on the lawn of E. D. Nixon, leader and former head of the state NAACP chapter.

Aug. 25: The home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of an all-Negro church was ripped by bombs. No one, however, was inlets tore into both legs of Mrs. jured.

Dec. 26: After five days of integration on city buses without violence, two buses were fired upon.

Dec. 28: A city bus enroute to Boylston was fired upon and bul- Rosa Jordan, an expectant mother. As a result night time bus service was halted until Jan. 2.

Jan. 9, 1957—A moving automobile passed a bus firing twice upon the vehicle.

Jan 10: In an unprecented act of violence for this city, a series of pre-dawn bombings shattered to bits four Negro churches and the homes of the Rev. Graetz and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy. The church damages included virtual demolition of Rev. Abernathy's church; and three other Baptist churches—Mt. Olive; Bell Street; and Hutchinson Street.

Jan. 27—A bomb exploded in an alley between a gas station and a residence doing extensive damage to the house. An unexploded missle was found the same night on the lawn of Rev. King's home.

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy and the Rev. Robert S. Graetz. Another bomb failed to explode at the home of Mr. Graetz, a white pastor of a Negro church.

Seventeen days later, a Negro service station-taxicab stand and an adjoining Negro residence were bombed and an unexploded bomb containing 12 sticks of dynamite was found at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., a Negro minister who has led the integration fight.

Bomb Indictments Issued, Segregation Defended

Star Sun. 2-17-57 P. 20-A

Washington D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 16 (AP)—A grand jury, returning indictments in the recent outbreak of racial violence in Montgomery, served notice today that segregation must be preserved without bombs and bullets.

An unspecified number of defendants were indicted on charges growing out of the bombings of Negro homes and churches after the end of segregation on city buses.

Their names and the specific charges against them were withheld until they are taken into custody.

Seven white men were arrested by city police last month after four Negro churches, a service station-taxicab stand and three residences were dynamited and integrated city buses fired on six times.

Circuit Clerk John Matthews, who delivered the warrants to the sheriff's office, said no indictments were returned against three of the seven defendants who had been charged with misdemeanor offense.

These were Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap, who had been charged with conspiracy to commit a felony in connection with unexploded bombs found outside homes of two pro-integration ministers.

All seven defendants are free on city bonds, and the others, if indicted, must be rearrested on the grand jury charges.

The 18-man all-white grand jury, in returning the indictments, said: "We believe we are expressing the feeling of our citizens who believe in law and order, and that they are a great majority of our people."

Continuing, the report said: "We are not unmindful that there is a feeling among some that the people connected with the bombings should go unpunished," but added:

Score "Cowardly Stealth"

"We prefer that the problems of maintaining segregation be met openly and honestly rather than with cowardly stealth and violence under cover of darkness."

The jurors said "we are determined to maintain" racial segregation in Montgomery, but also to "maintain law and order as it applies both to those who support segregation and to those who oppose it."

"Our action in returning indictments. . . . should not be construed as any weakening in the determination of the people of Montgomery to preserve our segregated institutions."

The grand jury spoke critically of some of the actions of pro-integration Negro leaders in Montgomery and of the United States Supreme Court in reversing convictions of Negroes convicted in Alabama courts.

Recall Earlier Warning

Recalling that another grand jury a year ago had warned of threatened violence because of "the course of action being directed by the NAACP and the Negro leaders of Montgomery who were fighting segregation," the jurors observed today:

"That course of action has continued and violence has followed."

The warning last year came from a grand jury which indicted 90 Negro leaders of the mass boycott of segregated city buses which preceded the end of segregation.

A Federal court suit which brought the Supreme Court decision outlawing bus segregation laws grew out of the long boycott. Negroes who had refused to ride segregated buses for more than a year gave up their protest last December 21 when the bus integration order went into effect.

Bus Passenger Wounded

Violence followed within a few days. Buses were ambushed with gunfire and a Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs.

Then on January 10, dynamite bombs shattered four Negro churches and the homes of two prointegration ministers, the

By BOB MURPHY

The hunt for men indicted on bombing charges by the Montgomery County Grand Jury entered its second day and a high official legal source said he believes the men are waging a delaying action.

The source, who declined use of his name, said that if any of the indicted men are charged with capital offenses by the Grand Jury, they can escape an early trial by dodging warrants until after today's capital offense orraignments in Circuit Court are completed. They are scheduled to begin about 9:30 a.m.

If arrested before the arraignment, they could face trial during the week of March 4. By ducking the warrants until after today's arraignment, they won't come up for trial until after May 27.

GUARDED SECRET

Capital offenses are arraigned only during the terms of Circuit Court, presided over by Eugene W. Carter.

The men, whose number and names are a closely guarded secret, will not forfeit bonds unless they fail to appear before Recorder's Court Judge Eugene D. Loe on Feb. 22.

Alabama law states that names of those indicted and charges against them cannot be disclosed until they are in custody. However, Circuit Clerk J. R. Matthews said Saturday that the Grand Jury returned no bills against three of the seven men originally charged by city police in the recent wave of bombings and bus ambushes. They are: Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap, who had been charged with misdemeanors. Judge Loe said earlier that charges in his court would be dropped against any of the seven not indicted.

The four other men charged with felonies and capital offenses are: Sonny Kyle Livingston and Raymond C. Britt and Henry Alexander and James D. York. The Advertiser learned last night that Alexander has been working on the construction of a Negro high school in Selma. He is reported to be employed by his father, C. A. Alexander, a plumbing contractor.

Those indicted must be rearrested on the Grand Jury charges and new bonds set. The seven white men have been free on bond after being arrested shortly after the Jan. 17 bombing of a Negro gas station-taxi stand and a residence.

Mon. 2-18-57

A week earlier, four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers, one white, were blasted by dynamite bombs in a series of pre-dawn raids.

No serious injuries were reported as a result of the bombings, but a pregnant Negro laundry worker, Rosa Jordan, was shot through both legs in one of a series of six bus ambushes which temporarily curtailed night bus service in the city and suburban areas.

At least one of the defendants has been linked with a bombing and one of the bus shootings.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(INS)— A grand jury, considering the terroristic series of bombings and shootings in Montgomery, has returned indictments against four men.

Under Alabama law, the identities of men charged cannot be revealed until their actual apprehension.

Seven men had been previously charged by city police in connection with the bombing of churches and ministers homes and shootings at integrated buses.

Police Link Bombings With Klan Group Here

Chief Labels Defense Fund KKK Project

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Mon. 2-11-57

By BOB MURPHY

The seven bombings of Negro churches and homes was officially attributed to the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan by Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal last night.

A prepared statement issued after a conference between prosecuting officials of the seven accused bombers stated: "Investigation, corroborated by statements of some of the accused, shows that these bombings were perpetrated by members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan."

Ruppenthal's statement said members of the organization are now engaged in collecting defense funds for the accused. He said the fund raisers are not connected with or have the sanction of the White Citizens Council.

NO NAACP PRESSURE

The police chief also denied the bombings were solved as the result of pressure from the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. He said the prosecutions are "based on evidence gathered by the Alabama Department of Public Safety and the Montgomery Police Department."

The statement was issued after a final conference of investigators prior to submission of the case before the Montgomery County Grand Jury later this week.

An authoritative source revealed yesterday that "a parade of witnesses" is expected to appear before the blue ribbon jury. The exact number is a closely guarded secret but it was indicated that County Clerk John R. Matthews has issued "numerous" subpoenas since the case was referred to the Grand Jury last Friday.

The pre - Grand Jury meeting was held to review evidence to be presented. Those present included Chief Ruppenthal, Circuit Solicitor William Thetford and all officers concerned in the investigation.

The accused men are Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford, Donald Dunlap, Henry Alexander, James D. York, Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., all of Montgomery.

TRIAL NEXT WEEK

Any of the seven indicted by the Grand Jury will face trial in circuit court next week. Both felony and misdemeanor charges were carried over two weeks in city court last Friday by Judge Eugene D. Loe. The move was by mutual consent of defense and prosecution attorneys.

However, if the grand jury fails to indict any of the seven men, charges will be dropped by Loe's court.

Ruppenthal's reference to "a defense fund" was evidently directed to the Alabama Segregation Defense Fund which started a bucket brigade Feb. 3 to raise $60,000.

At an open meeting of the White Citizens Council at which Mississippi Congressman John Bell Williams spoke Friday night at Ft. Dixie Graves Armory, the bucket brigade was active.

'NO OUTSIDE INTERFERENCE'

Seven Accused In Bombings Reject Kasper Offer Of Aid

Advertiser Wed. 2-6-57 Montgomery, Ala.

An offer from Segregationist John Kasper to help seven white men charged with bombing Negro homes and churches brought a "we don't want any" response yesterday.

Kasper said in an interview that "if there is any way I can, I would be only too glad to help, financially or morally." He endorsed a fund-raising campaign undertaken to finance the defense of the seven and others arrested on similar charges.

But Jack Brock, who has announce plans for a house-to-house canvass for funds, said his group doesn't need and hasn't sought aid from Kasper.

"We're a local group interested in local problems and don't need any outside interference," the former president of the Alabama Federation of Labor added. "We've had too much of that already."

$13,000 BOND

The seven defendants arrested after the bombing of four Negro churches, a filling station and three homes Jan. 10 and Jan. 27, are free on bonds ranging from $250 to $13,000. Advertiser

Three of the men, charged only with conspiracy in connection with other dynamite bombs which failed to explode, face trial in City Court before Recorder Eugene Loe Friday morning.

The other four defendants face preliminary hearings on felony charges at the same time. Evidence against them will be presented to the Montgomery County Grand Jury when it convenes next Monday.

Two of them are charged with dynamiting inhabited dwellings, the other two are accused of bombing churches.

VISITING HERE

Kasper made his offer of help while visiting Retired Adml. John Crommelin at the Latter's rural home in nearby Harrogate Springs.

Meanwhile the seven defendants in the bombing cases announced they have retained Atty. John Blue Hill to represent them.

The Montgomery attorney of the firm Hill, Hill, Whiting and Harris yesterday released a written statement:

"We represent the defendants . . . (and) we have discussed these charges with our clients and they all state emphatically that they are innocent.

NAACP INSPIRED

"They are convinced that these charges were directly inspired by the NAACP, of which Martin Luther King Jr. and Ralph D. Abernathy are admitted nation-wide leaders.

"They are further convinced that these charges were brought in an attempt by the NAACP to destroy them because of their conscientious and active fight against the NAACP to maintain segregation in our schools and elsewhere, and to maintain our Southern heritage and way of life.

"As their attorneys, we propose to fight these charges every inch of the way."

The seven men charged in the recent bombings here were named on the warrants as Henry Alexander, 27, of 1940 Yarbrough St.; James D. York, 52, of 109 Garden-Britt Jr., 25, of 205 Huestess St.; Charlie Bodiford, 29, of 1002 Olive St.; Eugene Hall, 45, of 3871 Happiness Ave.; Donald Dunlap, 24, of 243 Riverside Dr., and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., 19, of a Texas street address.

Montgomery Bombs Laid To Klansmen

Constitution Mon. 2-11-57 Atlanta, Ga.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 1 (AP)—Police Chief G. J. Ruppentha said today that recent bombing of Negro churches and prointegration ministers' homes "were perpetrated by members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan." P. 1

The chief said his department "has substantially completed" investigations of four bombings in a wave of racial violence following integration of city buses Dec. 21 on federal court order.

"Our investigation, corroborated by statements of some of the accused themselves, shows that these bombings were perpetrated by members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan," Ruppenthal said.

"This organization, through its members and friends, are now engaged in collecting money for the defense of those accused of these acts of violence."

Evidence against seven white men will be presented to the Montgomery County grand jury session beginning tomorrow.

Negro Churches Blasted, Montgomery Halts Buses

Fri. 1-91-57

By The United Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 10. —The City Commission today declared a state of emergency here in the South's worsening bus crisis.

New York

All bus service was stopped, the auxiliary police was called to duty, and parents, Negro and white, were warned to get their children off the streets. Six dynamite blasts shook the city early today. Last night a sniper's shot, the sixth since Montgomery buses were integrated, ripped into one of the vehicles.

Four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers, one white, the other Negro, were bombed in the pre-dawn darkness. The white minister whose home was blasted in the Rev. Robert Graetz. Mr. Graetz had expressed sympathy with the Negroes. There were no injuries.

Gov. James E. Folsom offered a $2,000 reward for the information leading to conviction of the terrorists.

Meanwhile, Atlanta officials arrested five Negro leaders for violating the anti-segregation laws. A patrol wagon picked up the five men, all ministers, at a church before they could begin a mass march with their followers to the courthouse to post bond on the Jim Crow charges.

The five ministers were booked, fingerprinted and placed in $1,000 bail each. All five posted bail and were released in a matter of minutes.

"We won't need to ride the buses any more until this thing is resolved in the courts," said Mr. Borders, explaining that the arrests would clear the way for an immediate test of Georgia bus segregation laws.

The Imperial Wizard of the revived Ku-Klux Klan, E. L. Edwards, called on Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia to discuss the integration crisis but was referred instead to state Attorney General Eugene Cook. They conferred in private.

Dynamiters face chair

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Six white men, two of whom face the penalty of death, have been charged with the barbarous bombings and bus shootings following the desegregation of city buses here.

Baltimore, Md.

Some 14 other men are being investigated as conspirators in the nine bombings and 10 shootings in which four persons have been injured, four churches damaged and three homes struck.

P. 18

City bus service has been discontinued twice since the wave of violence began Dec. 7.

The two men facing death under an Alabama statute which demands this penalty for the bombing of an occupied dwelling are JAMES D. YORK, 52, an IBM operator, and HENRY ALEXANDER, 27, a plumber.

Both are out of jail under $10,000 bonds, reportedly furnished by the White Citizens Council.

Others held include:

RAYMOND C. BRITT JR., 25, a plumber;

EUGENE HALL, 45, an employee in the mechanical department of the Alabama Journal;

CHARLES BODIFORD, 29, a foreman at a local furniture factory; and

DONALD DUNLAP, 24, a plumber.

POLICE CHIEF G. J. RUPPENTHAL told reporters Friday that the list of accused men represented only what had been completed at that time.

"We are working on the other bombings," he said. "We just haven't got to them yet."

York and Alexander were charged with bombing the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy on the night of Jan. 10.

The minister was in Atlanta, attending the Southern Leadership Conference at the time, but his wife and two small children were asleep in the home when the front section of the house was blasted away.

The only reason they escaped with their lives was that the wife, instead of sleeping in the master bedroom, went into the children's quarters at the back of the house in the absence of her husband.

ALEXANDER IS also held under $500 bond after confessing shooting into a bus diven by W. H. Fullilove in which an expectant colored mother, Mrs. Rosa Jordan, was wounded in both legs.

He is charged with "assault to murder" in this count.

The plumber is under a third indictment for the bombing of a service station and the next-door home of Allen T. Robertson on Jan. 27, bringing to three the number of warrants out for him.

Sat. 2-9-57

He is held in total bail of $12,000.

Britt was named in four warrants: three charging the bombings of uninhabited buildings, and one charge of conspiring to commit a felony—an unsuccessful attempt to bomb an uninhabited building.

HALL, CHARGED with the unsuccessful attempt, Jan. 10, to bomb the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white minister who has been actively assisting the bus boycotters, was also out on bond, reportedly furnished by the White Citizens Council, Thursday.

In commenting on the attempt to kill him, his mother, wife and three children with 12 sticks of dynamite wrapped in a pipe with TNT, the Rev. Mr. Graetz called the bombers "cornered rats, who angered that their determination to maintain segregation on the buses was to no avail, would stop the buses from running or commit murder out of their frustration."

Bodiford was aslo charged in the Graetz bombing incident.

Dunlap faces a conspiracy charge in cases in which bombs failed to go off.

AS MANY as 20 men are involved in the bombing and bus shooting cases, Chief Ruppenthal revealed, stating that Montgomery detectives have made trips to Birmingham in connection with the bombings and that arrests may be made of persons in that arrea.

The arrests announced this week were the first to be made of suspects in the year-old reign of bomb terror, despite the fact that $4,000 has been posted by city and state authorities for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the bombers.

According to Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers, Det. J. T. Shows is credited with developing the leads that led to the arrests.

SHOWS WAS supposed to have been off duty last Sunday night, but an explosion at 4:30 a.m., about a mile from his home, alerted him to danger.

He sped to the scene and assisted other officers investigating the dynamiting of a gas station and the home of a colored family.

Shows recognized a man in a car near the bombing site and noted the license number of the car.

Less than eight hours later, Henry Alexander was arrested for the bombing at his father's plumbing shop in Selma, Ala. Testimony elicted from Alexander led to the roundup of the other suspects.

FOLLOWING IS A timetable of the bombings and shootings in Montgomery during the bus protest movement:

Dec. 7, 1955—First city bus fired upon;

Pastor of bombed church seeks help in rebuilding

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "I have no intention of giving up."

P. 3

Those were the words this week of the Rev. U. J. Fields, pastor of Montgomery's Bell Street Baptist Church which was destroyed by a bomb on Jan. 10.

Bell St., was one of four churches and two homes which were recent targets of terrorists in the attempts of Montgomery hoodlums to maintain racial segregation.

Its pastor, one of the leaders in the Montgomery bus boycott, made his declaration in an appeal for funds to assist him and his congregation in rebuilding the church.

"We are now out of doors with no place to worship," the Rev. Mr. Fields said, "Insurance on the church was not adequate to cover the cost of damage resulting from bombs which makes it necessary for us to construct a new building.

"I shall lead my parishioners in rebuilding this church," he declared, "Nobody is going to frighten me into leaving Montgomery. With the support of people like you, we shall accomplish this task."

Voicing appreciation for all gifts, no matter how small, the Rev. Mr. Bell requested that all checks be made payable to the Bell Street Baptist Church.

Its address is 2716 Rutland St., Montgomery, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — A bomb exploded in the People's Cab Company here between 4 and 4:30 p.m., Sunday, injuring three cab drivers, none of them seriously, and wrecking the living room of a house next door.

Occupants of the house miraculously escaped injury, being in another room at the time of the dynamite blast. Twelve sticks of dynamite, with the fuse lighted, were were found the same day on the porch at the home of the Rev. Martin L. King.

There was no explosion at the King home because, miraculously, the fuse had flicked out. No arrests had been made in the dynamiting except two colored men reportedly accused of disorderly conduct for critizing efficiency of police.

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower is considering whether he, personally, should visit the South and speak out against growing violence directed against colored people in the region who are struggling to attain full civil rights.

This fact was revealed at the first press conference held by the President since mid-November in answer to this question by a reporter:

"Earlier this month, colored leaders of Montgomery, Ala., appealed to you to come South and speak out against the growing violence of the prosegregationists there. Have you responded to that appeal?"

MR. EISENHOWER acknowledged receipt of the message and then broke off the sentence.

He began to ask whether Sherman Adams, his presidential assistant, had done something, and then conferred with James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary.

After the whispered conference with Mr. Hagerty, the President continued his answer, saying that Mr. Adams merely stated that the point had been turned over to the Justice Department for study and advice to him.

AS A MATTER of fact, President Eisenhower has not only been appealed to by the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery to visit the South and speak "only one word" of condemnation of violence, but the White House has been deluged by such appeals from individual groups, both North and South.

The latest such request was a reiteration of a plea by Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, that the President, at least speak out strongly against the dynamiting, shooting and cross-burning carried on in the South without fear of punishment.

The time of Mr. Wilkins' address, made before a meeting of the Atlanta NAACP branch on Jan. 23, was grave. He deplored President Eisenhower's silence on violence in the South.

"The wave of terror and intimidation that has swept sections of the South in recent weeks without rebuke from our President or from any other responsible Federal or state or local official is a reproach to our nation and human decency," the NAACP official declared.

Referring to Mr. Eisenhower's personal visit to the Southwest drought area, Mr. Wilkins said:

"The soil in the drought area gets the personal attention of our President, but the human beings in the Dixie Disaster belt do not receive a reply to their appeal. They ask only that he speak out from his high office against lawlessness and violence."

AND AGAIN, Mr. Wilkins said of the President: "Just a few days before the Nov. 6 election, Mr. Eisenhower spoke in Philadelphia and declared, 'There can be only one law, or there will be no peace.'

"He was speaking of the Middle East unrest, but his words could apply as well to the entire pattern of unrest in some parts of the South."

Of the total southern situation, the NAACP officer declared that "if ever there was a time when evildoers seemed to have the upper hand, that time is now.

"MOST WHITE people in the South are not free today," he maintained. "They are not free to speak, to write, to assemble, or to petition. They are on the brink of being unable to think their own thoughts.

"Their ministers are not free to preach unless their sermons uphold segregation. Even those who believe in segregation, but do not believe in the wild words and the cowardly crimes of the extremists, do not dare to offer a mild dissent."

Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin was rebuked by the speaker for having delivered a state address to a joint session of the General Assembly in which he called for continuance of segregation in Georgia "no matter what any court may rule."

BY THIS declaration, Mr. Wilkins said, Governor Griffin "was telling all irresponsible elements in Georgia and, indeed, in the South, that they need not pay attention to the courts.

"He was giving a green light to the hoodlums. The dynamiter, the sniper, the poison pen artist, the cross-burner and the run of-the-mill mobster have all been given absolution in advance by Griffin and others like him in high places who speak as he has spoken."

Referring to an "iron pattern of conformity" in the South, the NAACP official pointed out that "despite all the talk about settling these matters (segregation) on the local level, certain states are not permitting local action.

"GEORGIA WAS among the first states to pass a law cutting off funds for any school which admits a colored student, even in response to a court order.

"White people in the South are finding out that their bosses at the top, much like the bosses at the top in Moscow, will crush any expression of freedom at the local and community level."

As for southern colored citizens, Mr. Wilkins declared:

"I do not have to remind you that these citizens have suffered during this dark time, they have been an easy target, especially since their attackers have been assured in front that they will suffer no punishment for their deeds."

The official cited bombings, arrests, mob violence, shotgun blasts, threats, and economic pressure directed against colored persons.

But, he said, "nothing that has been done thus far has frightened any colored citizens from their determination to secure their rights." He pointed to Montgomery, Ala., as an example of citizens who continued the struggle to attain citizenship rights after the NAACP was barred from the state.

"It does little good to bar the NAACP," he asserted. "The truth of the matter is this kind of action only makes our people more determined."

ANOTHER FORCEFUL appeal that President Eisenhower raise his voice in condemnation of the lawlessness of southern prosegregationists was made by the National Newspaper Publishers Association, at their annual midwinter clinic in Nashville, Tenn.

The resolution suggested that the President use the medium of a television fireside chat to counter the breakdown of law and order in several southern states.

It also called upon the Congress to enact without delay, badly needed civil rights legislation, according Federal protection to citizens fighting for their constitutional rights.

Governors and other officials of the various states also have "a responsibility," the resolution pointed out, to end immediately disorders and violence within their borders.

PRIOR TO the publishers' request for Presidential relief came a strong resolution from the Southern Leadership Conference at its meeting in Birmingham, Ala., appealing to Mr. Eisenhower to act to end violence in the South.

And last week in Atlanta, colored ministers in a meeting there had asked that either the President come South or that he send President Richard Nixon to make a first-hand investigation of the situation and then report on it.

ON THE local level, in only one city has there been reported official action to urge help in curbing racal trouble.

This was in Mobile, Ala., where Police Chief Dudley McFadyen made such a request Monday night at a conference of 60 white ministers. The conference was called in the wake of a series of cross burnings and at least four bombings or attempted bombings of homes occupied by colored citizens.

A similar meeting called on a segregated basis for colored ministers was called off when none showed up. McFadyen said another attempt would be made to meet with them.

OTHER OCCURRENCES which made headlines in the South this week follow:

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Three Florida State University students joined colored college students here Wednesday night in urging an end to racial segregation. One of them, John Boardman, also advocated that white Tallahasseeans support the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, a candidate for City Commissioner.

This meeting was held the night after Ralph Miller, chairman of the State Board of Control, highest controlling organization of higher education in Florida, hinted expulsion of any student "participating in demonstrations or other activities calculated to inflame the public or incite strife or violence."

DELAY BUS LAW TEST

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The trial of three colored and three white students charged with violating this city's new bus seating ordinance was indefinately postponed Monday, after the students pleaded not guilty.

The defendants, three from the State University and three from FAMU, were arrested the previous Saturday for sitting together in a city bus, in violation to the new assignment ordinance which gives the bus driver the right to assign seats to passengers as they board the bus.

RULIN GDELAYED

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The Alabama Court of Appeals Thursday took under advisement an appeal filed by the Rev. Martin Luther King on his conviction last March on charges of violating state anti-boycott laws.

No immediate ruling in the case is anticipated.

The state had hoped the Appeals Court would perfunctorily dismiss the appeal on a technicality that appeals records were filed after the deadline; however the court accepted the argument that the late filing of briefs was due to a "misunderstood verbal agreement" and heard arguments on the merits of the case.

MOBILE BUS TEST HINTED

MOBILE, Ala.—The Rev. W. M. Smith, president of the Mobile United Citizens Association, last week at an association rally, asked for contributions to help defray expected legal defense expenses of an expected test of the city's bus segregation laws.

He did not indicate when the test would be made, but said that "when there is no question about the Supreme Court ruling applying to buses in this city, we will ride unsegregated and with dignity."

TEACHERS TO APPEAL

COLUMBIA, S.C.—The State Supreme Court will be given an opportunity to pass on the cases of 17 former Eloree, S.C., teachers, fired from their jobs for belonging to the NAACP.

That was the decision of counsel here Saturday after a three-judge Federal court held they must first exhaust their appeals in state courts before seeking relief in that tribunal.

FLA. HEARING DATE SET

MIAMI, Fla. — Feb. 4 has been set by Federal Judge Emmett C. Choate for hearing of the motion by four colored riders of local buses that segregation on the local buses be ruled unconstitutional.

Judge Choate has already ruled that segregation on state buses is illegal and has said he will hand down a final order declaring the city's bus segregation laws unconstitutional. However, he allowed the city to file an answer to the suit brought by the four riders in the case.

MONTGOMERY BOY FINDS CRUDE BOMB

Expert Says Device Was Not Dangerous

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 2. — (UP) — A crude bomb was found by a student Saturday in the Baldwin Junior High School playground, but assistant state toxicologist Vann V. Pruitt said it had no connection with the dynamite bombs used in a rash of racial violence here.

Bobby Persons, 15, noticed the six-inch length of pipe filled with "a suspicious looking substance" and notified police.

Mr. Pruitt said the chemical, potassium permanganate, would "burn and release enough gases to explode a bottle but would not have exploded enclosed in the iron pipe." Placing some glycerin on the substance would cause it to burst into flames, he said.

Mr. Pruitt has been instrumental in investigation of the bombings here of Negro homes and churches.

The toxocologist said the bomb apparently was made by some youngster and was "definitely not the type used in the racial bombings."

Brownell Aide Says Law In Local, State Hands

Memphis Tenn.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—(UP)—The Justice Department Friday made public a letter to Rev. M. L. King of Montgomery, Ala., expressing "serious concern" with acts of violence in the South but placing "primary responsibility for law and order" in state and local authorities.

Cal. 2-2-57

The letter was from assistant Atty. Gen. Warren Olney III. It revealed that King had been sent two previous telegrams on Jan. 18 which turned down his requests for a major speech on civil rights in a major Southern city by President Eisenhower and a conference with Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr.

In a telegram to King, who heads the Southern Negro Leaders Conference on Transportation and Non-Violent Integration, presidential assistant Sherman Adams said a major speech by the President "could not be arranged." In another wire, Mr. Olney advised King a conference with Mr. Brownell at this time "would not be helpful or appropriate."

In his letter, Mr. Olney pointed out that the President in his State of the Union message had renewed his recommendations for a four-point legislative program to reinforce civil rights. He also quoted the President's statement in the message which urged people in all sections of the country "to approach these integration problems with calm and reason, with mutual understanding and with good will."

Mr. Olney also wrote King that the Justice Department will investigate Federal offenses and "will act vigorously" when such investigations "reveal the commission of Federal offenses." However, he said, "notwithstanding our deep aversion to violent acts of the sort you describe, the primary responsibility for the maintenance of law and order is lodged in state and local authorities."

City asks federal court to dismiss Negroes' bus suits

News Birmingham Ala.

Fri. 2-1-57

The city of Birmingham today asked U. S. District Court here to throw out a suit filed by 21 Negroes aimed at ending bus segregation in Birmingham.

The city's answer was similar to the one filed recently by the Birmingham Transit Co.

City Commisioners James W. Morgan, Robert E. Lindbergh and J. T. Waggoner were named as defendants along with the transit company in the complaint filed in early January by Arthur D. Shores, attorney for the 21 Negroes.

J. M. Breckenridge, assistant city attorney, named as one of the grounds for dismissal the fact the complaint filed by the Negroes 'fails to state a claim against the said defendants upon which relief can be granted."

In another ground, Breckenridge's motion states that the 21 Negroes involved are defendants in Recorder's Court of the City of Birmingham "where the question of the constitutionality" of the segregation laws may be determined, and appeals could be carried from that decision.

Slipup In Alabama Bomb Laws May Make Conviction Tough

Birmingham Ala. Post-Herald 1-31-57

An apparent legislative slipup 22 years ago could make it difficult to convict anyone charged with the recent bombings of Negro churches in Montgomery.

A law was passed in 1920 specifically making it a criminal offense to set off dynamite "or other explosives" in, under or dangerously near a church or other public building or uninhabited dwelling.

At the same time, another act was written by the Legislature providing stiffer penalties for bombing inhabited dwellings, steam boats, railroad cars, jails or prisons.

In 1935, both laws were revised to increase the penalty. Bombing of an inhabited residence now carries a possible death sentence; dynamiting of churches or other public buildings a maximum of 10 years in prison.

But in rewriting the act on public buildings, the words "or other explosives" were omitted. The law now makes it an offense to explode only dynamite.

The "other explosives" were carried over in rewriting the law on inhabited dwellings and they still apply. That section of the code makes it unlawful to set off "dynamite or other explosives."

So if any of the defendants arrested for the bombings are charged with violating the public building statute, the state will have to prove dynamite was used.

Police have said dynamite was used in all the recent bombings following the end of bus segregation here. Two unexploded dynamite bombs have been found.

Good Police Work

Advertiser 1-4-57

THE efficient, thorough investigation of the dynamitings here appears to have been an outstanding job. The vigor and obvious sincerity of the work put the lie to those who grumbled that the police weren't trying to find the bombers.

Montgomery Ala.

The guilt or innocence of those arrested is of course a matter for a jury to decide. But from all that has been made public, it appears the investigation was, and continues to be, highly effective.

Fri. 2-1-57

Although there is no logical basis for comparison other than the similarity of the crimes, it seems fair to observe that New York took some 15 years longer to trap the Mad Bomber. This despite the fact that the great city had handwriting clues, a trained bomb squad (which Montgomery does not have), and literally hundreds of men working on the case. Still New York City police did not catch him: the solution was primarily the work of a newspaper and a Consolidated Edison file clerk.

Police Commissioner Sellers has emphasized the importance of the cooperation between city, county and state officers. From the little that has been revealed of the investigation, the teamwork is indeed impressive. However, the hero was Detective J. D. Shows, who has been declared ineligible for the combined city-state award of $4,000.

This seems grossly unfair. If convictions follow, we believe the city should take whatever steps necessary to give the reward money to Shows, even if it means the passage of a special ordinance for that purpose. He was of course only doing his duty, but he seems to have done it exceedingly well. In many other cities police officers are permitted to claim rewards and the sentiment of most citizens is that Shows should get that $4,000, shared, if circumstances warrant, with any other officer instrumental in breaking the case.

If his work means the end of the outrageous violence which has maligned Montgomery in the eyes of the world, we owe him much more than that.

MOBILE, Ala.—The L&N Railroad was said to have been responsible for a disturbance at the Flomaton, Ala., passenger station when a local law officer was called to demand that two colored women travelers vacate a bench in a waiting section designated for whites by Flomaton police.

The incident led to the arrest of Joe Allen, 29, and George R. White, 25, both of Pensacola, Fla., on charges of assault and battery and assault with intent to murder. They were alleged to have attacked Police Chief C. C. (Red) Hemby, 51, when he ordered Mrs. Louise Dunlap, 26, and Mrs. Ernestine Scott, 28, of Elgin Air Force Base, to move to a jim-crow area of the passenger station.

P. 1 Sec. 2

THE TWO young women and Allen and White were en route from Pensacola to Chicago to attend a Muslim convention in the Illinois city. Flomaton is a junction point on the L&N Railroad where passengers transfer to and from Florida towns along its line and the Seaboard Airline to Jacksonville, Fla.

Sheriff Otis Emmons of Escambia County said Hemby was called to the station by the railroad after the two women were found sitting on a bench outside the depot in a section marked for whites. He said they moved and were not arrested. Allen and White protested Hemby's demand that the women move and the fight between the chief of police and the men developed.

Buses Halt Indefinitely After Blasts Rock City

Extra Police On Duty In Precautionary Move

Montgomery, Ala. Fri. 1-11-57

By BOB INGRAM

All city bus service came to a standstill here yesterday following a serious outbreak of racial violence which included the dynamiting of two homes and four churches.

At an emergency meeting only a few hours after thousands of Montgomerians had been awakened by the series of jarring explosions, the City Commission ordered a halt in bus operations for an "indefinite" period.

In a separate move indicative of the tense situation, the commission urged a midnight curfew for all teen-agers in Montgomery.

RESERVE POLICE

Precautions also were taken to prevent a recurrence of yesterday's violent demonstrations of racial unrest. Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal confirmed that a number of reserve police officers had been mustered into emergency service. He declined to say how many additional men were called into service.

The six blasts that rocked Montgomery caused extensive property damage but no one was injured.

The first blast was reported at approximately 2 a.m. Four other blasts followed in rapid succession in scattered sections of the city. The sixth and final explosion occurred at approximately 4:30 a.m.

MINISTERS' HOMES

The homes bombed were those of two ministers active in the pro-integration movement in the city—the Rev. Robert Graetz, 1104 Cleveland Ave., and the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, 1327 S. Hall St.

The churches damaged in the wave of bombings were the Bell Street Baptist Church, Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, Mt. Olive Baptist Church and the First Baptist Church (Negro).

The first explosion was reported at the home of Abernathy. He was in Atlanta attending a meeting of Negro leaders, but his wife and two-year-old child were both in the home at the time. Neither was injured, but Abernathy later said both were "shocked" by the blast.

Only minutes after the first blast two others rocked the city. The first came at Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, the second at the home of Rev. Graetz, white pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church for Negroes.

Part of a wall and most of the windows of the Hutchinson Street Church were blown out by the explosion.

The explosion at the Graetz home caused considerable damage to the front part of the house and broken china was scattered throughout the kitchen by the blast. The pastor, his wife and three small children were asleep in the rear of the home but were not hurt by the bomb.

This marked the second time the Graetz home has been bombed. Last August a bomb exploded in the front yard of the residence.

PRE-DAWN DYNAMITE BLASTS SPOTTED ON MAP

Six early morning bombings which rocked four churches and two homes are pointed out on this map prepared by The Advertiser staff. All four of the churches are attended by Negro congregations. The dynamited homes belong to two ministers, one white, the other Negro. 1) Mount Olive Baptist Church, Old Selma Road near Southern Bypass; 2) Bell Street Baptist Church, 503 Oak St.; 3) Home of The Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of the Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, 1104 Cleveland Ave.; 4) Home of the Rev. R. D. Abernathy, 1327 S. Hall St.; 5) Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, 924 Hutchinson St.; 6) First Baptist Church, 347 N. Ripley, which is presided over by the Rev. Abernathy. The series of blasts took place between 2 a.m. and 5:45 a.m. The first explosion occurred in front of the Graetz home and the last did damage to the Mount Olive Baptist Church. but no one was home at the time.

UNEXPLODED BOMB

Officers investigating the Graetz bombing yesterday found a second home-made bomb unexploded in Graetz's driveway. It consisted of 11 sticks of dynamite taped around a hollow metal tube.

The unexploded bomb was quickly de-fused by police officers. Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said it was hoped that a rack to which the bomb was attached might yield some fingerprints but that the dynamite itself had been "thrown in the river."

Brown noted that the Police Department had no demolition experts and because of this the bomb was "too dangerous to fool with."

Less than 10 minutes after the Graetz home was blasted, another explosion shook the city. This time the blast was at the Bell Street Baptist Church, at 503 Oak St. This bomb caused serious structural damage to the building. A large part of the building's walls were blasted from their foundation, and as a result a part of the roof collapsed.

The First Baptist Church was the next target. This building, located on Jefferson and Ripley was not seriously damaged. The bomb apparently was hurled into the basement where considerable damage was done. Abernathy is the pastor of this church.

Negro Churches, Residences Suffer $50,000 Bomb Damage

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Fri. 1-11-57

Damage estimates on yesterday's early morning bombings of Negro residences and churches ranged from $50,000 upward and two churches have been condemned temporarily.

Insurance adjusters reported at least a dozen claims on which they were working, but no insurors could be found for the Bell Street and Mt. Olive Baptist churches—the worst hit.

The two also were reported unusable by Fire Chief Robert L. Lampley following an official inspection. Lampley said the Hutchinson Street and Negro First Baptist churches were damaged but usable.

An unofficial estimate made by a city official set the damages at $50,000. However, insurance adjustors who asked that their names not be used, indicated the totals probably would climb far above that.

One declared that destruction of large lead - stained glass in church windows, most of them shattered by the blasts, could run total damages into "big money." He would give no figure.

But the same spokesman, representing one of the larger agencies in the city and investigating four of the bombings, said there were many side claims for smashed windows in homes near where the blasts were set off.

Another spokesman set the total number of claims from the six bombings at "10 or 12" for his firm and one other.

A check of every dajustmnet firm in the city failed to reveal any involved in an investigation of the bell Street and Mt. Olive church bombings. An adjustment firm spokesman said they probably were covered by fire insurance which had clauses restricting payment in case of mob action.

Chief Lampley said there was no structural damage at the First Baptist Church, and only slight at the Hutchinson Street church.

The sixth and final blast was reported at the Mt. Olive Church on Old Selma Road. This building, along with the Hutchinson Street church, was most heavily damaged.

The outside walls of the building were demolished and the inner walls were affected to such an extent as to make the building unsafe for use.

GOVERNOR ON HAND

Gov. James E. Folsom, clad in a leather jacket and khaki trousers, made a personal inspection of the damaged areas at dawn yesterday. He later offered his full cooperation to city officials in meeting the emergency and offered a $2,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons guilty of the bombings.

"Any person or group of persons that would bomb the house of the Lord endangers the life of every man, woman and child in Montgomery," Folsom declared. "I call on all people of Alabama to help stamp out such lawlessness wherever it may occur."

Folsom also made the observation as he looked over the bombed buildings that it seemed to him that "they did not want to kill anyone."

Folsom's offer of state help if necessary was not accepted by Mayor Gayle.

"We can handle the situation ourselves," Gayle replied, "We don't need any additional help."

City Denies Plea To Pay Church Bombing Damages

Montgomry City Commission refused yesterday to assume financial responsibility for the recent bombing of Negro churches and the pastor of one of the churches spoke later of a possible court suit.

Montgomery

Meanwhile, Montgomery went without public transportation for the fifth day in a row as a result of the dynamiting of four Negro churches and two ministers' homes and gunfire attacks on racially integrated city buses here.

City authorities suspended all bus service indefinitely following the bombings last Thursday morning and the sixth ambush attack on a bus Wednesday night. The violence began after segregation on the buses was ended by federal court order Dec. 21.

Th Rev. Uriah J. Fields, whose Bell St. Baptist Church was one of the four bombed last Thursday, made a formal demand on the City Commisnion yesterday morning. He told the commissioners he holds the city responsible for the attacks because, he said, the police department failed to provide adequate protection.

After Mayor W. A. Gayle and Commissioners Clyde Sellers and Frank Parks rejected his claim, Fields said "we will have to resort to other means. We will have to determine from a legal point of view whether the city should assume this responsibility."

CITY NOT RESPONSIBLE

Sellers, who heads the police and fire departments, told the Negro minister the city could no more shoulder the financial responsibility for the bombings than the City of Boston could for recent church fires there or the City of New York for the escapades of the "Mad Bomber."

"If we took responsibility for this," the police commissioner continued, "we would have to take responsibility for every burglary, every car wreck, every accidental death in the city."

Fields also asked the city for a 24-hour police guard at his bombed church, but Sellers turned that down because, he said, if police guarded one church they would have to protect all of them and "we don't have enough men for that."

Six White Men Charged In Bombing Wave Here

2 Could Get Electric Chair If Convicted

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Fri. 2-1-57 P. 1

Six men were charged by police here last night in connection with the recent wave of bomb and gun attacks.

The charges placed against the six included conspiracy to commit a felony and violations of Alabama law relating to the bombing of inhabited and uninhabited buildings and assault to murder. Bonds ranged from $250 to $10,000.

The $10,000 bonds were set in the cases of James D. York and Henry Alexander, both charged with bombing the inhabited home of Rev. Ralph Abernathy, 1327 S. Hall St.

Under Alabama law, the two are subject to the death penalty if found guilty.

BUILDING BOMBING

Those charged with bombing an uninhabited building, and placed under $2,500 bonds, are Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Alexander.

Britt was named in four warrants, three charging the bombing of uninhabited buildings, and one conspiracy to commit a felony. He is under bonds totaling $7,750.

Under $1,000 bond was Eugene Hall, charged with the unsuccessful bombing attempt on the home of Rev. Robert Graetz, 1104 Cleveland.

ASSAULT CHARGE

Charlie Bodiford also was charged in the Graetz bombing incident and is under $1,000 bond.

Alexander is charged with assault with intent to murder in the Dec. 31 shooting into a city bus driven by W. H. Fullilove. He is under a $500 bond in this case.

Charged with conspiracy to commit a felony in cases where bombs did not go off and targets were uninhabited buildings are Donald Dunlap and Raymond Britt.

Detective Lt. George Owens said the warrants were signed by Graetz, bus driver W. H. Fullilove, Rev. Ralph B. Abernathy and Rev. M. L. King.

ONLY FORMALITY

He added that filing the warrants was only a formality and "the men named will be allowed to make bond without being served the warrants."

No warrants were drawn against several other persons believed to be in custody. Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers earlier told newsmen that "seven or eight" suspects have been arrested and it was reported yesterday that one or two more have been jailed for questioning.

The Wednesday night announcement by police that they had broken the case ended a year-long series of incidents of racial violence here.

The first bomb, one that damaged the Rev. M. L. King's home, was set exactly one year before the case was broken.

During that time, 19 major acts of violence occurred which included nine bomb attacks and 10 shootings. The first two suspects were picked up by police last Sunday, a short time after a combination Negro service station-taxi stand and a home next to it were bombed at 4:30 a.m. An unexploded bomb of 12 dynamite sticks was found shortly after that on the porch of King's home. It was then that City Detective J. D. Shows, who was off duty, spotted some "suspicious looking" men at the scene and took down the tag number of their car.

His action lead to the recent arrests and was cited by Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers as the case-breaking tip.

At his press conference, Sellers also praised other members of the force and cooperating law enforcement agencies such as the Alabama Highway Patrol, state investigators and county sheriff's departments.

BRIEF ORDER

In brief chronological order, here are the major events leading up to the arrests:

Dec. 7, 1956 — First city bus fired upon.

Bombings Hold 7 in Alabama

Star P. 18-B Washington, D.C. Thurs. 1-31-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 31 (AP)—City detectives sought new evidence today in a continuing investigation which already has put at least seven white men in jail for the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers announced last night that "seven or eight" men are being held for the dynamiting of four churches and three dwellings in an outburst of violence following the end of segregation on city buses.

"Several" have signed statements admitting participation in the bombings, the commissioner said.

Mr. Sellers said one of the men, identified as Henry Alexander, 27, admitted shooting into a bus in one of the six outbreaks of gunfire that preceded the bombings.

Woman Shot in Legs

The violence began after segregation barriers were hauled down on Montgomery buses under a Federal court order December 21. In all of the attacks, only one person was seriously injured. A young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs by a sniper who ambushed one bus.

Mr. Sellers' announcement came one year to the day after the first bomb exploded in the long and bitter struggle over bus segregation.

The home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., who led a year-long mass Negro bus boycott that preceded the United States Supreme Court ruling against segregation on buses, was dynamited the night of January 30, 1956. No one was injured.

Another attempt to blow up Mr. Kings home misfired last Sunday, but a Negro residence and adqoining filling station half a block away were heavily damaged by a second bomb.

On January 10, dynamiters struck at four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers, one Negro, the other white. All six buildings were badly damaged.

Mr. Sellers said police have been unable to link all the bombings together but that if successful, they will charge the defendents with "conspiracy."

Face Other Charges

He said other charges will be filed, but that the city attorney will have to decide what they will be.

Any of the men charged with bombing homes which were occupied at the time could be put to death in Alabama's electric chair if convicted.

Alabama law provides the death penalty for anyone exploding dynamite "in, under or dangerously near" an inhabited dwelling. A defendant convicted of bombing a church or other public building can get a maximum of 10 years in prison.

Mr. Sellers declined to make public the names of any of the men being held except Alexander who, he said, has been charged with assault with a deadly weapon and assault with intent to murder for a bus shooting on which no one was injured.

Mr. Sellers declined to say whether any of the men in jail are members of the Ku Klux Klan or the White Citizens' Council.

Montgomery Police Say 8 White Men Held for Bombings and Firing at Bus

Others Being Questioned

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 30 (AP)—Police announced tonight that at least eight white men have been arrested as participants in recent violence in Montgomery and some have confessed.

Louisville Ky.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said:

1. "Seven or eight" men are being held in connection with the recent series of seven bombings of Negro homes and churches that started after segregation was ended on city buses here last month.

2. Another man identified as Henry Alexander, 27, Montgomery, has signed a statement that he fired into a bus December 31. It was the sixth such attack on integrated buses in the first 10 days after the segregation barriers were lowered.

Sellers said police had "several confessions and statements tying in with certain bombings." He declined, to identify any of the men held in connection with the bombings, explaining that no formal charges have been filed.

The commissioner said still others were being questioned and that police hoped to be able to prove a conspiracy linking all the bombings together.

Sellers said one man had been connected with both the bus shootings and the bbombings.

Montgomery don't condone crimes of violence such as these," the judge said.

Expected to go before the grand jury are the cases of at least seven white men who have been arrested by city police and charged with violations ranging from capitol offenses to misdemeanors.

Home and Taxi Stand In Montgomery Bombed

Star Mon. 1-28-57
Washington D.C. P. 8-A

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan., 28 (AP)—A Negro's home and a service station-taxi stand were dynamited in another of a series of incidents at this racially-troubled State Capital yesterday. A short distance away, an unexplodtd bomb was found smoldering on the front porch of an integration movement leaer's home.

The unexploded bomb, containing 12 sticks of dynamite, was placed at the unoccupied home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., who has been the top spokesman for Negroes seeking to break racial barriers here.

Mr. King, whose home was slightly damaged by a bomb lastt January 30 and was hit by a shotgun blast last month, termed Montgomery "a city that it's dangerous to live in."

"It's no longer safe" here, he said.

In the 15th incident of violence here in five weeks, a white television newscaster was shot at twice last night. He was not hit.

Flying Glass Injures 3

No serious injuries were reported in the early morning blast which damaged the home of Allen Robertson, 59-year-old hospital attendant.

Mr. Robertson said he, his wife and daughter were asleep when the explosion occurred. He said he knew of no reason for the incident.

Bob Underwood of Station WCOV-TV, apparent target in the shooting incident, said, "I would assume this was connected with the threatening telephone calls." Two large caliber bullets hit his car as he was leaving his studios, one penetrating the windshield about a foot from him, the 29-year-old news director reported.

Mr. Underwood said he had "tried to be fair with white and Negro" in his news coverage, but callers accused him of slanting his reporting against Negroes. He reported "about two dozen" threatening calls since a Negro bus boycott began.

Montgomery's city buses were racially integrated by Federal Court order December 21 at the end of the 381-day boycott in which Mr. King was a leader.

Within the next two weeks buses were ambushed by gunfire six times. Bus operations were restricted and came to a complete stop for a short period. Bus service now is restricted to daytime trips. Police cars follow the last runs at dusk. A young Negro woman was shot in both legs in one of the bus attacks.

Early January 10 four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were bombed. No injuries reported and police said they had no suspects. Gov. James E. Folsom offered a $2,000 reward for information leading to arrest and conviction of the bombers.

After yesterday's bombing the Montgomery City Commission also posted a $2,000 reward. Mayor W. A. Gayle said bus service would not be affected.

When a smaller bomb went off January 10 at the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white minister of a Negro congregation, an 11-stick dynamite bomb failed to go off. Assistant State Toxicologist Vann V. Puritt, jr., who took apart the bomb at Mr. King's home, said the two were "similar."

Mr. King said he and his family are "very seldom there at night" since earlier attacks on the floodlit white bungalow.

3 In Bus Case Will Not Face Grand Jurors

Advertiser Tues. 2-5-57

Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said yesterday the charges pending against three of the seven white men held for racial violence in Montgomery won't be presented to a grand jury.

Thetford explained that Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap are charged only with misdemeanors and City Judge Eugene Loe will have final jurisdiction.

The other four men—James D. York, Henry Alexander, Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr.—are charged with felonies and could be indicted by the grand jury and tried in state court.

Hall, Bodiford and Dunalp are accused of conspiracy in the throwing of bombs which failed to explode during the wave of violence which followed the end of racial segregation on city buses in Montgomery.

FINAL DETERMINATION

Since the charges are misdemeanors, the solicitor said Loe will have the final determination when he conducts hearings Friday morning. Maximum penalty for the misdemeanors is $1,000 fine plus six months' hard labor.

Although Loe is city recorder, he also is ex-officio justice of the peace and committing magistrate for the state.

All seven men face hearings before Loe Friday—Hall, Bodiford and Dunlap on the misdemeanors and the other four on preliminary hearings on the felony charges against them.

If Hall, Bodiford and Dunlap are convicted, they can appeal to state court.

Capital police indicate more bomb arrests

News Birm., Ala. Thurs. 1-31-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 31—With at least seven men in jail, police hinted at fresh developments today in their continuing investigation of recent racial violence in Montgomery.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers announced last night that "seven or eight" white men were being held for the bombing of four Negro churches and three homes following the end of segregation on city buses.

SELLERS HINTED at other arrests today and said names of those already in custody might be made public later in the day.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and top-ranking officers in the detective division were called into a conference in the commissioner's office.

The announcement last night said "several" of the men already in custody had signed statements admitting participation in the bombings.

In making the announcement, most significant yet in the tedious task of solving the racial disturbances, Sellers declined to identify the men held in connection with the bombings.

He said Henry Alexander, 27, of Montgomery, had signed a confession to the Dec. 31 shooting incident when bus driver W. H. Fullilove was narrowly missed by a sniper's bullet on an early morning run.

Alexander is being charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to murder. He has not yet been arraigned formally.

Although the commissioner did not identify but one of those already rounded up it was reported here today that one of the group is a printer employed by a Montgomery newspaper.

That man, it was indicated here, was arrested largely for having participated in a Ku Klux Klan demonstration several weeks ago when the effigy of a Negro was strung up near the fountain in Montgomery's Court Square.

A mild commotion was caused last night when a widely known Montgomery attornew sought to confer with one of those in custody.

After the attorney threatened to go to a Montgomery circuit judge's home immediately to file habeas corpus proceedings, the man he sought to confer with was released suddenly..

At an anticipation-filled press conference last night Commissioner Sellers along with Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and Detective Capt. E. P. Brown said names of the persons responsible for the bombings of Negro and white homes and four Negro churches may be forthcoming at any time.

SELLERS SAID not all of the men, but several, had made statements tying in with some of the bombings. He mentioned specifically the last incident which damaged a Negro taxi stand and a nearby home and the bombing of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy's home Jan. 10.

He said individual charges will be filed against the men after consultation with city attorneys and if the cases can be linked, further conspiracy charges may then be placed against them as a group.

Arrests of the men have been made continuously beginning Sunday after a decided break in the case growing out of the last bombing incident. Chief Ruppenthal said Det. J. D. Shows recognized two men who were already under suspicion at the bombing scene and was able to trace them through their automobile license number.

Sellers said one of the men has admitted dropping an excess bomb under a bridge on the outskirts of Montgomery after the Jan. 10 bombings of four churches and two homes. The bomb, fashioned of three sticks of dynamite, was found by two children and turned over to police for inspection.

Several of the bombings have been accounted for in the questioning of the men now in custody and it is hoped that the others can be tied in, Sellers said last night.

THE POLICE commissioner declined to say whether the men were members of any white supremacy organizations, saying he would rather such information be obtained from the men themselves.

Sellers paid tribute to members of the Alabama Highway Patrol for their cooperation with Montgomery police detectives in tracking down and arresting two of the men in custody.

Alexander, who has admitted firing at a Montgomery bus with a .38 calibre (short) pistol, was arrested Sunday in Selma by Detectives J. T. Shows and J. T. Ward and Highway Patrol Investigator Lewis Phillips.

Sellers said, in answer to questioning, that Alexander was included in the "seven or eight" men held in connection with bombing suspects.

One of the suspects was arrested in Elba, Sellers disclosed, while the others were all taken into custody at Montgomery.

SELLERS SAID the men's statements implied that their motives for hurling dynamite charges at integration leaders' homes and churches appeared to have been to "intimidate." He said they have not implied they were hired.

Sellers said his department has received no help from the FBI. Nor did the offers of $4000 in rewards posted by the city and the state have anything to do with the arrests, he added. He indicated that Shows would not be in line for the reward money offered by the city since he had only accomplished what he is hired to do in the first place.

Shows, a veteran officer, was credited with a "keen eye" in his alertness which brought the first real break in a six-month wave of violence.

No indication of when the men will be formally charged was given at last night's conference, but Sellers said it would be very soon.

Six Alabama Men Charged With Montgomery Bombings

Black, Dispatch Jan. 2-8-57 Oklahoma City, Okla.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(ANP)—Six white men, accused of bombing Negro homes and churches as a protest against bus integration, were jailed last week in lieu of bond ranging from $250 to $12,500.

The accused terrorists, some of whom could be sentenced to death if convicted on the dynamiting charges, were arrested in Montgomery, Andalusia, Selma, and other Alabama towns.

Charged with bombings or attempted bombings are Eugene Hall, Donald Dunlap, Raymond C. Britt jr., Charles Bodiford and James D. York.

In addition, Henry Alexander, 27, arrested Jan. 27, was charged with assault with intent to murder for allegedly firing a pistol at a bus Dec. 31.

The violence began after segregation of buses was ruled unconstitutional in Montgomery under a federal court order Dec. 21.

There were six incidents of firing on buses in the first ten days after the segregation barriers were lowered.

In all the attacks, only one person was injured. A pregnant Negrom woman passenger was hit in both legs by a sniper who ambushed one bus.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers of Montgomery said other men are still being rounded up in the case.

Sellers said he was convinced there was a conspiracy linking a number of persons.

Other sources said the Montgomery police were working closely with "other agencies," presumably Alabama State police, and possibly the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Both Negroes and whites have been targets of the dynamite ring.

tion of city buses December 21 on Federal Court order.

"Our investigation, corroborated by statements of some of the accused themselves, shows that these bombings were perpetrated by members of the Montgomery branch of the Ku Klux Klan," Ruppenthal said.

Evidence against seven white men will be presented to the Montgomery County grand jury beginning tomorrow. They were charged in connection with seven bombings and six armed ambushes of buses in recent weeks.

The Klan held an organizational rally in Montgomery last September with officials from Georgia and the Birmingham area as speakers. A Klan spokesman said at the time that the K.K.K. had been dormant in the Montgomery area until then.

Will Aid Alabama Bombing Suspects, Kasper Says

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. 2-6-57

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 5 (AP)—Segregationist John Kasper said today "If there is any way I can," he will help the seven white men accused of bombing Negro homes and churches in Montgomery.

"I would be only too glad to help," the Washington, D. C., advocate of white supremacy said in an interview, but he added that he knows little about the cases or the men involved.

Kasper said one of the reasons for coming here at this time was to "find out what I can" about the charges against the seven men.

Trials of three of the men charged with conspiracy, a misdemeanor, are scheduled in City Court Friday morning along with preliminary hearings for the other four, who are accused in felony warrants.

Kasper endorsed as "a fine idea, a very good idea" the announced plan for a house-to-house canvass of Montgomery seeking contributions for a defense fund for the accused men.

Jack Brock, a former president of the Alabama Federation of Labor and editor of the pro-segregation Alabama Labor News, announced plans for the canvass Sunday. He said he hoped to raise $60,000.

Kasper was sentenced to a year in jail for contempt of court at Clinton, Tenn., as a result of the rioting that accompanied the start of school integration there.

Montgomery Hit By Violence 19 Times In Past 14 Months, But No One Killed

Advertiser Jan. 2-3-57 Montgomery, Ala.

P. 8-G

A total of 19 major acts of violence have been reported in Montgomery during the 14 tumultuous months since the beginning of a boycott of city buses by Negroes.

Included in the cases of violence were nine bombings and 10 shootings. Miraculously, only one person has been seriously injured in the racial violence.

The single major casualty was Mrs. Rosa Jordan, a young Negro woman shot in both legs while riding a city bus enroute to Boylston on Dec. 28.

LISTED BY DATES

Chronologically, here are the acts of violence reported in Montgomery:

Dec. 7, 1955—Only two days after the boycott began a city bus was struck by gunfire on Holcombe street. On the same night the homes of two Negroes were hit by gunfire.

Dec. 9—A city bus was struck by gunfire on Oak street, one bullet narrowly missing the driver.

Jan. 30, 1956—The home of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Negro boycott, was damaged by a bomb. No injuries were reported.

Feb. 1 — An explosion, later proved to be a large firecracker, was reported on the lawn of E. D. Nixon, Negro leader and former head of the State NAACP chapter.

Aug. 25—The home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of an all-Negro church, was damaged by an explosion. No one was home at the time.

Dec. 26—After five days of integration on city buses without violence, two buses were fired upon. An Oak Park bus was struck by gunfire and a short time later a bus en route to Washington Park was fired upon.

Dec. 28—A city bus en route to Boylston was fired upon twice, the second time resulting in the injury of Mrs. Jordan. A bullet went through one of her legs, then lodged in the other leg. As a result, the City Commission in emergency session halted all night-time bus service until Jan. 2.

Jan. 9, 1957 — A Washington Park bus was fired upon twice from a moving automobile, one of the bullets striking the vehicle.

Dec. 31—A city bus returning to Montgomery from Boylston was struck by a bullet which hit just below the driver's seat.

Jan. 9, 1957—A Washington Park bus was fired upon twice from a moving automobile, one of the bullets striking the bus.

Jan. 10—In the worst outbreak of violence, a series of bombings shattered Montgomery's pre-dawn hours. Targets were four Negro churches and the home of two ministers—the Rev. Graetz and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, the latter the pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church. The churches damaged included Abernathy's church, and three other Negro Baptist churches—Mt. Olive, Bell Street, and Hutchinson Street.

Jan. 27—A bomb exploded in an alley between a gas station and a residence at the corner of High and Jackson, resulting in considerable damage to the house. An unexploded bomb was found the same night on the lawn of Rev. King's home on South Jackson.

Bombings 'Blot Upon Public' Montgomery Grand Jury Told

Post-Herald Tues. 2-12-57 Birmingham, Ala.

P. 1

(AP)—An investigating grand jury heard a judge tack the label of public scorn today on the recent outbreak of violence in racially troubled Montgomery.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter charged the Montgomery County Grand Jury to investigate the bombing of Negro churches and homes, and told the jurors:

"Montgomery has for many years been free of such crimes and we want to keep it so. Montgomery frowns on such crimes of violence."

The all-white 18-man jury will hear evidence during the week against seven white men already arrested by city police in connection with the bombings and the six gunfire attacks on racially integrated city buses.

A federal court order last Dec. 21 which abolished bus segregation, preceded the wave of violence. Buses were fired on six times and a Negro woman passenger shot in both legs, and then four Negro churches, service station-taxicab stand and three houses were bombed.

The conspiracy charge is a misdemeaner and could have been tried by Judge Eugene Loe in City Court last Friday. But Loe carried all the cases over until after the grand jury completes its work.

He said the prosecution and defense attorneys had agreed that charges would be dropped against any defenant the grand jury fails to indict.

Carter didn't mention that to the grand jury today, but he pointed out that the jurors have wide discretion in misdemeanor cases and aren't required to return indictments because the lower courts can handle them.

But he told the jury at the same time that "it is your duty under oath," to indict on felony charges where the evidence warrants. The four men charged with the actual bombings are accused of felonies. Bombing of Abernathy's home could carry the death penalty.

The seven men are free on City Court bonds ranging from $250 to $13,000 and Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said the names of any indicted by the grand jury must be withheld until they are rearrested.

Alabama law prohibits disclosure of the identity of an indicted person until he is in custody or under bond in state court.

If any of the seven are indicted, Thetford said they will be called for trial at the February term of Criminal Court which begins next Monday. However, the solicitor said it probably would be the following week before any of them could be tried because of other cases ahead on the docket.

One Negro was on the panel from which the grand jury was drawn but he wasn't chosen to serve. His name wasn't among the 18 pulled out of a handkerchief-covered hat by the judge.

Also on the panel was T. H. Bagley, manager of Montgomery City Lines whose buses have been integrated. But he wasn't chosen to serve, either.

Foreman of the grand jury is Herbert R. Nation, a printing company executive and a veteran Democratic Party leader. Nation was chairman of the County Democratic Executive Committee for many years and now is secretary.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers announced the arrest of seven white men the night of Jan. 30, three days after the second wave of bombings, and said some of the defendants had signed statements admitting participation in the violence.

Four of the men charged with dynamiting two of the churches and one of the residences, the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a Negro minister and leader in the fight against segregation

The other three were accused of conspiracy in the throwing of other bombs which failed to explode at the homes of two other pro-integration ministers.

Judge Carter Asks Indictment Returns If Evidence Justifies

By JO ANN FLIRT

Montgomery frowns on crimes of violence, Circuit Judge Eugene W. Carter told a Montgomery County Grand Jury yesterday as he charged the group to investigate the recent bombings of Negro homes and churches.

"And if the evidence justifies it, it is your duty to return an indictment," he said, speaking of the felony charges lodged by city police against four white men.

Because of inferior courts with final jurisdiction such as City Recorder's Court, the grand jury is not compelled to return indictments on charges of misdemeanors facing three other white men, Judge Carter explained.

"However, if you jurors think it necessary for the public good, it is the function of the jury to return an indictment even in misdemeanor cases; it is your sworn duty in felony cases if the evidence justifies it," he said.

The 18-man, all-white investigating body began its probable week-long session less than an hour after reporting to the court.

PROCEEDINGS SECRET

All proceedings before it are secret. It is not known when the jurors will hear evidence in the cases of the seven men charged with bombings and other violence. There is some speculation that the cases will be investigated Wednesday; other speculation is that the jury already has heard the testimony of city detectives officers and has made its decision on the indictments.

The jury decision will not be made public until it returns an official report in court on the number of indictments, and those indicted are served notice by the county Sheriff's department. Twelve of the 18 men must concur on each indictment.

Appointed foreman of the jury by Judge Carter was Herbert R. Nation, printing firm executive and a former chairman of Montgomery County Democratic Executive Committee.

JURORS CHOSEN

Along with 49 other possible jurors, he was summoned to court yesterday and from those present the names of 18 were drawn from a covered hat by Judge Carter. In addition to Nation, grand jurors chosen were:

Clarence S. Bowman Jr., postal employe, 4205 Altanta Highway; Arnold E. Caldwell, corrective therapy worker for Veterans Hospital, 29 E. Clover Lane; Audrey E. Carroll, president, Capitol Electronics, 3536 Wareingwood Dr.; Oscar F. Davenport Jr., manager, Montgomery Quick Freeze, 2719 Brevard.

Luther F. Dennis, mechanic, State Highway Department, 3591 Georgetown; Charles E. Dowd, hardware shipping clerk, 725 Clayton; Lewis H. Eberdt, engineer, 1136 Barley Dr.; Frank B. Garrett, civil engineer, 2164 Rosemont Dr.; M. George Hebbard, clerk, 19 S. Capitol Parkway.

Reuben L. Hyde, receiving supervisor, Maxwell Air Force Base, 3517 Gaston; H. Vernon Kelly, division manager, Sears Roebuck Co., 1943 Gorgas; Ronald F. Knox, insurance man, 3537 Berkley Dr.; B. P. Livingston, director, Plant Industry Division, State Agriculture Department, 1726 Carter Hill Rd.:

William E. Lockard, federal highway engineer, 3545 Southview Dr.; Claren D. Monday, television repairman, 431 Glenmore Rd.; Alf W. Steinker, accountant, 115 W. Edgemont Ave., and Robert B. Thompson, real estate agent, Montgomery, Rt. 6.

Raymond C. Britt Jr., Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York, all of Montgomery, have been charged with felonies in connection with the actual bombing of residents and churches.

Alexander and York are charged with dynamiting the occupied home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

Alexander also is charged with firing on a city bus.

The three charged with conspiracy—a misdeameanor — were Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap.

All seven cases came before Recorder's Court Judge Eugene Loe last Friday, but Judge Loe announced in brief courtroom proceedings that the cases had been continued under an agreement between the defense and prosecution to have all cases go before the grand jury.

If indicted by the grand jury, the men will be tried this term of court, probably the last week of February, Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said.

City charges will be dropped against any defendants which the grand jury fails to indict, Judge Loe stated.

Although one Negro was listed on the 50-member grand jury panel, his name was not drawn.

Hearings Set For Suspects In Bombings

All six men charged in the recent wave of night bombings and bus shootings here have been released on bond to await a preliminary hearing set for next Friday in Recorder's Court.

Henry Alexander, 27, of 1940 Yarbrough St., was the last to leave City Jail yesterday afternoon, under $13,000 bond.

He and James D. York, 52, of 209 Gardendale, Chisholm, face the death penalty if convicted of the Jan. 10 night bombing of Negro minister Ralph D. Abernathy's home.

Members of the family of the First Baptist Church pastor were sleeping in the house at the time of the incident. No one was hurt, however.

Alexander also is accused of shooting into a city bus and with the dynamiting of a Negro service station, the People's Cab Co., last Sunday.

The Rev. Abernathy, bus driver W. E. Fullilove and Bernard Oliver of the People's Cab. Co. signed warrants against Alexander.

SIGNS WARRANT

Abernathy also signed a warrant against IBM operator York who had made $10,000 bond shortly after the charge was placed against him.

The hearings before City Judge Eugene Loe were docketed yesterday [illegible] 2 hours after formal charges against the men were filed Thursday night.

After preliminary hearings in City Court, the evidence is expected to be presented to the Montgomery County grand jury when it meets Feb. 11.

The next term of Criminal Court starts Feb. 18 and Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford said yesterday that he will insist on starting the bombing trials then if indictments are returned.

Meanwhile, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal identified Donald Dunlap, one of the four men accused of lesser charges in the bombing incidents, as being an ex-convict.

RECORD CITED

Ruppenthal said Dunlap was sentenced to 13 months in Kilby in 1950 for grand larceny. Dunlap's record also shows that he was arrested previously on a grand larceny charge and turned over to Juvenile Court, the police chief said, and was twice convicted of disorderly conduct.

Dunlap, 24, of 243 Riverside Dr., is charged with conspiracy to commit a felony, cases in which the bombs were placed but did not go off at uninhabited buildings. The Rev. Martin L. King Jr. signed a warrant against Dunlap in connection with the attempted bombing of his residence at 309 S. Jackson.

Warrants also were signed by the Rev. Robert Graetz, white minister of a Negro congregation, against Charley Bodiford, 29, of 1002 Olive St., and Eugene Hall, 45, 3871 Happiness Ave.

CONSPIRACY CHARGED

Bodiford, a foreman of a local furniture company, was charged with conspiracy in the bombing of the Rev. Graetz home at 1104 Cleveland Ave. He was released from jail under $1,000 bond.

Hall, a printer, was released from jail Thursday night following the posting of $1,000 bond by several friends.

Raymond C. Britt Jr., 25, of 205 Heustess St., was charged with taking part in bombing of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, First Baptist Church and the service station headquarters of People's Cab Co., 849 High St., and an attempt to bomb the home of Rev. King.

Four warrants were signed against him and he was released on $2,500 bond under charges of bombing uninhabited buildings. Warrant signers included the Rev. King, the Rev. Abernathy, the Rev. H. H. Johnson of Hutchinson Street Baptist Church and Bernard Oliver.

Explosion Suspects Arrested

Third Attempt To 'Get' Boycott Leader Fails

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (INS)— Two white men are being questioned in connection with dynamite-bombing terror tactics in integration-troubled Montgomery.

Chief of Police G. J. Rupenthal withheld identity of the two men, but said both were in their 30's.

He listed them as suspects in the Sunday night bombing of a home and filling station and a third effort to bomb the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of Montgomery integration efforts.

Twelve sticks of dynamite sputtered and went out, then were deactivated by the state toxicologist as a tense crowd watched from a safe distance.

The Sunday bomb which exploded damaged a home and filling station used as headquarters for a taxi company, and three persons were slightly injured.

Rewards for the conviction of the Montgomery bombers—who have set off seven blasts and made two unsuccessful attempts in the past several weeks — now total $4,000. Bombing a dwelling is a capital offense in Alabama.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — A homemade bomb — described by police as "big enough to blow up half a city block" — misfired Sunday after it was thrown on the porch of the Rev. Martin Luther King's home.

However, another Negro home was bombed almost simultaneously in a new outbreak of racial violence growing out of the long and bitter fight by the city's 50,000 Negro residents for integration of public buses.

The unexploded bomb was found to contain 12 sticks of dynamite. It lay untouched for more than an hour before a state texicologist dismantled the apparatus.

Montgomery police roped off the area while the bomb was being dismantled. For a time, the fuse could be seen smouldering.

Second Time In A Month

Rev. King, a Baptist minister and leader of the bus integration movement, was away from home with his family at the time.

This as the second time within a month that an attempt has been made to blow up his home. On Jan. 10 his home was damaged in a series of blasts which also damaged four churches.

Rev. King appeared on the scene shortly after the bomb shattered one side of the home of Allen Robertson, a 59-year-old hospital attendant.

This bomb was thrown between the Robertson house and a filling station.

Two Negro taxi drivers and another employee of the cab company suffered cuts and scratches from flying glass and wood.

Robertson and his wife and daughter were alseep in another part of the house when the blast occured.

After a mob of about 300 angry Negroes crowded the area, Rev. King cautioned:

"Don't get your guns. Don't shoot back and fear no one.

Will Change Hearts

"Through our suffering we will chnge the hearts of those who are cowardly enough to throw dynamite at our homes."

Later in the day, Rev. King preached a sermon at his Bell Street Baptist church and called on his followers for continued resistance without violence.

"We've got to let it be known allover Montgomery that to stop our quest for equality it is going to be necessary to blow up 50,000 homes," he said.

The 28-year-old leader said Negroes must continue to follow a policy of nonviolence because "our oppressors control the police, the National Guard even, and if they send the federal government in here, that will be white folks, too." He added: "The World is looking at Montgomery. We will determine the integration move over the south.

"Even in the face of death we must struggle to save our nation."

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 27. —A second attempt to blow up the home of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. misfired Sunday but another Negro's home was bombed in a new outbreak of racial violence.

p. 1

Twelve sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were tossed on the porch at the home of Rev. King, a leader in the long and bitter fight against segregation. But the bomb failed to explode.

Three Injured

Another bomb tossed between a Negro house and a filling station a short distance away did go off, however, and damaged both buildings. Two Negro taxicab drivers and a third employe of the cab company headquartered at the service station suffered cuts and scratches but no one was seriously injured.

Rev. King, a Baptist minister, and members of his family were away from home at the time. The pro-integration leader said he hasn't occupied the white frame residence "for some time."

Reward Offered

The bombing was another in a series of outbreaks of violence which began shortly after segregation was ended on Montgomery city buses Dec. 21 under a Federal Court order. The Supreme Court ruled city and state bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

Buses have been ambushed with gunfire six times and a young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs. Four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers were heavily damaged by dynamite explosions Jan. 10.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said the City Commission decided Sunday to offer a $2,000 reward for "any information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone who has thrown any bombs." After the Jan. 10 bombings, Gov. James E. Folson posted a similar $2,000 reward.

A crowd of several hundred Negroes quickly gathered at the scene of Sunday's bombing and Rev. King told them:

p. 1

There are about 50,000 Negroes in Montgomery, a city of 135,000.

Mon. 1-28-57

Later, Rev. King told his congregation in Sunday service that "even bombing 50,000 homes would not stop it because others would reach up and take the banner."

Negroes must continue to follow a policy of non-violence, the 28-year-old minister said, "because, "our oppressors control the police, the National Guard even, and if they send the Federal Government in here that will be white folks too."

Some of the Negroes at the bombing scene were visibly angered and police arrested two on charges of disorderly conduct. They were booked at City Jail as Vourlie Wilkins, 28, and Samuel Wallace, 26. They were released on $100 bond each.

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, who arrested Wilkins, said the Negro was "trying to incite a riot." He said Wilkins, talking in a loud voice to others in the crowd, accused police of not trying to solve the recent bombings and attacks on city buses.

Police said the bomb which misfired at Rev. King's home could have destroyed that house and several others if it had gone off. It had two fuses, both of which apparently had been ignited but burned out. One fuse had burned within an inch of the dynamite.

Det. Lt. E. Y. Lacy said the bomb was "still smoking" when he reached the house and the area was quickly cleared and roped off. Asst. State Toxicologist Vann Pruitt Jr. disarmed the bomb with help from Detective Lacy and state Highway Patrol Director Bill Lyerly.

Three Negroes also escaped injury when the home of Allen Robertson was shattered in Sunday's explosion. Robertson, a 50-year-old hospital attendant, said he and his wife and daughter were asleep.

One side of the Robertson house was blown in and window panes were shattered in the service station a few feet away.

Det. Capt. E. P. Dixon said the three employes of the taxicab company were questioned but declined to say what information if any they were able to give. He identified them as Albert McHanney, James Richardson and Eddie McWhorter. They were treated by a city physician for cuts and scratches.

MONTGOMERY, Ala — They can bomb every colored home in Montgomery if they want to, but that will not stop us from trying to gain equality, Dr. Martin Luther King, leader of the effort to secure unsegregated use of public facilities declared here Sunday night after a bomb tossed on the porch of his home misfired.

Even as Rev. Mr. King was making this observation, two colored citizens were being taken to jail charged with "trying to incite a riot."

THE MEN were two of the crowd that gathered at Rev. Mr. King's home after a home nearby and a service station were bombed in a new outbreak of violence here.

Three persons suffered slight injuries in the explosion at the service station and three others escaped injury when one side of their home was blown in by a dynamite bomb blast.

THE PERSONS who gathered at the site of the bombing were told by Dr. King: "We've got to let it be known all over Montgomery that to stop our quest for equality it is going to be necessary to blow up 50,000 homes." There are 50,000 colored citizens in Montgomery's population of 125,000.

The two men arrested on "riot" charges were Veurlie Watkins, 28, and Samuel Wallace, 26. The two were taken to jail after Police Chief G. J. Huppenthal said that they accused police officers of not trying to solve other bombings here and attacks on city buses.

IN THE LAST six months, more than a dozen colored homes and churches have been bombed. Even though rewards totaling $4,000 have been offered, no arrests have been made.

No arrests have been made either, in cases in which city buses have been peppered by bullets and rocks. On one bus, an expectant mother was shot in both legs.

THE BOMB that misfired on Rev. Mr. King's porch was made up of 12 sticks of dynamite and had two fuses. Investigators said that if the bomb had gone off it would have destroyed Rev. Mr. King's home "and several others."

The bomb that did go off splintered windows at a service station used as a taxicab headquarters and blew in the side of the home of Allen Robertson, a hospital attendant.

Mr. Robertson and his wife and daughter were asleep in their home when the explosion took place. They escaped injury, however, Rev. Mr. King and his family were away from home when the bomb misfired there.

$2,000 Offered In City Search For Dynamiters

'Dud' Spares King's Home; Another Hit

Advertiser Mon. 1-28-57

A $2,000 reward has been posted by the City Commission for information leading to the arrest and conviction of dynamiters who yesterday planted two bombs—one a dud on the Rev. Martin Luther King's front porch—and the other which damaged a combination Negro service station - taxicab stand and a private house.

An explosion rocked the home of Allen Robertson, 342 S. Jackson St., at 4:30 a.m. The blast also blew out some windows of the Peoples Service Station and Taxi Co. next door at the corner of High and Jackson streets. No injuries were reported although damage to the two buildings was called "extensive" by Fire Chief Robert L. Lampley.

Yesterday's attack on the Rev. King's home was the third—once before with dynamite and once by gunfire which was not reported to police.

Twelve sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were tossed on the porch at the home of King, a leader in the long and bitter fight against segregation. But the bomb failed to explode.

DAMAGED BOTH

Another bomb tossed between a Negro house and a filling station a short distance away did go off, however, and damaged both buildings. Two Negro taxicab drivers and a third employe of the cab company headquartered at the service station suffered cuts and scratches but no one was seriously injured.

King, a Baptist minister, and members of his family were away from home at the time. The pro-segregation leader said he hasn't occupied the white frame residence "for some time."

The bombing was another in a series of outbreaks of violence which began shortly after segregation was ended on city buses Dec. 21 under a federal court order.

A crowd of several hundred Negroes quickly gathered at the scene of today's bombing and King told them:

"We've got to let it be known all over Montgomery that to stop our quest for equality, it is going to be necessary to blow up 50,000 homes."

50,000 HOMES

Later King told his congregation in Sunday service that, "Even bombing 50,000 homes would not stop it because others would reach up and take the banner."

Montgomery has become "a city that is dangerous to live in," King told an almost full church.

Negroes must continue to follow a policy of nonviolence, the 28-year-old minister said, because, "our oppressors control the police, the National Guard even, and if they send the federal government in here that will be white folks too."

So far city authorities have refused offers of outside help in curbing violence. Negroes have appealed to President Eisenhower to say something about the situation.

Some of the Negroes at the bombing scene were visibily angered and police arrested two on charges of disorderly conduct. They were booked at city jail as Vurlie Wilkins, 28, and Samuel Wallace, 26, and released on $100 bond each.

ACCUSED POLICE

Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, who arrested Wilkins, said the Negro was "trying to incite a riot." He said Wilkins, talking in a loud voice to others in the crowd, accused police of not trying to solve the recent bombings and attacks on city buses. P. 2-A Police said the bomb which misfired at King's home could have destroyed that house and several others if it had gone off.

King returned to his home about an hour after the bomb was found. He didn't say where he and his his family had been living but told friends, "I haven't stayed here for some time."

The house was brightly illuminated from floodlights installed under the eaves after an earlier bomb attack last Jan. 30. No one was injured in the first explosion although King's wife and new-born baby were in the house.

Three Negroes also escaped injury when the home of Allen Robertson was shattered in today's explosion. Robertson, a 59-year-old hospital attendant, said he and his wife and daughter were alseep.

One side of the Robertson house was blown in and windows were shattered in the service station a few feet away.

King appealed to the Negro community to "remain calm."

"Let us not get our guns," he urged, "because that will not solve the problems. Through our suffering, we are going to transform the hearts of those who are cowardly enough to throw bombs and shoot pistols."

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 27 (AP)—A dynamite bomb, tossed during the pre-dawn darkness, shattered a Negro's house and damaged a service station early today while another fizzled out at the home of the city's top integration leader.

Police said that an unidentified Negro cab driver was slightly injured and three other cab company employes shaken up when a bomb exploded between a Negro residence and a combination service station and Negro cab stand.

Another bomb was hurled at the home of the Rev. M. L. King, Jr., just across the street, but the crude package of 12 sticks of dynamite bounced off the front door and smouldered without exploding on the porch.

A crowd of angry Negroes formed around King's house following the explosion, but King, leader of a drive to integrate city buses here, helped police avoid a possible riot.

The City Commission today offered a $2,000 reward for "any information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone who has thrown any bombs."

Two Negroes were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct after the crowd of "about 500" Negroes formed around King's house.

Ruppenthal said that Vurilie D. Wilkins was arrested after he made a "soap box" speech criticizing police action in integration incidents and calling for action.

King, who was gone with his family from his home at the time the bomb was hurled on the porch, told the Negroes milling around his house "don't get your guns—don't shoot back—but fear no one."

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 27.—A second attempt to blow up the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., misfired today, but another Negro's home was bombed in a new outbreak of racial violence.

Twelve sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were tossed on the porch at the home of King, a leader in the long and bitter fight against segregation. But the bomb failed to explode.

Another bomb tossed between a Negro's house and a filling station a short distance away did go off, however, and damaged both buildings.

Buses Ambushed

King, a Baptist minister, and members of his family were away from their home. The pro-integration leader said he hadn't occupied the white frame residence "for some time."

The bombing constituted another in a series of outbreaks of violence that began shortly after segregation was ended on Montgomery city buses December 21 under a Federal Court order. The Supreme Court ruled City and State bus-segregation laws unconstitutional.

Buses have been ambushed with gunfire six times and a young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs. Four Negro churches and the homes of two prointegration ministers were heavily damaged by Dynamite explosions January 10.

Mayor W. A. Gayle said the City Commission had decided today to offer a $2,000 reward for "any information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone who has thrown any bombs." After the January 10 bombings, Governor James E. Folsom posted a similar $2,000 reward.

A crowd of several hundred Negroes quickly gathered at King's home today, and King told them:

Montgomery has become "a city that is dangerous to live in," King told an almost-full church.

Fuses Burned Out

Police said the bomb that misfired at King's home could have destroyed that house and several others if it had gone off. It had two fuses, both of which apparently had been ignited but burned out. One fuse had burned within an inch of the dynamite.

Detective Lieutenant E. Y. Lacy said the bomb was "still smoking" when he reached the house and the area was quickly cleared and roped off. Assistant State Toxicologist Vann Pruitt, Jr., disarmed the bomb with help from Lacy and State Highway Patrol Director Bill Lyerly.

King returned to his home about an hour after the bomb was found. He didn't say where he and his family had been living, but told friends, "I haven't stayed here for some time."

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (ANP) — The coming of the first official report by police here on the bombing of six Negro churches and homes has uncovered no more than was already known.

In addition, Police Chief J. G. Ruppenthal said at a press conference last week he does not see a break in the case at present. He said his officers are following all leads to apprehend the persons or persons responsible for the Jan. 9 bombing of the Negro property.

Ruppenthal said suspects of both races have been questioned, but none were held.

Meanwhile two Montgomery police officers have consulted with Birmingham police officials, but declined to make their discussion public.

Four churches, two ministers' homes blasted—

Bombings hit Montgomery, buses halted again

No one hurt in new violence; bus fired on

News P. 1 Thurs. 1-10-57
B'ham, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 10—(AP)—A mass renewal of violence, with four Negro churches and two ministers' homes bombed, left Montgomery without a public transportation system today.

City bus service, racially integrated under a federal court order, was halted by the city commission "until further notice" as a safety measure.

The bombings, in which no one was reported injured, came today less than 12 hours after a city bus was ambushed by gunfire, the sixth such incident since segregation ended on buses Dec. 21.

THOUSANDS OF workers in this city of 125,000 were left stranded and had to find rides with friends or in taxicabs or walk to their jobs. Taxicab companies, both white and Negro, were jammed with calls.

It was perhaps the biggest single outbreak of violence in the South since the fight to preserve segregation began with announcement of the U. S. Supreme Court's school integration decision in May, 1954.

The order to halt bus service indefinitely was announced by Mayor W. A. Gayle, who also called a conference of all three city commissioners later in the day.

AT WASHINGTON, the Justice Department said it is looking into the bombing incidents.

An aid to Atty. Gen. Brownell said the preliminary injuiry was "automatic," to determine whether there has been any violation of federal law. The FBI makes such inquiries and afterward submits a report to the Justice Department's Criminal Division for a determination of what further action, if any, is indicated.

Gov. James E. Folsom and Bill Lyerly, Alabama public safety director, made a dawn survey of the bombings. Folsom said he would meet with Gayle later to discuss the situation.

One corner of the Bell Street Baptist Church was blown away for 10 feet in each direction at the rear of the building. The choir loft behind the pulpit was wrecked and part of the ceiling above the pulpit knocked loose.

Police said they were still investigating a bombing of the Mt. Olive Church on the southwest edge of Montgomery.

BOTH THE HOME and the church of Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, one of the leaders in the long bus boycott which preceded the start of integration, were heavily damaged by bombs apparently made of dynamite.

A corner of the front porch was blown off Abernathy's home. The Negro minister was reported in Atlanta where Negroes also have started a campaign to end bus segregation.

Another bomb blew off doors and part of the roof of the Negro First Baptist Church where Abernathy is pastor.

News P. 11

THE HOME of Rev. Robert Graetz, a white minister who serves an all-Negro congregation at the Trinity-Lutheran Church, was another target of the bombing attacks. The front door was blown in and walls damaged.

Eleven unexploded sticks of dynamite wrapped around a metal tube were found in front of Graetz's home. Police defused them.

The white minister also was active in the Negro bus boycott and has supported the integration campaign. Another bomb exploded at his home several months ago, but he was out of town and no one was hurt then either.

A THREE-FOOT SECTION of wall by a door was blown out of the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church in today's outbreak. The pastor, Rev. H. H. Johnson, is another integration leader.

Gayle rejected suggestions of calling in state or federal law enforcement officers.

"We don't need any additional help," he said. "We can handle the situation ourselves."

EARLIER IN THE EVENING a shotgun blast was fired into a city bus as it was finishing one of the first evening runs since recent bus shootings brought a ban on night operations. It was the sixth armed attack on buses.

THREE OF THE BOMBS went off within a short time of each other around 2 a.m. After a lull of about an hour at least one more explosion was reported.

A bomb exploded in the yard of Graetz' home last August with only minor damage. The youthful pastor said this morning that "they were quite a bit closer this time."

"I suppose someone will blame it on the Negroes again," Graetz said. "But it's more ridiculous than ever."

Mayor Gayle said after the August bombing that Negroes might have been responsible in an effort to win sympathy and contributions for the boycott.

After the birdshot charge was fired at the bus, Gayle told the bus company to halt buses for the night. Later he ordered the indefinite suspension.

DRIVER C. P. CANTY was returning to the company parking lot with an empty bus about 5:45 p.m. when a shotgun blast from a passing car hit a window about 10 feet behind him.

Folsom Posts $2,000 Reward For Information On Bombings

Montgomery, Ala.

An aroused Gov. James E. Folsom, disturbed by the sudden outbreak of racial violence in Alabama, posted a $2,000 reward yesterday for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the "hoodlums" who dynamited four churches and two homes here early yesterday.

The announcement of the reward was made by Col. Bill Lyerly, director of the Department of Public Safety. Lyerly said the reward also applied in Mobile, where two bombings also were reported yesterday.

Noting that the governor deplored the acts of violence, Lyerly quoted Folsom as saying the bombings could have been done by "Negro hoodlums, Communist hoodlums, or by white hoodlums, but whoever did these bombings must certainly be hoodlums."

Gov. Folsom made a personal inspection of the bomb damage inflicted here, being taken on a dawn tour by Col. Lyerly. Later he assured city officials his "full cooperation" during the tense situation.

"I talked privately with Mayor Gayle today," Folsom said, "and assured him the state was ready at any time to help if our services are necessary to maintain peace and order."

Folsom disclaimed reports that he might order out the National Guard, adding that "I think it is a little late to do that. The damage has already been done."

However, Folsom said he was keeping close watch on all developments through Lyerly, and declared emphatically that he would not condone any damage to life, limb or property in any community in Alabama.

Terror in the Night

Mon. 1-21-57

Atlanta, Ga.

All through the day, people agreed afterward, the ominous sensation of foreboding that filled the city of Montgomery, Ala., had been heightening; as the afternoon waned, one observer said, the sensation was verging on panic.

P. 20

Part of the reason might have been the weather—it was one of the hottest January days on record in the "Cradle of the Confederacy" (80 degrees), and the night would be thick and oppressive.

But most of the feeling came from the knowledge that the city's desegregated buses* were due to resume their afterdark runs for the first time in eleven days: The night runs had been canceled after four buses had been shot at in three nights (NEWSWEEK, Jan. 7).

Most of the good people of Montgomery, white and Negro alike, hoped that the resumption of service would proceed smoothly, but they were in for bitter disappointment. That night in Montgomery was a night laden with such terror as few citizens could remember.

At 5:45 p.m., a shotgun blast from an oncoming automobile shattered a window behind the driver on a bus empty of passengers. Mayor W.A. Gayle promptly ordered the night runs halted again and the buses returned to the shops. But the terror continued.

A night newsman for the Associated Press, Henry Bradsher, was driving near a Negro residential district at 1:55 a.m. when suddenly, through the quiet of the night, came the roar of a dynamite explosion somewhere nearby. Four minutes later, as Bradsher cruised the tree-lined streets in his car, looking for the scene, there came another explosion.

A police car sirened past and Bradsher followed it to the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, where most of the stained-glass windows and part of the wall had been blasted out.

At 2:01 a.m., a third blast rocked the district; a fourth came in seven more minutes; a fifth, at 3 a.m.; a sixth, an hour later; and to thousands of Montgomery citizens now wide-awake, it sounded as though a madman was hurtling through the streets, tossing bombs right and left.

Madmen the dynamiters might have been, but the targets of their hatred formed a pattern.

Two homes were blasted, those of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white pastor of the Trinity Lutheran Church, and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church. (By a miracle no one was injured, though there were persons sleeping in both houses.) Both men had been leaders in the fight for integration.

The other explosions all but destroyed two churches—the Bell Street Baptist and Mount Olive Baptist—and extensively damaged the Reverend Abernathy's First Baptist and the Hutchinson Street Baptist. (Damage: Estimated at upwards of $50,000.)

Reward Offered: Next morning, the City Commission canceled all bus service, day and night, for an "indefinite" period. Gov. James E. Folsom offered a reward of $2,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the "hoodlums" responsible. A group of about 25 white Protestant ministers and a Jewish rabbi issued a public statement calling for an act of repentance by all citizens "for the violence done against the homes of some of our citizens, against houses of God, against peace, order, and good will of our community."

And The Montgomery Advertiser warned in an editorial:

"The issue now is no longer segregation. The issue now is whether it is safe to live in Montgomery, Ala."

The FBI moved agents into the city, and later the City Commission declared a state of emergency. The commission added twenty policemen to the force and warned parents to keep a watch on their children, to keep teen-agers off the streets after midnight.

By the weekend the situation had quieted, but the general tenseness not only in Montgomery but elsewhere in the South moved Negro leaders meeting in Atlanta, where bus segregation also had become an issue (see RELIGION), to send an appeal to President Eisenhower. They asked him to make a speech in a major Southern city, to "use the weight of your great office to point out to the people of the South the moral nature of the problem." They also asked Vice President Richard M. Nixon to make a tour of the South. And the Negroes revealed that their appeal to the White House had the seconding of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Six dynamite explosions damaged four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers in Montgomery, Ala., last week, as Negro churchmen in Atlanta pushed a "religious war" against bus segregation.

The home of the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Negro leader in a year-long Montgomery boycott against bus segregation in Montgomery, was heavily damaged in the series of bombings early Thursday morning.

Montgomery police said there were no reports of injuries in the bombings in the Alabama capital city, where a bus desegregation movement which since has spread to other major southern cities first began more than a year ago.

The Rev. Abernathy is one of some 50 Negro leaders from throughout the South in Atlanta last week for an area-wide strategy meeting to expand the campaign against "jim crow" seating practices in the South. His wife and child, sleeping in a back bedroom, were terrified by the early morning blast, but escaped injury.

Police who investigated said "the front of the house was torn up considerably and also damaged inside."

There were no witnesses in the attack on the minister's home, or in any of the other Montgomery explosions, police said.

LEADER FIRM

The emergency measures followed in the wake of the dynamite-bombings this morning of four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers who led a move for an end to segregation on city buses.

The Rev. Ralph Abernathy, whose home was bombed, said the wave of violence would not end the quest for freedom by Montgomery Negroes.

"They may destroy our churches, destroy our homes," he said, "but there are two things they will never destroy — that's our faith in God, and our desire for freedom."

In Atlanta, Negro leaders from 29 Southern communities called on President Eisenhower to visit the South to urge acceptance of the Supreme court decisions on segregation.

PLEA TO IKE

Leaders who mapped plans for a Southwide non-violent program to end racial segregation on buses called on the President to personally move into the South "to defend American citizens unjustly and brutally attacked at home."

"Extreme violence continues to be directed toward Negro people in the South who merely seek rights guaranteed every American citizen by the U. S. Constitution," the steering committee of four southern ministers told the President. Their letter added:

"Negroes, who seek to vote, are driven from their lands in Mississippi on threat of death. In Tennessee, Negro children have been attacked. In Florida stoning and cross-burning are used to obstruct justice. Negro leaders are threatened.

"In Alabama, Christian churches litreally have been destroyed by dynamite and TNT. Numerous individuals including women, have been beaten on the streets. The homes of Negro and white leaders have been bombed."

TEN STATES

The Negro leaders who come from 10 Southern states pointed out that the maintenance of law and order in the nation "finally rests squarely on the executive branch of the government — directly on the President.

"But beyond your constitutional power, as president, you possess and can wield an immense moral power," the leaders wrote the President.

They urged the President "to point out to the people of the South the moral nature of the problem faced at home and abroad by the unsolved civil rights issues and the violent racial disorder that will arise again and again until these issues are solved."

The appeal to the President was suggested by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of the late President, who wired the Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., in connection with the bombing of Negro churches in Montgomery, the first city in the South to end bus segregation under a federal court order.

ROOSEVELT PLEA

Mrs. Roosevelt said:

"Deeply distressed by violence which has occurred. Would suggest appeal to the President since this is Supreme Court order."

The group added an appeal to Attorney General Herbert Brownell for a conference at the earliest possible date to discuss recent actions in the South including what they called "attempts of local officials to use the public authority, including arrest powers, to subvert the clear mandates of the court."

Brownell has stated previously that discrimination against bus passengers on account of race is "a crime against the United States." Referring to that the group asked for a clarification of the federal government's position in the segregation dispute "to the end that justice might prevail and that the supreme law of the land shall be upheld."

NO TIMETABLE

The group, called together by ministers who had led moves to break the race barrier on buses in Montgomery, and arrests of bus riders in Birmingham and Atlanta.

The four — all leading integration movements in their cities — reminded Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell of an earlier promise to prosecute anyone who would aid transit systems in maintaining segregation. They asked for a conference for "clarification" of this stand in the light of recent southern incidents.

"The question before the nation," the group told the President, "is no longer whether there shall be segregation or integration, but rather, whether there shall be anarchy of law."

in Montgomery, Birmingham and Tallahassee, decided on no Southwide time-table for similar moves in other cities. The Rev. King said, however, that he does not believe it will take more than three years to accomplish complete integration in the field of transportation.

Success in one area, he said, eases the task in other cities. He added that integration largely must be accomplished outside legislative halls, and declared:

"If we can develop the proper local spirit, it is hoped we won't even have to go into local courts. If we have to go to court, however, we will."

COURSE OF ACTION

The Rev. C. K. Steele, of Tallahassee, said that the sense of the group was that where court action appeared necessary, the most expedient procedure would be to seek declaratory judgments in the federal court, such as was done in Miami.

The Negro leaders decided on a permanent organization and planned another meeting "soon" probably to be held in New Orleans. A local group currently is planning a bus desegregation move in the Louisiana city.

"The Conference on Transportation and Non-Violent Integration," as the group calls itself, issued a call to all Negroes "to assert their human dignity." It added:

"We ask them to seek justice and reject all injustice, especially that in themselves. We pray that they will refuse further cooperation with the evil element which invites them to collide against themselves in return for bits of patronage. We know that such an assertion may cause them persecution; yet no matter how great the obstacles and suffering, we urge all Negroes to reject segregation."

STRESS NON-VIOLENCE

Spokesmen for the group stressed that all its programs will emphasize non-violence.

Each community will decide on its own specific course of action with local conditions determining how and when desegregation moves will come.

Leaders of the conference — ministers M. L. King, jr., of Montgomery; F. L. Shuttlesworth, of Birmingham; C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, and T. J. Jemison, of Baton Rouge — suggested direct prosecution by the U. S. Justice department might be appropriate, in view of bombings

Arrests Bared As Break Looms In Bombing Case

2 White Men In Custody; Roundup Set

Advertiser Montgomery Ala. P. 1

At least two white men—and possibly more—are being held in connection with the recent wave of seven bombings which have rocked Montgomery since Jan. 10.

From an unimpeachable source, The Advertiser has learned that "a big roundup" of suspects is eminent. The case is expected to break fully in "a day or so," the source said. Adv. 1-30-57

The Advertiser has been cooperating with Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal in withholding news of the arrests, which began Sunday. The pair were arrested shortly after a Negro service station and a Negro home at High and Jackson streets were bombed at 4:30 a.m. Sunday.

OTHER CITIES

The investigation is not confined to the Montgomery area. Other cities are involved and several other law enforcement agencies are cooperating in the manhunt. An unconfirmed report indicated the FBI is being "consulted."

The police department's detective division, as well as top police brass, will not discuss the case. No names have been released, but one of the prisoners is reported to have a criminal record.

One or both of the prisoners was believed to have "talked" to city detectives.

BIRMINGHAM TRIP

According to informed sources, all suspects now involved are from Montgomery. However, others from out of town have been under suspicion since Detective Capt. E. P. Brown went to Birmingham on Jan. 17. The trip was made to compare a dynamite bomb found by three youngsters near Chisholm on Jan. 13. It compared in many respects—fuse, caps, masking tape, and the type of explosive—with an unexploded bomb found three days earlier at the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white minister of a Negro congregation.

At that time Brown, Ruppenthal and Vann Pruitt, a state toxicologist here held a press conference to report on the progress they had made. Brown said "several suspects" from "out of town" — presumably from or from near Jefferson County—were being carefully eyed by the sleuths here and in Birmingham.

In addition, officers at that time said the type of dynamite used in the bombings was of the "ditching variety common to South Alabama. Investigators from Montgomery have since been scouring southern Alabama cities such as Troy, Selma, Brewton and even Prattville.

Violence erupted here during the 381-day long Negro bus boycott. Targets have been buildings and people, Negro and white. The Rev. Mr. Graetz has been a two-time victim. The Rev. Martin Luther King, 28-year-old Negro leader of the integration movement, was a bomb target twice, including a dud tossed on Jan. 27 and reporedly he was shot at once.

At 2 a.m. on Jan. 10—a damp, figgy morning — a series of six explosions rocked this city. The targets: four Negro churches and the homes of two ministers, Graetz and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a Negro minister and a leader in the Montgomery Improvement Assn. which sparked the bus integration movement here.

The dynamite ring (sources indicate it was a group of at least three which planned and carried out the bombings) zeroed in on the Mount Olive Baptist Church, Old Selma road and Southern bypass; Bell Street Baptist Church, 503 Oak St.; Hutchinson Street Baptist Church, 924 Hutchison St.; First Baptist Church, 347 N. Ripley St., and the homes of Abernathy and Graetz. This was on Jan. 10.

On Jan. 13 the clue-laden three-stick bomb was found under a seldom-used bridge near Chisholm.

The bombers remained inactive until last Sunday when they hurled a bomb in an alley between the Peoples Service Station and Taxicab Co. and the home of Allen Robertson, 60-year-old Negro hospital orderly at St. Margaret's S. Jackson St.

While police were investigating the explosion, an officer discovered a 12-stick unexploded bomb on the porch of the home of Rev. King, a few hundred feet down Jackson street.

The area was cordoned off and, risking their lives, Pruitt, Detective Lt. E. Y. Lacy and State Safety Director Col. Bill Lyerly dismantled the bomb. It, too, was similar in many respects to the other unexploded bomb.

Police declined to speculate if there was any connection between the bombings and the six ambushes of city buses. The gunning of the buses resulted in the City Commission ordering service halted on two different occasions.

Only yesterday the city commission extended a 5:15 p.m. curfew one half hour for the convenience of later riders. Police cars still escort many of the late buses.

8 Whites Held In Violence at Montgomery

Constitution P. 1 Atlanta

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 30 (AP)—Police disclosed tonight that at least eight white men have been arrested as participants in recent violence in Montgomery and some have confessed. Const. 1-31-57

At a dramatically tense news conference, Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said:

1. "Seven or eight" men are being held in connection with the recent series of seven bombings of Negro homes and churches which started after segregation was ended on city buses here last month.

2. Another man has signed a statement that he fired into a bus the morning of Dec. 31. It was the sixth such attack on integrated buses in the first 10 days after the segregation barriers were lowered.

Sellers said police have "several confessions and statements tying in with certain bombings." He declined, however, to identify any of the men held in connection with the bombings, explaining that no formal charges have been filed yet.

Court Hearing Set Today For 7 Held In Bombings

Fri. 2-8-57 Montgomery, Ala.

Seven white men arrested after the bombing of Negro churches and homes in a recent outbreak of racial violence in Montgomery face hearings this morning in City Court.

But there were strong indications that the charges against all the defendants will be passed over without testimony to the Montgomery County Grand Jury which convenes next Monday.

Four Negro churches and the homes of two pro-integration ministers, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy and the Rev. Robert Graetz, were shattered by dynamite Jan. 10. Another bomb failed to explode at the home of Graetz, the white pastor of a Negro church.

Seventeen days later, a bomb damaged another Negro home and an adjoining service station and taxicab stand while still another was found unexploded at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the Negro fight against segregation.

The bombings, and six gunfire attacks on city buses which occurred earlier, came after racial segregation was ended on the buses under federal court order.

Three of the white men arrested by city police are charged only with conspiracy in connection with the bombs which failed to go off at the homes of Graetz and King. Those defendants are Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap, the latter an ex-convict.

Since the conspiracy charges are misdemeanors, they normally would be handled by City Recorder Eugene Loe. Maximum penalty is $1,000 fine and six months hard labor.

However, there were indications that Loe will waive jurisdiction and let the evidence against Hall, Bodiford and Dunlap go to the grand jury next week along with the more serious charges against the other four men—Henry Alexander, James D. York, Raymond C. Britt Jr. and Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr.

Alexander and York are charged with dynamiting Abernathy's home while the Negro minister's family was sleeping in the house. Under Alabama law, that offense carries a possible death penalty. Advertiser

In addition, Alexander is accused of bombing the Negro service station-taxicab stand and with ambushing a city bus. P. 3-a

Britt is charged with dynamiting Abernathy's church and another church; with bombing the taxicab stand, and with conspiracy in connection with the unexploded bomb at King's house.

Livingston is accused of the bombing of the Hutchinson St. Baptist Church, another of the four damaged in the Jan. 10 outbreak.

The dynamiting of public buildings is punishable under Alabama law by a maximum of 10 years in prison.

Bombing Cases Sent To Jury

Sat. 2-9-57 Montgomery, Ala.

By AL McCONAGHA

The cases of seven white men charged in connection with a rash of anti-Negro bombings and bus shootings here were placed yesterday in the hands of the Montgomery County Grand Jury which convenes Monday.

In a police court jammed with spectators, City Judge D. Eugene Loe announced that the cases against the defendants would be continued for two weeks.

Loe said the continuance was a result of an agreement between prosecution and defense attorneys that the evidence against the seven men will be presented to the grand jury next week.

LOE

Loe said the charges will be dropped in police court if the grand jury fails to indict any of the men.

The announcement came as an anti-climax for the huge crowd that packed the room. Loe made his pronouncement at the opening of the court session, handed copies of the statement and pictures of himself to the dozen newsmen present, and the room was quickly emptied.

Clerk of Circuit John R. Matthews said 50 subpoenas have been delivered to people who will eventually make up the 18-person jury. The jury sessions are secret and no indication was available as to what day the cases will be considered.

After the court session, Loe said he had previously "turned down flat" proposals by both sides for a continuance, but that he had later changed his mind.

The defendants, all residents of Montgomery, were arrested after four Negro churches, a service station and taxicab stand, and the homes of two Negroes and a pro-integration white minister were bombed in a wild outbreak of violence following the end of bus segregation.

Advertiser P. 8-A

Two other dynamite bombs were found unexploded.

Before the bombings, the newly integrated city buses were ambushed with gunfire six times and a young Negro woman passenger was shot in both legs.

Three of the seven men arrested were charged only with misdemeanors in connection with the unexpected bombs. Loe could have tried these men yesterday. But under the agreement he continued their cases until Feb. 22 to give the grand jury time to investigate the charges.

The grand jury convenes on Monday. Any of the seven men indicted would face trial in Circuit Court the following week.

Loe also carried over the felony charges against the other four defendants who are charged with the bombing of the two of the Negro churches and the home of one pastor, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, on the leaders in the fight against segregation.

Henry Alexander and Raymond D. York are accused of dynamiting Abernathy's home while members of his family were asleep in the house.

Alexander also is charged with bombing a Negro service station and taxi stand, and with firing a pistol into a city bus from a moving truck. No one was hurt in the ambush.

Raymond C. Britt Jr., another defendant, is accused of the service station bombing and of bombing Abernathy's church and anothe Negro church, and with conspiracy in an unsuccessful attempt to bomb the home if the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and another integration leader.

A bomb containing 12 sticks of dynamite was found on the front porch of King's house the morning of Jan. 27, the same day the service station and an adjoining Negro residence were damaged.

Sonny Kyle Livingston Jr., also is charged with bombing one of the four churches which were shattered Jan. 10.

The defendants facing misdemeanor charges are Eugene Hall, Charlie Bodiford and Donald Dunlap.

Hall and Bodiford are accused of an unsuccessful attempt to bomb the home of th Rev. Robert Graetz, the white pastor of a Negro church; Dunlap is charged along with Britt in connection with the bomb that misfired at King's home.

One bomb damanged Graet's residence Jan. 10 but no one has been charged with that offense yet. Instead, Hall and Bodiford were arrested in connection with the throwing of a dud bomb at the Graetz home the same day.

All seven defendants are free on bonds ranging from $250 to $13,000.

Carroll contended that Mrs. Wright's attorney "made statements calculated to influence the jury to punish this defendant for abondoning segregation on its buses. That the jury, all white, did so is demonstrated by the inconsistent verdict."

The motion declared that "in no event should the damages payable by the company exceed the amount payable by the woman who made the assault."

President Eisenhower Turns Letter From Bus Integration Leaders Over To Dept. Justice For Study And Advise

No White House Decision On Speaking Tour In The South On Race Issue

Washington, D. C. Jan. 28 (DSN) —President Eisenhower has turned over the letter sent to him by the Southern Negro leaders of the bus integration movement to the U. S. Department of Justice for study and advise it was revealed last week.

The letter was sent to the President following a recent meeting of Southern Negro leaders in Atlanta, Georgia after their efforts at immediate integration of city buses in several southern cities had been met by a series of violent incidents and arrests of some of the principals involved in the movement.

The movement against continued segregation in the south which started in Montgomery, Alabama, where it took the form of a non-violent resistance campaign, under the leadership of Rev. Martin Luther King fixed the pattern for effort which spread to several other southern cities.

The letter to the President called on him to speak out against the violence aimed at Negro leaders and urged him to make a tour of the south and speak out against the rising racial tension resulting from the decision of the United States Supreme Court abolishing segregation.

The news that the President had turned the letter over to the Department of Justice for study and advise has aroused considerable discussion here. In informed circles there has been heard opinions which point out that no matter how kindly the President might look at the situation regarding the Negro and segregation it is doubtful whether he could give his approval to their non-violent resistance campaign. It being pointed out that resistance itself is a form of violence whether no matter by what name it might be called, and that resistance being a form of coercion is contrary to the American Democratic process. This group is strongly of the opinion that if the President chooses to speak out after being advised by the Justice Department that he is likely to point out the un-American aspects of the resistance movement.

With the President apparently waiting for the Justice Department to study the letter and give him its advise there was no indication from the White House in regard to his making a speaking tour through the south to speak out against violence and increasing racial tension.

Warrants issued on Negro leaders

Thurs., 1-10-57 P. 58

Birm., Ala.

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 — (AP) — Warrants for the arrest of six Negro ministers charging them with violating state segregation laws were obtained today by Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins.

The ministers, led by the Rev. William Holmes Borders, yesterday boarded a bus and sat in seats normally used by whites. Praying, singing and reading the Bible, the six said their purpose was to test the city's traditional racially separate bus seating pattern.

THE GROUP had planned a similar ride today, but apparently called it off after Jenkins secured the warrants from the office of Fulton Solicitor General Paul Webb. They were signed by Fulton Civil Court Judge J. Wilson Parker.

The police chief said he anticipated a peaceful surrender of the Negroes and that one already had called to volunteer to meet him at the jail.

Named on the warrants were Borders and the Revs. R. Joseph Johnson, H. Bussey, R. B. Shorts, R. H. Williams and A. Franklin Fisher.

Mayor William B. Hartsfield earlier had asked the arrest of violators of state laws on buses. Earlier Gov. Marvin Griffin had ordered the state militia alerted.

Borders and his followers gathered at his church, the Wheat Street Baptist Church, at noon. He said he knew nothing of the warrants and announced his intention of continuing to board buses and take a seat in the white section until he was arrested.

LAST NIGHT Borders, leader of the "love, law and liberation movement," told a cheering Negro mass meeting that Negroes were going forward with their plan to sit where they want on buses at "whatever the cost."

He said only preachers will attempt to ride desegregated at this time, that they will try again today, tomorrow, Saturday, "and then Sunday we will try to ride again before church."

The organized Negro attempt to take the front seats of Atlanta buses was the first in the Georgia capital and the third in a Southern capital.

Buses at Montgomery were integrated under federal court order Dec. 21 after a 381-day Negro bus boycott. A move to ride integrated on buses at Tallahassee, Fla., led to temporary suspension of bus service by the governor. Service resumed this week under a new bus seat assignment plan of the Tallahassee City Commission.

IN ATLANTA, the governor said he would not hesitate to use the state militia to preserve life and property.

Griffin said he was instructing the adjutant general of Georgia to hold his forces ready to put down "any riots, insurrections and breaches of the peace" at a moment's notice.

Southeastern Negro leaders plan to work out strategy for integrated transportation in the South at meetings here today and tomorrow.

The Atlanta desegregation move was led by Borders. He and five other ministers boarded a bus in the downtown section and took seats in the front section. A transit system supervisor walked over and ordered the driver to let the bus "sit there."

ALL WHITE passengers except one left the bus. Supervisor R. L. Wages called a crew of mechanics who tinkered briefly with the vehicle and then drove it.

Borders said his group thought the bus was headed for a transit system parking lot and garage near the downtown section.

"But it passed the garage and turned left on boulevard and I don't know where it was going," he said. "We pulled the cord and got off about a block after it turned." No arrests were made.

Mayor William B. Hartsfield declined comment on the governor's standby order to the militia. But he said that city police would "if this issue is forced upon us, uphold the state law."

OTHER SEGREGATION developments included:

New Orleans—The Rev. A. L. Davis Jr., spokesman for the New Orleans Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance and the New Orleans Improvement League, said the two groups would start federal court action "just as soon as possible" in an effort to end segregation on the city's street cars and buses.

Tallahassee—Tallahassee Negroes were urged last night to register as voters to throw solid support behind the Rev. K. S. Dupont, bus integration leader, who has qualified as a city commission candidate. He is the first of his race to qualify to run for a city office in the Florida capital since reconstruction days.

Beaumont, Tex.—An explosion at a Negro residence in a mixed neighborhood last night shattered front windows and ripped a shallow hole in the lawn, but none of four persons inside was injured. It was the second explosion of the week here. An explosion Monday night damaged the sidewalk in front of the home of Dr. Ed Sprott, Negro physician and a former official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

MOBILE—Police said an explosion early today caused slight damage to the home of a Negro but that none of eight persons in the house was injured. Walter Johnson, 51, told officers a cross was burned in front of the house Nov. 23.

Police also reported the burning late last night of three crosses in front of residences occupied by Negroes not far from the Johnson home.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The stage was at least partially set for the school segregation drama with only a slight hint of fireworks from Tennessee lawmakers. Five bills, designed to implement a "moderate" school segregation, were placed before the Legislature yesterday.

The bills, aimed at creating a voluntary pupil assignment system for the public schools, were introduced shortly after Gov. Clement went before a joint session and outlined his five proposals.

Close on the heels of the segregation bills came two others which the sponsoring Memphis delegation said were aimed at curbing the activities of the NAACP. One prohibits "lobbying" by groups of individuals opposing passage of racial legislation unless properly qualified; the other requires such groups to submit lists of their members, contributors, fees etc.

An unexploded bomb was found this morning under the home of William Jackson, Negro in the same section where Johnson lives. This one consisted of three sticks of dynamite in a copper pipe. Police said the fuse had fallen off.

Later a mass meeting of Negro resident to discuss the bus desegregation issue was postponed indefinitely. The meeting had been tentatively scheduled for tonight.

The postponement, a spokesman said, was agreed upon "in view of the earnest desire of Mobile colored citizens to avoid a hasty strategy to effect bus desegregation which would give the few persons here opposed to law and order an excuse to appeal to hatred and incite violence."

Atlanta Jails Negroes Riding Front Of Bus

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (AP)—Six Negro ministers who took seats in the white section of an Atlanta Transit System bus yesterday were arrested today on charges of violtating Georgia's segregation laws.

P. 2-A

Taken to the Fulton County jail, they quickly made bonds of $1,000 each, and their attorney, A. T. Walden, said the stage is set for a U.S. Supreme Court review of state statutes requiring racially separate seating on buses.

The Rev. W. H. Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist church and leader of the first organized attack on Georgia bus segregation, said now that the issue is in the courts, there will be no further efforts by his group for desegregated bus riding.

RIDE ATTEMPT

Arrested with Borders were the Revs. R. Joseph Johnson, H. Bussey, R. B. Shorts, R. H. Williams and A. Franklin Fisher.

The desegregated ride attempt by Borders and his team yesterday ended somewhat decisively when a transit system supervisor pulled the bus out of service as defective and sent it toward a garage.

Singing, praying and Bible reading, the Negroes rode the bus for a short distance and got off.

Borders and a group of about 50, principally ministers, were holding another meeting preparing for further desegregated bus riding attempts when they learned warrants had been issued for their arrest.

STATE LAWS

The issue was bought to a head by Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who instructed Police Chief Herbert Jenkins to take out the warrants. They were signed by Fulton Civil Court Judge J. Wilson Parker and specifically charged violating of the state segregation laws.

The ministers had planned to "march down to the courthouse."

However, the patrol wagon, in charge of Police Capt. J. L. Moseley and Negro detective Howard Baugh, arrived at the Wheat Street church while the group was still there and arrested all but Johnson, who reported to the county jail a short time later.

While the crowd milled around, the arrests were handled quietly with Walden identifying each of the men named in the warrants to Moseley. So many newsmen and photographers crowded into the wagon there was just room for the ministers, leading Borders to quip:

"There's no segregation on this bus."

STERN FACE

A large man whose somewhat stern face easily lights up with laughter, Borders also remarked to the crowd as he entered the patrol wagon:

"Anyone else out there who ought to be in jail, come on in."

Jim Crow Law Violations Charged—Blasts Rock Montgomery

(Picture on Page 12)

By The United Press

ATLANTA, Jan. 10. — Atlanta officials arrested Negro leaders Thursday for violating Jim Crow seating laws and bomb-rocked Montgomery, Ala., declared a state of emergency in the South's gravely worsening bus crisis.

Officials of Montgomery stopped all bus service, called in auxiliary police and warned parents, Negro and white, to get their children off the streets. Six dynamite blasts shook the city early Thursday.

Reward Is Offered

Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama offered a $2,000 reward for information leading to conviction of the terrorists.

A police patrol wagon picked up five Negro preachers at an Atlanta church before they could begin a mass march with others to the courthouse to post bond on charges of violating segregation laws.

A sixth preacher, whose wife was ill and who was not arrested, was named in warrants sworn by Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who said he was "bound to uphold state laws."

Laws Not Attacked

Georgia's segregation laws have not yet been attacked directly in the flurry of court actions that has seen the start of the first integrated bus riding in Southern history against a background of dynamite blasts and sniper shots from the dark.

The six charged were among a dozen Negro clergymen who made a brief "test run" in the traditional white section of an Atlanta bus Wednesday.

Those arrested were Rev. William Borders, leader of Atlanta integration forces; Rev. Roy Williams, Rev. R. P. Shorts, Rev. A. Franklin Fisher and Rev. H. Bussey. Rev. Joseph Johnson was named but was not picked up.

Tests Are Expected

The five ministers were taken to Fulton Tower, the old gray stone county jail, booked, fingerprinted and placed under $1,000 bail each. All five posted bail and were released in a matter of minutes.

Undaunted, the preachers said "this is exactly what we wanted" as they climbed into the patrol wagon.

"We won't need to ride the buses any more until this thing is resolved in the courts," said Rev. Borders, explaining that the arrests would clear the way for an immediate test of Georgia bus segregation laws.

ferred instead to state Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook. They conferred in private.

"The Klan is fully aware of the situation that exists," said Mr. Edwards, making a rare appearance at other than a Klan ritualistic session. "We realize it is the outcome of communist-trained agitators to stir up racial turmoil."

He said he hopes Georgia can dispose of its racial troubles "without bloodshed," but "the main thing is that the people of Georgia have assured me they are not going to have desegregation."

Six separate explosions caused heavy damage but no injuries in Montgomery before dawn. The targets were four Negro churches and the homes of two supporters of a year-long boycott of the segregated bus line before the United States Supreme Court struck down the Alabama racial barriers in intrastate transit.

Stop Order Given

At a tense meeting during the morning, the City Commission decided that "an emergency exists and that it is necessary for the life, health and property of the citizens of the city of Montgomery that bus service be temporarily stopped."

Mayor W. A. Gayle noted that 20 additional policemen now are being processed into the force and meanwhile Police Commissioner Clyde C. Sellers has called "his auxiliary policemen into action" to assist the regulars patroling the city.

"It is requested that parents of all teenage children, white and Negro, male and female, know the whereabouts of their children at all times and have them at home by midnight unless accompanied by a parent," the mayor said.

Shaken but still determined, the Negro community vowed to carry on its integration struggle "in the face of death."

"The issue now is no longer segregation or integration but mob rule over law and order," said Rev. Martin Luther King, who hastened to Montgomery from Atlanta when he heard of the new blasts.

King, the top leader of the Montgomery boycott, had joined other integration leaders in Atlanta for a meeting to discuss their common problems. He hoped to rejoin the parley later.

Another Comes Home

Another who came home to Montgomery was Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, whose home and church both were targets of the dynamite bombers. His wife and baby were at home but were not hurt by the blast.

"They may destroy our churches, they may destroy our homes, but there are two things they will never destroy," Abernathy said. "That is our faith in God and love for our fellow men and our desire for freedom."

Another blast damaged the home of the Rev. Robert Graetz, white Lutheran minister who has sympathized with the Negroes and whose house also was a dynamite target last August.

A second crudely rigged dynamite bomb was found on the Rev. Mr. Graetz' lawn Thursday morning but was dismantled before it could explode by Charles G. Stokes, 52, a neighbor who was on an Army demolition squad in World War II.

Governor Folsom made a personal survey of the bomb damage and said that "any group or groups of persons that will stoop to bomb the house of worship endangers the lives of every man, woman and child of this state. The people themselves, working together, can stamp out such anarchy as this.

Bombs At Mobile

The trouble already had spread to Mobile, at the southern end of Alabama, where J. C. Leflore, former local executive secretary of the NAACP now outlawed in the state, reported an attempt to bomb his home. Leflore called off a mass meeting scheduled for Thursday night to discuss integration of Mobile buses.

Another Negro, Walter Johnson, reported that dynamite damaged his home in a "fringe" neighborhood of Mobile Wednesday night.

In Tallahassee, Fla., Gov. Leroy Collins said he would order a resumption of city bus service when he had determined that buses could operate in an atmosphere "of harmony, and peace and good will."

BUS SEGREGATION TEST TO AWAIT INDICTMENTS

BY THADDEUS T. STOKES

The validity of Georgia's segregation law governing city buses is expected to be challenged by attorneys representing six local Negro Ministers who are charged with "violating the state segregation law."

The charges were made after the six ministers were arrested for riding in the front section of a local bus, Jan. 10.

Chief counsel for the defendants, S. S. Robinson, hastened to point out that the warrants issued for the arrest of the six ministers do not constitute a criminal case. He explained that they must first be indicted by the grand jury.

The Fulton Grand Jury is currently in session. If the charges are not considered by the January-February grand jury session, then it is expected to be considered at the March-April term.

AFTER INDICTMENTS

Once the grand jury returns an indictment then counsels for the defendants will know what defense is necessary said Robinson.

He said given the time "we will proceed into the Federal district court and request a declaratory judgement and injunction."

However, he pointed out that to invalidate the state's racial segregation law governing public buses, it would not be necessary to go into Federal court, because, he said the defendants' defensive pleadings would properly raise the invalidity of the state's segregation laws, since the United States Supreme Court ruled that bus segregation in Alabama is unlawful. That ruling is applicable to all states.

USE EVERY LAW

Robinson continued: "We will use every law available to us."

He explained, "the right of action in Federal court on part of these defendants has been crystallized.

The time for filing suit in Federal court will of necessity follow completion of the immediate matters of presently pending cases."

He named the pending cases as the income tax case brought against the local branch NAACP by the State Revenue Commission; and the Horace Ward-University of Georgia case.

Defense attorneys in this case, except R. E. Thomas, are the same attorneys who represented the defendants in the NAACP case, and the Ward case.

They are Attorneys Austin T. Walden, Mrs. Romae Turner Powell and Donald L. Hollowell.

The six defendants are the Reverends William Holmes Borders, pastor of Wheat Street Baptist Church and chairman of the newly organized Love, Law and Liberation Movement; R. S. Shorts, Presiding Elder of Williams-Atlanta District of the CME Church; R. W. Williams, pastor of Smith Chapel Baptist Church; A. Franklin Fisher, pastor of West Hunter Street Baptist Church; Howard Bussey, pastor of Perry Homes Baptist Church; and B. J. Johnson, pastor of Greater Mt. Calvary Baptist Church.

Tallahassee Police Chief Orders Halt To Violence Against Negroes

Advertiser 1-2-A

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 17 (AP)—Police Chief Frank Stoutamire declared angrily today that shooting and stoning of homes of Negro integration leaders has got to stop.

"I don't stand for that sort of thing," the veteran officer said after receiving reports that windows of two Negro homes were smashed by gunfire and a brick last night.

Jrn. 1-18-57

The two cases of violence were the latest in a series which erupted after Negroes halted a long bus boycott and started "riding integrated" on Christmas Eve.

"That's not my kind of law enforcement," Stoutamire declared.

I'm meeting my policemen shift by shift and telling them I expect them to do something about it. I'm going to tell them to find out who is doing it and bring them into court."

Stoutamire has said repeatedly he believed that vandalism aimed against leaders of the Negro Inter-Civic Council is the work of teen-

"I don't care who is doing it, whether it's my boy or your boy, it's got to stop," he said.

Hit by the latest acts of violence were the home of the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, and the car of Dr. M. C. Williams, secretary of the coun-

Montgomery, Ala.

The vandalism came during a meeting of the council. Steele told the meeting that "no group of Negroes could move freely in and out of white communities as long as youngsters have been moving in our community throwing rocks and shooting guns without being arrested."

Steel's home is next door to the church. Reporters attending the meeting heard no shots but singing and applause were loud and frequent and could have drowned the noise. Members of his family were not at home.

Windows of Steele's home have been shattered twice previously by bricks. He said a gun had been fired at his house Tuesday night but that he had not reported it.

The council said an attorney was studying the city's new bus seat assignment ordinance and that no new attempts to take any seat would be made until the attorney makes his report.

A council spokesman said the plan could result in "integration as well as segregation."

Since the plan was put into effect last Friday, Negroes have been observed riding in the front, in the middle and at the rear of buses. Apparently an effort is being made by drivers to space whites and Negroes on the buses.

The ordinance provides that drivers shall assign riders to numbered seats, and no mention is made of segregation. The segregation clause of the bus franchise was knocked out by the city commission as having "doubtful validity."

Governor Ends Bus Service Ban In Tallahassee

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 1-12-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 11 (AP) —Governor Leroy Collins today ordered Tallahassee bus service resumed as of 4 p.m. today.

The governor had suspended operations of buses Jan. 1 after incidents of violence followed a decision by Tallahassee Negroes to start "riding integrated."

He said the resumption of service will test "The good will prevailing among and between the people of both races and of the ability of the bus company to furnish a needed public service with due regard to every citizen."

Bus Seat Law Defied, 6 Held In Tallahassee

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 1-20-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 19. (AP)—Six university students—three white and three Negro—were arrested by Tallahassee police Saturday for refusing to take seats assigned them on a city bus.

File A

The arrests were the first under the new bus seat assignment ordinance adopted last week by the city commission as an outgrowth of a bus integration dispute here.

Police Capt. Wayne Todd said the three white students were from Florida State University and the three Negro students were from Florida A&M University. Todd was interviewing the six, one by one, and gave no immediate details.

THE ONLY STUDENT who was identified was L. D. Speed of Tallahassee. He is the son of Dan Speed, a leader of the Negro Inter-Civic Council which has spearheaded the bus integration movement.

The ordinance requires passengers to take numbered seats assigned them by the driver and provides they can be arrested if they refuse. Maximum penalties are 60 days in jail and a $500 fine.

Meantime, a leader of the Negro bus integration movement said it had not yet been determined "whether any pattern is being followed in assignment of seats that would violate our constitutional rights."

SIX MEN ARRESTED ON TALLAHASSEE BUS

Three Whites, Three Negroes Sit Together

ALL COLLEGE STUDENTS

By The United Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 19. —Police arrested three white and three Negro men sitting together on a bus Saturday and charged three of them with violating Tallahassee's new stopgap ordinance to save segregation.

Two Negroes and one white man, all college students, were charged with violating the ordinance providing that the bus driver shall assign seats on a basis of "weight, health and safety." They were released under $50 bond each.

No Charges Filed

One Negro and two whites were released without charge but ordered to appear in City Court Monday as material witnesses in the case.

Johnny Herndon, a student at Florida A&M University for Negroes and one of those charged, said, "We were all friends and we decided to sightsee." He said the bus on which they were arrested was the second one they had ridden on an integrated basis Saturday.

Besides Herndon, those booked were Joe Spagna, 25, of St. Petersburg, student at all-white Florida State University, and Leonard D. Speed, 24, A&M student and son of a prominent Negro integration leader.

Summoned as material witnesses were Jon Folsom, 24, of Miami, Florida State student; Jim Kennedy, 24, former State student now working for the State Road Department; and Harold N. Owens, 22, A&M student.

Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa, Florida attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represented the students. He told reporters the arrests might lead to a test of validity of the seating ordinance.

The youths were charged with a misdemeanor which could lead to a penalty of a $500 fine or 60 days in jail.

Not Challenged

Herndon said the youths sat "integrated" on the first bus without challenge.

He said the group met at Speed's grocery store to start their tour. The store is owned by Dan Speed, integration leader and father of Leonard.

Herndon said when the group got on the Park Avenue-Monroe Street bus, they sat separately at first. Later, he, Spagna and Speed got up and moved into seats with the other three.

"The bus driver told us to move into assigned seats. We refused and he offered us our money back. When we still would not leave, the driver drove to a filling station and called the police."

Herndon, a veteran of the Korean War, is married and has one daughter. He said he is originally from Lake Park, Ga. He is studying political science at A. and M. University and said he used to be a member of the NAACP "but have not paid my dues this year."

Police identified the bus driver who reported the mixed riding as Emory Elkins of Tallahassee.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—"Segregation is as dead as a door nail. And the sooner some of these folks around here realize it, the better it will be for everybody."

That was plain-spoken language of U.S. Judge Dozier Devane here late Thursday night as he issued a restraining order preventing the police department and city officials from interfereing with operation of city buses on an integrated basis.

Judge Devane's order was issued at the request of the Cities Transit Co., Inc.

Bus situation in a nutshell

MONTGOMERY — Except for two minor incidents, integration has proceeded smoothly since a Federal Court order killed city and state segregation laws. A sniper shot a woman passenger in her legs Friday.

BIRMINGHAM — Twenty-two members of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, arrested for ignoring racial signs on buses, go on trial here January 3. After the trial Arthur Shores, their attorney, has indicated he will ask the Federal Court for an order declaring city jim-crow laws null and void.

TALLAHASSEE—U.S. Judge Dozier Devane granted the bus company a temporary restraining order barring interference with operation on an integrated basis. The seven months boycott has been ended.

MIAMI — NAACP lawyers, Thursday, Jan. 3, will ask a Federal court to issue an injunction preventing the city and the bus company from enforcing segregated seating laws.

MOBILE — Segregation signs were removed from all city buses Wednesday after colored leaders had addressed letters to the city commission and the company asking that discriminatory seating be ended. The city commission ordered the signs replaced, but the bus company has failed to comply.

NASHVILLE — This city's Authority is expected to municipally-owned Transit integrate its vehicles this week after George Cate, legal counsel, ruled city and state segregation laws are no longer valid.

TAMPA—A NAACP letter to city and bus company officials warned that a drive to end bus seating segregation is impending in the Federal District Court.

BATON ROUGE, La.—Plans were mapped by ministers here to advise their members to ignore racial signs next week when they ride the buses. Police have hinted they would continue to enforce segregation.

WHEN THE company refused to return to the old policy, the city commission, after a seven-hour meeting, revoked its franchise.

The company's attorney said the commission's action was illegal in that the city had failed to give a 30-day notice as required in the contract.

In addition to asking for the restraining order, the company sought a ruling on the validity of Tallahassee and Florida segregated seating laws.

It also demanded $100,000 in damages from five city commissioners, the city manager and the police chief as individuals.

THE CITY in turn filed suit in the state Circuit Court asking that the bus company be compelled to operate again on a segregated basis or forfeit its franchise.

If the company is forced to resume segregation, it will again lose its colored passengers from whom in the past it has drawn the major share of its revenue.

This was made clear by the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter Civic Councio, which had sponsored the seven months' boycott.

"WE WILL either ride in peace or walk in protest," he said.

"We have walked for seven months, and if it becomes necessary for the sake of justice and brotherhood, we will walk for seven years."

The decision of the ICC to end the boycott came after a mass meeting attended by more than 200 persons Sunday night.

Riders Get Bus Numbers

Herald Jan. 1-13-57 Miami, Fla.

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — City buses, back on the streets after an 11-day "cooling off" period, operated under a new seat assignment plan Saturday that kept white riders up front and Negroes in the rear.

Bus drivers, given full responsibility for seating passengers so as to insure "the maximum health and safety of passengers to the end that life and limb will not be endangered by violence," doled out seat numbers to each passenger, giving white riders the front seats from one to 20 and Negroes the back seats from 20 up.

P. 9

Nobody challenged the new plan and Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said there have been no incidents.

C. L. Carter, manager of Cities Transit, Inc., said drivers are assigning space as required by the city ordinance "and they will continue to so assign space. We sincerely hope that all the people will help us in trying to work things out under the ordinance," he said, adding bus transportation is being operated for all the people "and we will exert every effort to give the best possible service."

The Negro Inter-Civic Council which is spearheading the desegregation campaign that led to temporary suspension of bus service New Year's day, scheduled a mass meeting Sunday night to decide its next step.

Many of the buses made their runs empty or with just one or two riders and a few drivers neglected to assign seat numbers on the early runs. But Negroes moved voluntarily to the rear. Gov. LeRoy Collins' order restoring service at 4 p.m. Friday caught everyone by surprise and numerous riders of both races were not aware of it as late as 2 p.m. Saturday.

Buses rolled out on the streets with seats numbered from back to front, odd numbers on the right side and even numbers on the left, the numbers are over the windows above the seats.

"Take seat 14," the driver of one bus told his first passenger, a young white girl. Several other white women and a boy boarded and got seat assignments, all numbered below 20 and all in the front.

The lone Negro rider was assigned seat 23 in the rear and took it with a scowl but no comment. The white passengers generally treated it as a joke, but took the assigned seat.

One white girl was so flustered, she forgot to pay her fare and the driver neglected to ask for it. She got up a few minutes later and dropped in her 15 cents.

Race Violence Must Stop, Collins Tells Tallahassee

Calls on City's Police To Act Sternly After Negro's Parsonage Is Shot Up

By BARBARA FRYE

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 17 (UP)—Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins today urged local authorities to take "immediate and effective" steps to forestall further violence in the Negro campaign to integrate buses in this state capital.

Collins, who suspended bus service for almost two weeks recently after a flare-up of racial troubles, issued the statement after shotgun blasts peppered the empty Baptist parsonage of the Rev. C. K. Steele, head of the integration drive.

Steele disclosed he, his wife and five children will "sleep out" at the homes of friends until the violence stops.

"INEXCUSABLE"

"This kind of lawlessness is inexcusable and it must be stopped," Collins said. "It is essentially a local problem and should be remedied by local action to protect persons and property and to prevent further embarrassment to this community and the state."

"I hope the city and county authorities realize the necessity for immediate and effective action."

In Montgomery, Ala., where bus desegregation was ordered by the Supreme Court, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthall said tonight that several suspects had been arrested in the dynamitings of Negro homes and churches but all were released for lack of evidence.

WHITES AND NEGROES

He said the suspects included both whites and Negroes.

In another facet of the integration problem, the Tennessee House of Representatives rushed through Gov. Frank Clement's segregation proposals. The measures have not yet been acted on by the Senate.

The five bills provide for a program of voluntary segregation, pupil assignment, transportation, transfer of students and joint use of schools.

ORDERS TO POLICE

Tallahassee Police Chief Frank Soutamire said he was going to stop rock-throwing and shooting here. "I'm meeting my policemen shift by shift and telling them I expect them to do something about it. I am going to tell them to find out who's doing it and bring them into court."

Both Stoutamire and Mayor John Humphress expressed a belief the violence is being committed by "high school kids," but Humphress added, "it is dangerous and must be stopped."

Collins restored bus service last Friday as a "test of good will" in Tallahassee.

Ministers Sue Transit System In Atlanta

Call P. 7 Jan. 6-21-57

ATLANTA. — (INS) — Two Atlanta ministers have filed an injunction in federal court against segregation of city buses.

In the first direct legal attack on public segregation in Atlanta, the Rev. Samuel W. Williams and the Rev. John T. Porter asked the court to issue an injunction to halt segregation.

The ministers charged their civil rights were violated when they were ordered to move to the rear.

The suit named as defendants the Atlanta Transit System, Inc., the Georgia Public Service Commission, Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield and Atlanta Chief of Police Herbert Jenkins.

It was filed by the chief counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Thurgood Marshall, another New York Attorney, Robert L. Carter, and five Atlanta Lawyers.

The Rev. Porter charged he was "humiliated" by the bus driver who ordered, "Boy, get up, move to the back and let these folks sit down.

The two accusers were not among the six ministers arrested and indicted for violating the segregation law earlier this year in Atlanta. Trial of the six, which was to take place in Fulton County Superior court, has never been set.

Bus Riders Assigned;

Newst Observer P. 3 Jan. 1-13-57 Raleigh, N.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 12 (AP) —Tallahassee bus drivers began assigning riders to seats today as the city's transit system moved back to normal after an 11-day shutdown caused by racial violence.

There were few riders and no incidents in the first experiences with a new seat assigning plan ordered into effect by the City Commission to reduce friction and preserve peace.

As passengers boarded buses drivers pointed to seats which they were to occupy—a requirement of the new operating rules.

The old segregated seating requirement set forth in the bus franchise agreement was tossed out by the commission last week as having "doubtful valididy." The new ordinance makes no reference to race.

In determining where passengers are to sit, the drivers are supposed to take into account such factors as weight distribution and the need for preventing violence.

In some instances Negroes were observed sitting near the front of a bus occupied by a white passenger, but with the small number of riders there was no opportunity for a real test.

Gov. Leroy Collins ordered a resumption of service yesterday. He said the action would test "the good will prevailing among and between the people of both races."

Riders who refuse to take the designated seats and decline to accept reimbursement of fare are subject to a fine or jail sentence.

12 Negroes on Bus Defy Segregation In Georgia

Courier-Journal Thurs. 1-10-57
Louisville, Ky. P. 6

From Wire Dispatches

Twelve Negro preachers yesterday defied Georgia segregation laws by sitting in the white section of an Atlanta bus.

Governor Marvin Griffin ordered his militia to stand by to guard against "riots, insurrection, and breaches of the peace."

The Governor announced that any such breaches of the peace "will not be tolerated in any part of Georgia."

Griffin attacked "out-of-state agitators" for threatening the peace and tranquillity of Atlanta in an obvious reference to the bus demonstration, the first bus integration move in Georgia.

Told To Alert Guard

Griffin said he has instructed the adjutant general, the officer in charge of the Georgia National Guard, "to alert his forces in a stand-by status subject to call on a moment's notice."

"Riots, insurrection, and breaches of the peace will not be tolerated in any part of Georgia whether emanating from out-of-state agitators brought in for the purpose of promoting racial strife and discord or whether such circumstances arrive from domestic sources," Griffin said.

Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield declined to comment on the Governor's stand-by order. He repeated an earlier statement that City police would, "if this issue is forced upon us, uphold the State law.

Sing and Pray

The ministers began the first phase of a so-called "love, law, and liberation" movement when they boarded a bus at a downtown stop and took seats in the front section normally reserved for whites.

While they sang, prayed, and read the Bible, the vehicle operated by the Atlanta Transit Company—pulled over to the curb and was reported out of service due to mechanical difficulty. The bus later drove off and the Negroes got off after riding six blocks.

The Rev. William Holmes Borders, pastor of Wheat Street Baptist Church and leader of the campaign against segregated bus seating, told some 1,000 cheering Negroes in an Atlanta church last night that "we are going to ride the buses like chariots in Heaven or we are going to push a wheel barrow in hell."

Ban Is Reinstated

In Montgomery, Ala., a city bus was struck by a shotgun blast from a passing car last night and Mayor W. A. Gayle immediately reinstated a ban on night bus operations.

Six Negroes Are Arrested In Atlanta

Courier-Journal Fri. 1-11-57
Louisville, Ky. P. 7

Stage Set for Review Of State Bus Laws

Atlanta, Jan. 10 (AP)—Six Negro ministers who took seats in the white section of an Atlanta Transit System bus yesterday were arrested today on charges of violating Georgia's segregation laws.

Taken to the Fulton Tower (County Jail), they quickly made bonds of $1,000 each and their attorney said the stage was set for a United States Supreme Court review of State statutes requiring racially separate seating on buses.

The Rev. W. H. Borders, pastor of Wheat Street Baptist Church and leader of the first organized attack on Georgia bus segregation, said that now the issue is in the courts, there will be no further efforts by his group for desegregated bus riding.

Arrested with Mr. Borders were the Rev. R. Joseph Johnson, the Rev. H. Bussey, the Rev. R. B. Shorts, the Rev. R. H. Williams and the Rev. A. Franklin Fisher.

The issue was brought to a head by Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who instructed Police Chief Herbert Jenkins to take out the warrants.

Negroes End Bus Push Here, Plan Court Test

Constitution Fri. 1-11-57
Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

BY BRUCE GALPHIN

Atlanta Negro ministers called off their "up-front" seating strategy Thursday after six were arrested for violating the state's trolley segregation laws.

The Rev. William Holmes Borders, leader of the effort, declared, "We've got one of the things we want."

"There's no need for us to ride any more right now," he told a noon gathering at Wheat Street Baptist Church. He said the arrests can serve as the basis for legal attack on bus segregation.

GUARD STILL ALERTED

The arrested preachers were later released on bond.

The Georgia National Guard, meanwhile, remained on the standby alert ordered Wednesday by Gov. Griffin. The governor was not available for comment on speculation that he now may countermand the alert order.

A challenge to the transit segregation laws developed from another direction Thursday.

ATTORNEY'S LETTER

Negro attorney A. T. Walden revealed he had asked Atlanta Transit Co. president, Robert L. Sommerville, in a letter dated Jan. 8, whether the company intended to maintain segregation "in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court."

Walden said Sommerville replied that the Georgia laws had never been declared unconstitutional.

Observers viewed Walden's letter as a preliminary move toward seeking a declaratory judgment against the segregation statutes in federal court.

It was believed the Negro attorney hopes a faster decision may be obtained in federal court than on an appeal of the arrest of the ministers.

The churchmen arrested Thursday were six who boarded an Amsterdam trolley Wednesday and took seats usually occupied by whites. They were:

The Rev. Mr. Borders and the Revs. R. Joseph Johnson, H. Bussey, R. B. Shorts, R. H. Williams and A. Franklin Fisher.

HARTSFIELD ORDERS

Constitution

Warrants were sworn out on the instance of Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins, who was instructed to take the action by Mayor Hartsfield. The writs specifically charged the ministers with breaking segregation laws. P. 12

About 50 ministers and other interested persons met at the Wheat Street church at noon. Borders said the original plan had been to repeat yesterday's tactics, gradually expanding operations until there would be two or three Negroes testing the law on every trolley in the city.

However, Borders said, "If we've got a warrant then we've got one of the things we want."

WARRANTS SERVED

At first the ministers, who had heard in advance of the warrants, decided to walk several blocks to the courthouse to surrender themselves. While they were making arrangements for bond, a patrol wagon arrived at the church.

The ministers walked voluntarily to the wagon. Warrants were served by Capt. J. L. Moseley and Howard Baugh, a Negro detective.

Jrn. 1-11-57

All but one of the churchmen were on hand to meet the wagon. The sixth, Johnson, was not at the Wheat Street church but voluntarily turned himself in early in the afternoon.

$1,000 BONDS SET

The six ministers were booked, jailed and then released on bonds of $1,000 each.

They scheduled another mass meeting at the Wheat Street church at 8 p.m. Thursday.

A closed session was held at Ebeneezer Baptist Church at 2 p.m. with talks slated by pro-integration leaders from other Southern cities.

In a statement at Fulton Tower, Borders declared that "the Montgomery movement and ours here are distinct." He apparently was replying to statements by Gov. Griffin and the Rev. W. T. Bodenhamer of the States Rights Council that "outside agitators" were responsible for Wednesday's integration test.

'OUTSIDE AGITATORS' HIT

By WILLIAM TUCKER
United Press Staff Correspondent

ATLANTA, Jan. 9. — Twelve hymn-singing Negro preachers defied Gov. Marvin Griffin in his own capital Wednesday by riding in the traditional white section of a bus. The Governor held hasty conferences with his aides and said "outside agitators" should be jailed.

But the Negroes called the peaceful six-block ride an example for members of their race in Atlanta to follow. They said the ministers will continue to ride the buses on a non-segregated basis "to uphold the Supreme Court decision" despite the local and state racial separation laws which Governor Griffin has sworn to defend.

New Orleans Next

A Negro group in New Orleans also made preliminary plans to start riding the buses and trolleys on a mixed basis, thus bringing virtually every Deep South metropolis into the issue. But New Orleans Mayor deLesseps Morrison turned down a formal request to integrate the transit line. The Negroes plan future court action.

The Negroes boarded the Atlanta bus at a busy downtown stop as leaders of integration movements in other Southern cities gathered here to discuss their common problems at a meeting starting Thursday.

Carrying their Bibles, they assembled at the bus stop and waited for about 30 minutes until a bus came along with sufficient room for them to take front seats without crowding white passengers.

Trolley Jumped Wire

As the chanting Negroes took forward seats and the bus started off its trolley jumped off the wire. While this was being fixed all but one of the white passengers got off. A bus line dispatcher ordered the bus route sign changed to "special" so no more passengers would get on. After six blocks, the Negroes alighted and the demonstration was over.

Rev. William Borders, a Baptist minister and leader of the local "love, law and liberation" movement, said the bus integration plan here was independent of those in such cities as Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla.

"We think there will be no trouble here," he said. "Atlanta is more liberal and a city of advanced thinking."

"We won't argue integration or segregation and we won't try to provoke any incidents by such actions as sitting by white women," Rev. Borders said.

In News Conference

Governor Griffin heard about the Negroes' action as he was conferring with Georgia editors at his mansion on the forthcoming legislative session. He said he had expected that groups of Negroes from Alabama and Florida would attempt to "provoke an incident" on the eve of the integration strategy meeting.

"We can do without hoodlums and goons in Georgia," the Governor said. "If I could catch anyone attempting to incite the people to violence I would do my best to stop it before lives are endangered."

Citing his powers under the Georgia riot laws, the Governor said he was charged with the responsibility of preventing trouble."

"I would call on these people to disperse and if they did not I would put them all in jail."

He disclosed that he had been up since daylight conferring with state safety officials and other aides in anticipation of such an incident.

Georgia Militia Stands By After Negro Bus Seat Row

Thurs. 1-10-57

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 9 (AP)—Gov. Marvin Griffin tonight put the state militia on a standby basis shortly after six Negro ministers launched on organization attack on segregated seating on Atlanta city buses.

Raleigh N.C.

Griffin told a hastily called news conference he was instructing the adjutant general of Georgia to hold his forces ready to put down any "riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace" at a moment's notice. P. 1

"I shall not hesitate to utilize the full powers of the governor as commander in chief of the armed forces of the state to the end that human life shall be preserved and properly protected from destruction," he said in a statement.

The governor said it had been called to his attention that the "public peace and domestic tranquility in the city of Atlanta area are now threatened by provocations arising from utterances and incitements of out-of-state agitators."

Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield declined to comment on the governor's standby order. He repeated an earlier statement that city police would "if this issue is forced upon us, uphold the state law.

News + Observer

"Our police do not go on buses unless they are asked to do so by the transit company. They have not yet been asked," he added. P. 2

Earlier today the ministers began the first phase of a so-called "love, law and liberation" movement when they boarded a bus at a downtown stop and took seats in the front section normally reserved for white people.

While they sang, prayed and read the Bible, the vehicle operated by the Atlanta Transit Co. —pulled over to the curb and reported out of service due to mechanical difficulty.

The Rev. William Holmes Borders, pastor of the White Street Baptist church and leader of the campaign against segregated bus seating, said "we will do something else." He said the next move will be planned at another mass meeting of Negroes at his church.

He indicated the campaign, emphasizing nonviolence, will continue until "they let us ride in peace," or the issue comes to a showdown.

Meanwhile, state and city officials commented cautiously on the movement in the Georgia capital, a stronghold of segregation. Georgia laws require white and Negro races to be seated separately on city buses.

State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said, "The initial responsibility for preserving the peace is vested in local authorities. The bus companies and their drivers also have some responsibility in keeping the peace on buses."

Cook added, "It all depends on the magnitude of the situation as to what the state may or may not do."

Borders reported the movement was "100 per cent local" and that "we have been having prayer meetings for about six weeks."

The decision to launch the desegregation move was made at such a meeting last night.

As planned, Borders and his group gathered at Atlanta's downtown Five Points and after passing up one bus as too crowded, boarded a trolley bus and took seats in the front section.

MORE MORE MORE MORE

A transit system supervisor walked over and ordered the driver:

"Let it sit there."

White passengers left the bus, and the supervisor, R. L. Wages, called a crew of mechanics who tinkered briefly with the vehicle and then drove it off, as the Negroes sang, prayed and read the Bible.

Borders said his group thought the bus was headed for a transit system parking lot and garage near the downtown section.

"But it passed the garage and turned left on Boulevard and I don't know where it was going," he said. "We pulled the cord and got off about a block after it turned."

R. L. Sommerville, president of the transit system, said: "It was a simple case of minor mechanical trouble. A repair crew went out and fixed the bus. It is rolling again now."

Borden said that in the desegregation effort, "there will be no unkind words, no blows passed, no arguments on racial matters. If one of us is struck, no Negro will come to his aid. If they put us in jail, we'll go. If they kill us, we'll die."

The Bus Issue Is With Atlanta

Daily World

The action Wednesday by a group of ministers in boarding the buses in challenge to the segregation pattern and the subsequent position taken by the City of Atlanta that it would enforce a state law requiring segregation on public buses, it seems the way has been cleared for a court ruling on the issue in this city and state.

Thurs. 1-10-57 P. 6

In the light of the Montgomery decision and several other Federal court decisions, and, especially one by a Federal Judge in Miami just a few days ago to the effect that laws requiring segregation were unenforceable, we would hope that Atlanta could gracefully maintain her good usages and offices by resolving this bus issue without the need for further litigation.

But, if official Atlanta takes the position that she is bound to uphold a state law requirement for segregation on the buses, the question is a legal one as far as Atlanta is concerned and we hope it will be settled in a court as soon as possible.

There have been no reports of an arrest, but is is believed that sufficient action has been taken by those defending segregation to provide a basis for a court declaratory judgement and thereby settle the controversy without a whole lot of fanfare or a long drawn out hassle to the chagrin of those who would seek to retain segregation.

Atlanta, Ga.

In any event, our city has a good name for race relations and we hope nothing will be done in the present situation to change this record. We consider Atlanta much farther advanced in race relations than some of the other cities where the buses have become a source of tension. So our city is expected to act accordingly in meeting the current issue here.

Atlanta Bus Immediately 'Out of Service'

Thurs. 1-10-57

ATLANTA, Jan. 9 (AP)— Gov. Marvin Griffin Wednesday night put the state militia on a standby basis shortly after six negro ministers launched an organized attack on segregated seating on Atlanta city buses.

New Orleans, La.

P. 3

Griffin told a hastily called news conference he was instructing the adjutant general of Georgia to hold his forces ready to put down any "riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace" at a moment's notice.

ATLANTA, Jan. 9 (AP)—Six Negro ministers, singing, praying and reading the Bible, Wednesday launched the first organized attack on the traditional racially separate seating pattern on Atlanta city busses.

Their initial attempt to take seats in the front section—normally reserved for white people—on an Atlanta transit system bus ended somewhat indecisively when the vehicle was immediately pulled out of service as mechanically defective.

But "we will do something else," said Rev. William Holmes Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist church and leader of the campaign against segregated bus seating.

'Love, Law, Liberation'

Borders said the next step in the "love, law and liberation movement will be planned at another mass meeting of Negroes at his church.

He indicated the campaign, emphasizing nonviolence, will continue until "they let us ride in peace," or the issue comes to a showdown.

Meanwhile, state and city officials commented cautiously on the movement in the Georgia capital, a stronghold of segregation. Georgia laws require white and Negro races to be seated separately on city busses.

State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said "the initial responsibility for preserving the peace is vested in local authorities. The bus companies and their drivers also have some responsibility in keeping the peace of busses."

Mayor Backs State Law

Cook added "it all depends on the magnitude of the situation as to what the state may or may not do."

While expressing hope that Atlanta's record for good race relations will be preserved, Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield declared:

"If this issue is forced upon us, the city must in a decent way uphold the state law."

Word of the bus desegregation move came to Gov. Marvin Griffin as he was briefing a group of Georgia daily newspaper editors on the state's financial affairs. The governor told the editors he had information the attempt might be made and that "we are trying to handle our problems as judiciously as possible."

He also said he would invoke the state's police powers against anyone "caught inciting people to riot or violence."

Atlanta Faces Bus Intergration Move Calmly

Advertiser

ATLANTA, Jan. 19 (AP)—Atlanta is taking calmly the bus integration attempt begun 10 days ago by the city's Negro leaders.

A survey by the Associated Press shows an evident lack of reaction to the court test precipitated Jan. 9 when six singing, scripture-quoting Negro ministers took seats in the white section of an Atlanta Transit Co. bus.

They have been indicted for violating Georgia's segregation laws.

Transit President R. L. Sommerville, who admits he is in the middle on the challenge to tradition, summed up his company's feelings to the absence of reaction: Mon. 1-21-57

"It's wonderful."

'HOPEFUL, HELPFUL THING'

"The lack of reaction is the most hopeful and helpful thing in this whole situation," he said. "Atlanta is maintaining its wonderful tradition in race relations.

"We are thankful that there has been no inflammatory action by extremists on either side," he added. "It is our great hope to keep tempers on a level keel."

The first organized attack on Georgia's bus segregation laws caused hardly a ripple among the state's legislators who have just completed the opening week of the 1957 session.

There has been no official comment from the lawmakers and very little recognition of the problem. Montgomery, Ala.

One unidentified solon, on a trolley ride from the capitol to the downtown area, was overheard suggesting in a lighter vein, "Why don't we just go ahead and let the Negroes sit in the front of the buses and the white people in the back?"

Meanwhile, four bills were introduced in the opening days of the general assembly strengthening the governor's hand in dealing with school integration attempts.

GUARD ON STANDBY

Gov. Marvin Griffin, who put the National Guard on a standby basis after the Atlanta bus incident to put down "any riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace," said a week later that he had no specific plan to counter the desegregation effort.

"I'm going to maintain order in Georgia. Whoever is responsible for the disorder is going to answer for it," he declared. He added that "race relations are excellent" in the state.

Atlanta's segregated seating came under fire when a team of ministers led by the Rev. William Holmes Borders boarded a trolley bus in the downtown area and took seats in the front section normally reserved for white patrons under the state's laws. They refused to take back seats when ordered to do so.

A supervisor immediately pulled the bus out of service as mechanically defective and sent it to a garage with the Negroes riding it part of the way.

The next day all six were arrested and released on bond. A grand jury subsequently indicted them after an hour-long consideration. The prosecutor said he will bring them to trial in the regular course of procedure.

LOVE, LAW, LIBERATION

Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist Church, one of the largest Negro churches in the city, called the campaign the "love, law and liberation movement."

The campaign, except for community prayer meetings every Tuesday night, has been halted pending legal moves.

"The case is in the hands of the lawyers and the courts and we are awaiting the outcome," Borders said. In the meantime, the Negroes have continued to ride on a segregated basis without incident.

A. T. Walden, Negro attorney for the movement, said information from their sources indicates the rank and file of whites are unconcerned "or at least not upset" by the effort.

"Our feeling is that the whites, at least the better informed whites, feel that bus integration is inevitable," he said.

Atlanta police officials reported a complete lack of reaction or incidents in connection with the case

GET FEW LETTERS

The Atlanta Journal reported the bus incident has resulted in about five letters a day to its "letters to the editor" department. About one in ten is in favor of the integration move, the others for segregated buses.

The morning Atlanta Constitution, has received "about a dozen" letters on the subject since the incident, with sentiment "about half and half."

John Pennington, a Journal reporter assigned to the story, observed that people are interested in it "But I've found no particular optimism on the part of the Negroes and no fear or hysteria on the part of the whites."

"A few of the 'old heads' premost people I've talked to have dicted there'll be trouble but shown little or no reaction," he declared.

Samuel Adams, reporter for the Atlanta Daily World, a Negro newspaper, said he found no bitterness among the Negro people.

"There is strong feeling to abide by the law and to keep as much peace as possible," he said, "But at the same time to push ahead for their goal."

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

He said white people he interviewed generally were indifferent to the situation, many regarding it as "much ado about nothing."

Twenty-one Southern cities have desegregated their buses without difficulty, according to a survey by the Southern Regional Council. The Council, an interracial group devoted to "equal opportunity for all," said the end of compulsory segregation came in each case without court action, usually by a policy change of the transit company. The changes evoked no incidents or organized protests, it said.

Cities listed were Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith and Hot Springs, Ark.; Charlotte, Greensboro, Durham and Winston Salem, N.C.; Knoxville, Tenn.; San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Dallas, Tex.; and Newport News, Richmond, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg and Roanoke Va.

The council said it learned that in most cities checked passengers continued to follow the customary pattern of separate seating.

In contrast, the council said, in Montgomery, Birmingham and Tallahassee "segregated seating has been met by both official resistance and sporadic violence by lawless elements."

Arrest Of Six Ministers Sets Stage For New Court Tests On Segregation

Call Fri. 1-18-57 Kansas City Mo. P. 1

ATLANTA, Ga.—(ANP) — With the arrest of six bus riding Negro ministers here Thursday, the stage was set for a United States Supreme Court test of Georgia's segregation laws.

Taken to Fulton county jail where they posted $1,000 bond each were the Rev. W. H. Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist church and leader of the organized protest; the Rev. R. Joseph Johnson, the Rev. H. Bussey, the Rev. R. B. Shorts, the Rev. R. H. Wililams and the Rev. A. Franklin Fisher.

Atty. A. T. Walden, their attorney, announced immediately that his clients will carry their fight for desegregation of Atlanta and Georgia buses to "the highest court in the land."

The crusade was launched by the ministers on Wednesday. Their first move was to board a bus at a downtown Atlanta stop and take seats in the front section. which traditionally is reserved for white passengers.

The bus, operated by the Atlanta transit company, pulled over to the curb after going about six blocks. The driver declared it out of service "because of mechanical difficulty."

Rev. Borders, who labelled the to desegregate the buses now that a test has been made.

The six ministers and about 50 of their colleagues were holding a meeting when they received campaign as a "law, love and liberation movement," said there will be no further efforts by his group word that warrants had been issued for their arrest.

The issue was brought to a head when William B. Hartsfield, mayor of Atlanta, ordered Police Chief Herbert Jenkins to take out the warrants.

Judge J. Wilson Parker of Fulton County Civil Court signed the warrants, which specifically charged the clergymen with violating the state segregation laws.

Later in the day, the ministers were taken to a large room of the county jail where they were fingerprinted and posted bonds.

The cases must be presented to the Fulton county grand jury and if presentments are returned, will start on their way to the federal courts.

The demonstration led Gov. Marvin Griffin to put the Georgia militia on a stand-by notice for fear of "riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace."

In a prepared statement, Griffin said: "I shall not hestitate to utilize the full powers of the governor as commander in chief of the armed forces of the state to the end that human life shall be preserved and property protected from destruction . . ."

He added that "the public peace and domestic tranquility in the city of Atlanta area are now threatened by provocations arising from utterances and incitements by out-of-state agitators."

The arrest of the Atlanta ministers who deliberately occupied the forbidden front seats of a bus to establish a test case, ended plans of the group to fan out over the city until Negroes were riding every line without regard to long-standing local custom.

The Rev. William H. Borders said the arrests, on warrants ordered by Atlanta Mayor William Hartsfield, moved the matter of challenging legality of the Georgia law from the streets into the courts. Police Chief Herbert Jenkins asked for a grand jury investigation.

"We've got a legal fight, and that's what we were after," Borders said from an open jail cell Thursday afternoon as he waited to be fingerprinted.

The Rev. Mr. Borders left for Washington Saturday after calling off a bus integration plan " that would have eventually seen two or three Negroes on the front of every bus in Atlanta."

However Borders said, "There's no sense going on riding buses now, until this thing is settled in the courts."

Borders and five other Negro ministers were arrested when they occupied front seats on a city bus Wednesday in violation of state segregation laws.

Thursday night Borders conducted the third Negro mass meeting in three days at his church, and told an estimated 2,000 followers that his arrest made eventual integration almost a certainty.

"We can't possibly lose this case if it's brought before the Supreme court," he said, "because the court could not rule that segregation is unlawful in Alabama and lawful in Atlanta or Georgia."

He scheduled the next mass meeting for his return from the nation's capital Tuesday, January 15, and urged Negroes not to attempt bus mixing or "even discuss it on the street corners," until the courts have made a decision.

DE-SEGREGATED BUSES AT ANY COST. — Dr. William Holmes Borders (at mike), pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist church in Atlanta, is shown telling a crowd of about 1,200 persons that the campaign against segregated bus seating in Atlanta would "go forward at whatever the cost." Jailed Atlanta Leader Keeps Sense Of Humor

By ROBERT SCHOENHOLT

ATLANTA, Ga. (INS)—A stocky 51-year-old minister—who took his trip to jail in a jovial manner—is content to sit back now and let the courts handle a situation which he had thought earlier was fraught with personal danger.

William Holmes Borders, pastor of the largest Negro church in the South, described his move to purposely violate the law — the Georgia segregation law — as an "open and above board" attempt to get a court test of the 67-year-old statute.

He was calm and triumphant through the routine of fingerprinting after his arrest and release on $1,000 bond. He insisted the Atlanta movement was "entirely independent" of similar actions in other cities across the South.

"We had things planned for six weeks," the Rev. Mr. Borders said, "before I ever heard of a south-wide meeting of leaders to plan an end to segregation on buses."

Borders, first of five ministers to board the police department paddy wagon Thursday, Jan. 10, never for a moment lost his smile, or his sense of humor.

He seemed relieved that he had been arrested. The night before he had said he would either "ride the buses, or ride a chariot in heaven, or push a wheelbarrow in hell."

The minister, a former philosophy teacher born in Macon, Ga., who attended Morehouse college in Atlanta before moving to Evanston, Ill., said he felt the Atlanta Segregation law test would not result in violence, such as marked de-segregation efforts at Montgomery, Ala.

Atlanta people are just not that kind of people," he said.

Borders, who attended Garrett Biblical Institute in Evanston, and later obtained his master's degree from Northwestern, had prepared his test-case carefully. He said he was confident the resulting court proceedings would bring a ruling outlawing bus segregation in the largest city in the southeast.

And, he said, he believes the transition would be accomplished peacefully. He as sure Atlanta Negroes would provoke no incidents.

Borders, who returned to his native Georgia 19 years ago after seven years as pastor of the Second Baptist church in Evanston, had urged his followers to "take anything, and be ready not to give it back."

The minister, still smiling cheerfully, concluded: "The things we can do—we can be kind, and even humorous."

Atlanta Mayor Is Right Concerning Race Baiting

In any argument, he who gets angry first is very likely to lose.

Members of 30 civic, religious and fraternal groups in Mobile, Ala., seem to have that truth foremost in mind.

These groups have issued a joint statement condemning racial violence and urging full enforcement of ordinances outlawing violence.

The joint statement in Mobile came after the fact. Mobile had suffered from a campaign of violence. More trouble seemed imminent.

In Atlanta where race relations have continued good, Mayor William B. Hartsfield has made a timely appeal to keep them that way.

The mayor urges the application of sound common sense and inherent decency in race relations.

He declared that demagoguery—that is, appeal to passion—and its twin brother, violence, have no place in a city of honor and decency.

He said by implication that there is no place for such an appeal in the coming mayoralty campaign in Atlanta.

Not all of us agree with Mayor Hartsfield as to the timing of that campaign, but surely every thinking citizen can agree as to the plane on which it should be pitched.

In any community anywhere, there is an element whose emotions never arise above sadism, lust and hate. This group is neither rational nor principled.

He who gives it encouragement becomes an accomplice to violence and murder.

Bus Effort Called 'Foot In The Door'

No law nor no custom that only a minority wants in our country will ever stand. What difference does it make as to which end of a bus we ride in as long as it's transportation or which school we go to if we have good teachers and schools. That is only an excuse to get a foot into the door. Let me ask any crusader for integration if they would be willing for their daughter or son to marry into the colored race. I think their answer would be "No." And that's the final answer as sure as water flows down hill.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "We are very gratified at the interest our people showed in Tuesday's election," one of this city's leading businessmen told the AFRO this week.

This leader, Daniel Speed, was talking about the first effort made here in recent history to elect a colored person to a post in the city's government.

The candidate, the Rev. King Solomon Dupont, was defeated by a three to one margin in a race that saw 72.6 per cent of the registered voters march to the polls, by Davis Atkinson, white.

THE VOTING was quiet and without incidents during the 12 hours the polls were open in this city which has been marked with racial flareups since a move to desegregate the buses was begun last May.

During the election campaign, the Rev. Mr. Dupont's home was bombed, but the courageous minister refused to pull out of the race.

One of the leaders of the Inter - Civic Council, which sparked the bus boycott movement, the Rev. Mr. Dupont's campaign was led by J. O. Mobberly, president of the State Colored Businessmen's Association.

SOME 2,405 colored persons voted for the Rev. Mr. Dupont, plus 123 white citizens. Atkinson received a total of 6,804 votes.

Mr. Speed told the AFRO that 87 per cent of the colored registered voters turned out to vote for their candidate.

There are some 15,000 colored citizens among the 50,000 population of Tallahassee.

"The election was very encouraging," Mr. Speed said, "and we're going to continue our efforts to get colored citizens registered and are going to run someone for office in every future election."

3 Students Jailed, Fined For Changing Bus Seats

Herald Tribune P. 5 New York

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Mar. 4 (AP).—Municipal Judge John Rudd today ordered three university students to serve a sixty-day jail sentence and pay a $500 fine for violating Tallahassee's bus seat assignment ordinance.

Sun 3-5-57

The sentence was the maximum provided in the ordinance which requires bus drivers to seat riders in numbered seats on the basis of weight distribution health factors and other considerations.

The students' Negro attorney, Francisco Rodriguez, of Tampa, announced an appeal would be taken to Circuit Court.

Those sentenced were Joseph Spagna, twenty - five - year - old white student at Florida State University, and Leonard D. Speed and Johnny Herndon, students at Florida A. and M. University for Negroes.

Judge Rudd handed down the sentences after overruling a motion for a new trial.

In convicting the students last week, Judge Rudd overruled their claim that the ordinance was unconstitutional. Mr. Rodriguez labeled it a mere "subterfuge to perpetrate the un-American practice of segregation."

Messrs. Herndon and Speed have filed suit in Federal District Court challenging constitutionality of the bus-seatings ordinance on grounds it violates their constitutional rights of equal protection under the law.

Following the Municipal Court convictions, Mr. Rodriguez petitioned Federal Judge Dozier Devane to make the city court proceedings a part of the Federal case and to rule immediately on the constitutionality question. No hearing has been set yet on the new motion.

Federal Judge Allows Trial To Procede In Tallahassee

Judge Devane said he was barred by Federal law from exercising jurisdiction over a municipal court.

He set a hearing for Feb. 12 on a motion by the city of Tallahassee and Cities Transit, Inc., to dismiss the suit in which the Negroes also are asking to prevent further enforcement of the ordinance on grounds it violates their Constitutional rights.

No date has been set yet for the municipal court hearing in the case of Johnny Herndon and Leonard D. Speed, students at Florida A. & M. University here.

The students were arrested Jan. 19 on charges of refusing to take seats assigned them by the driver when they were arrested with a white student from Florida State University.

Negro Stores Stoned, Shot In Tallahassee

Gov. LeRoy Collins, when advised of the latest stonings, said the attacks "appear to be local enforcement problems for city police."

He said apparently there was no serious threat to any of the people involved, and that he was not contemplating another suspension of bus service, or any other action.

Speed is chairman of the "ride integrated" campaign of the Inter Civic Council.

George Dupont, owner of the meat market, is a brother of the Rev. K. S. Dupont, vice president of the council and a candidate for city commissioner in next month's municipal election.

Police said one of the bricks had tied to it an obscene note addressed to the Rev. Dupont. The note warned him to withdraw from the city commission race.

The stonings were the latest in a series of incidents since Negro leaders on Christmas Eve called off a seven-month boycott of buses and announced Negroes would resume "riding integrated."

The home of Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter Civic Council, has been stoned twice, another Negro store has been blasted by shotgun fire, and a cross has been burned on the lawn of Steele's church.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Florida Gov. Leroy Collins remained unavailable for comment Friday night on the bus crisis in his state, but an administrative assistant, who said he talked with the Governor and was authorized to express the Governor's "known views" on the question, said that "no governor in Florida has ever said what he (Collins) will say in his inaugural address Tuesday."

P. 1

The Governor's assistant, John Perry, indicated that the 47-year-old Democratic Governor would take the people by surprise when he discusses the inflamed racial issue in Tuesday's address at the capitol here.

* * *

"HE WANTS to do something quite constructive in the inaugural address," Mr. Perry said, adding that for that reason, the Governor "is reluctant to discuss the issue at this time."

In view of Federal District Judge Emett Choate's recent ruling in the test case in Miami, it seems likely that the Tallahassee-born Governor will ask the people of his state to face the inevitable, though painful, change to integrated seating on buses and do so without further violence.

Judge Choate ruled on Thursday that Florida and Miami bus segregation laws are unconstitutional.

In his oral opinion, he said, "I have no hesitation in saying that these (bus) segregation laws are unconstitutional and unenforceable."

gomery bus case.

Governor Collins halted the bus operation about 6 p.m. New Year's day after the homes of four colored families had been stoned and a grocery store fired upon.

THE REV. C. K. STEELE, president of the Inter-civic Council, and whose parsonage home was bombarded with rocks about 3 a.m. Jan. 1, said that "everything is pretty much at a standstill" until the buses are returned to operation.

In the interim, he said, "about the only thing we can do is capitalize on the situation by preparing the people to return to riding the buses orderly and without violence."

To do this, Mr. Steele said that his group is "giving out instructions on how to avoid violence by being courteous, kind, not going to the aid of someone in trouble, and avoiding unnecessary conversation."

* * *

"BUT THEY are also instructed not sit in the back of the buses," he said.

Mr. Steele said that integration on the buses was "going smoothly" until "radio station men started on-the-spot reporting of our riding."

He said that the radio station's reporting of the incidents "inflamed the feelings of pro-segregationists," moving them to violence.

Charles L. Carter, manager of the local transit company, gave "no comment" to all questions pertaining to his suit for $100,000 filed against the city of Tallahassee for "inconvenience and loss of money" suffered when he and nine of his drivers were arrested last week.

* * *

THE ARRESTS followed Mr. Carter's refusal to relinquish the bus company's franchise as demanded by the city.

The city demanded that the franchise be revoked when the bus company refused to enforce segregation following the legal integration of buses in Montgomery, Ala.

In between his "no comment" answers, Mr. Carter volunteered the opinion that "the free-lance carpet-baggers" are to blame for the trouble in Tallahassee.

He said that there probably would have been no trouble in Tallahassee if newsmen (mostly those paid by space rates, he said) had not attempted to forecast trouble "to make an extra dollar."

HE SAID that he "went along" with the governor's suspension of bus service because it was done to protect peace.

Mr. Carter's sympathy with the Governor's position is understandable, if not expected, since the bus company's lawyer, Charles Ausley, is a law partner to Attorney (Gov.) Collins.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—The decision of Federal Judge Emmett C. Choate in Miami striking down down the Florida segregation laws will have no direct effect on the Tallahassee bus situation according to Gov. LeRoy Collins.

The governor had ordered the buses in Tallahassee to stop operating after the homes of Negroes were stoned, including that of the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the campaign to integrate bus seating in the state capital.

Governor Collins stated that Judge Choates' decision "doesn't have any immediate or direct effect on the situation at Tallahassee.

"It may have some effect on the attitudes of the people and in that sense it will affect the local situation," the Governor stated.

HE SAID HE WANTED the buses in Tallahassee to resume operating "as soon as possible.

"As soon as I feel the attitude of the people will justify resuming the bus service, I will so order. And that includes the attitude of both the white and the Negro people."

When announcing that he had declared an emergency in Tallahassee, Governor Collins said:

"The reality of the situation is that a great majority of the citizens of Tallahassee, both white and Negro, are not deeply concerned with the issue at hand. Furthermore they are peaceful and law abiding. They are willing to abide by the law, whatever that may be, and this has not been specifically determined here."

Governor Collins obviously does not admit that the law has been specifically determined although the Federal Court had consistently upheld the Supreme Court decision.

Trial Of Students Postpone

White and Colored Collegians Defy Segregation Law

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.— (INS) — Tallahassee's unique "assigned bus seating" ordinance remains in effect this week with the constitutionality trial of the new law postponed indefinitely.

The trial was postponed "indefintely" Monday on the request of an attorney for the city who said he was not prepared.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.— (INS) — Five college students, and a Florida state employee were arrested by Tallahassee police Saturday afternoon for not taking assigned seats on a city bus.

The six, three Negroes from Florida A. & M university, a Negro college, a white state department worker, and two white students who told police they were from Florida State university, were arrested when they sat together, refusing to obey the city's unique bus seating ordinance.

They told police they met on the Florida A. & M. campus and had come to the city together on a "sight seeing" tour. They said they would not sit where the driver placed them.

Tallahassee, following federal court decisions declaring bus segregation out in other cities, now operates under an "assigned seating" plan whereby the bus driver is given the lawful right to assign seats to bus passengers.

The Negroes arrested were Leonard D. Speed, son of Dan Speed, chairman of the Negro "Ride the Bus" campaign in Tallahassee; John Herndon, and Harold Owens of Tampa, also said to be a Florida A. & M. student.

The arrested whites were Jon Folsom, Miami, Joe Spagno of St. Petersburg, both university students, and Jim Kennedy, a clerk at the State road department.

An attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Francisco Rodriguez, of Tampa, was at the police station shortly after the incident. He said the arrests were definitely not set-up to create a "test case" against the new bus seating arrangement.

Leaders of the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council, a pro-integration organization, were also at the station following the arrests, but said they had no hand in the day's events.

The six prisoners were questioned for more than two hours after their arrest at a downtown bus stop.

Herndon, who said he was from Lake Park, Ga., and was a Korean war veteran, said the group met on campus this morning and just decided to go sight seeing.

He said they rode a bus from the campus into town, transferred to another bus, and were sitting together when the bus driver told them to split up. When they refused, he said, the bus driver called the police.

Equal Seating on Bus Asked

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Dec 11 (AP)—A Negro delegation asked the city council Tuesday to begin a first come, first served policy on seating in city owned buses. The council took no action.

Councilmen will have a special meeting later to consider the request that segregated seating be ended on city buses.

The Negro citizens co-operative committee, led by the Rev. Enoch E. Davis, a Negro Baptist minister, asked the city to remove signs requiring that Negroes must seat from the rear.

The delegation also asked that bus operators not interefere with bus seating and the the city's civil service rolls be opened to include Negro bus drivers.

Also asked was an improvement program, aided by contributions from Negroes, in Campbell park for Negroes. The group asked further for improved police protection and employment of more Negro policemen.

Councilmen appeared sympathetic to the park improvement request, but gave no hint on how they felt about bus seating.

Bus-Seat Assignment Law Upheld, Florida Negroes' Jail Terms Affirmed

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Nov 15 (AP)—Circuit Judge W. May Walker today upheld constitutionality of Tallahassee's bus-seating assignment ordinance.

He took the action in affirming fines and jail sentences handed three Negro students for violating the ordinance.

The students were Leonard D. Speed and Johnny Herndon, who attended Florida A. and M. University for Negroes, and Joseph Spagna of St. Petersburg who attended Florida State University.

Municipal Judge John Rudd adjudged the three guilty of violating the ordinance last Feb. 27 after overruling their claims the ordinance was unconstitutional on grounds it was a subterfuge to perpetuate segregation.

The three students were sentenced to 60 days in jail and fined $500 each.

Judge Walker made no comment in upholding the sentences.

The ordinance requires bus drivers for the Cities Transit Co. to assign riders to seats on the basis of health factors, weight distribution and other considerations.

City Solicitor Edward J. Hill said the city had a legal right to set up a seat numbering arrangement for assignment of passengers.

The ordinance was enacted after the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council, Inc., a Negro integrationist group, began riding buses integrated.

The council called off a seven-month bus boycott last December to start its integrated riding.

Pending a court ruling on the validity of the ordinance, Tallahassee Negroes have made no further efforts to ride integrated.

Negro leaders adopted a cautious new approach in U.S. District Court and withdrew a motion that Judge Emett C. Choate decide the case summarily — without trial.

Miami

Withdrawal of the motion means the case brought by four Negro bus riders will be set for trial at docket soundings in April and June.

Sat. 2-2-57

Court officials said the case coming up numerically probably would be set in June for trial during the summer.

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney for the Negroes, said he withdrew his motion in compliance with a remark by Judge Choate in another case.

The judge said, in dismissing a summary judgment motion brought in the Miami Springs golf course integration case: "These segregation cases are serious matters to everyone. By their nature it is better to have full hearing and let everyone produce his own evidence."

Graves said he felt Judge Choate's remarks applied to all integration cases. A hearing set for Monday in the bus case was canceled.

Graves' action came despite the fact that Judge Choate already has orally declared state and city bus segregation laws unconstitutional and that he won't hesitate to strike them down.

The new tack will not give Judge Choate the chance to put his oral ruling into an immediate formal order.

Judge Choate dismissed Miami Transit Co. as a defendant in the case and let the City of Miami answer the Negro petition. But he said the answer would not change his mind.

The city did file an answer and Graves moved for immediate judgment, contending that the answer left no issue of fact.

If City Commissioners appeal Judge Choate's eventual decision, integration of the buses would be delayed six months after the trial, while the 5th Circuit Court, New Orleans, processes the appeal.

Fla. groups at odds on bus ruling

Sat. 2-2-57

Baltimore, Md.

MIAMI, Fla.—A heated situation among colored leaders was brewing here last week as two factions were at odds over the recent bus integration ruling handed down by Federal Judge Emett C. Choate.

Leaders split into two groups, one being the "Liberals" who are pressing for immediate bus integration in light of Judge Choate's ruling that segregation on state buses is illegal and the other group being the "conservatives," who are willing to let desegregation of buses come by easy stages.

The "conservative" faction led by Father John E. Culmer, rector of St. Agnes Episcopal Church, are alleged to be strong supporters of anti-colored Democratic Sen. George A. Smathers of Florida.

LAST WEEK, the "conservative" group met with City Manager E. A. Evans and appealed to the city to accept the Federal order desegregating buses without further delay in the interest of preventing violence.

Father Culmer said: "Miami is ready for this thing. Any delay would give the lawless element time to organize." The group asked Evans to lend assistance in integrating Miami's buses at the earliest possible moment.

Evans said the decision would be up to the City Commission after Judge Choate's final decision is made. Judge Choate already has said he will hand down a final and official order declaring the city's bus segregation laws unconstitutional. But he allowed the city an opportunity to file an answer to the suit brought about by four colored bus riders.

The judge has set Feb. 4 as the date for hearing a motion for immediate decision on the suit.

LIBERAL FACTIONS want immediate desegregation of buses. This faction is headed by the Rev. Theodore Gibson, president of the Miami NAA and also an Episcopal minister.

Meanwhile, the Miami City Commission has promised to meet with all factions before deciding whether to carry its fight for bus segregation to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Miami Negroes Shun Front Seats in Buses

World-Telegram & Sun P.11

New York

By the United Press.

Negro leaders in Miami advised members of their race to sit where they please on city buses today but thousands of Negro riders took their usual places in the rear.

Sat. 2-16-57

City attorneys concede the local bus segregation law is unconstitutional and a federal judge has ruled it illegal. But the city has asked dismissal of the ruling on a technical ground.

Bus drivers were instructed to ask Negroes to move to the rear of buses as required under the existing law.

Meanwhile, racially integrated buses started running again in Montgomery, Ala., after a suspension of nearly a week in the wake of an outburst of violence.

The Miami Council of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People last night issued a statement saying Negroes now have a legal right to board Miami buses as equals of whites.

Nothing to Violate, Says NAACP Man

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney for the NAACP in Miami, said Saturday that he doubted that the City of Miami would ever arrest Negroes for sitting wherever they choose on city buses.

"They may arrest them for disorderly conduct or other charges of that sort but they won't try to enforce a defunct segregation ordinance," Graves said.

He added that newspaper reports calling Federal Judge Emett Choate's ruling against municipal bus segregation laws 'informal' were erroneous.

"Choate's decision was a formal written opinion of the court," Graves said. "The city has time to appeal it, of course, but it is still a formal ruling."

Graves made his statement while commenting on the disorderly conduct case brought by Laura Beckton, a Negro, against a city bus driver.

The bus driver, J. H. Mehaffey, was found innocent Friday by City Court Judge Mitchell Goldman.

"The segregation issue never came up," Graves said. "The case was ruled entirely on the basis of disorderly conduct."

Passenger Plans To Bring Suit Against Bus Driver

Daily World Wed. 4-17-57 Atlanta, Ga.

MIAMI, — (INS) — A 20-year-old man, who allegedly was struck in the face with a money changea when he failed to heed a Miami bus driver's orders to move to the rear of the vehicle, said Tuesday he is hiring an NAACP Attorney to represent him in court.

Charles Nesbitt, who swore out an assault and battery warrant against 47-year-old bus driver Elmer Post late Monday, said he has hired G. E. Graves, Jr., an Attorney in numerous integration suits brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Post told police the man had made several trips on his coach recently and sat directly behind the operator. Monday, several white occupants of the bus complained, Post said, but Nesbitt refused to take a seat in the rear of the vehicle.

Nesbitt, who was treated at a hospital for a cut forehead, said he was struck with a coin changer when he refused to follow the bus driver's order.

Says Driver Attacked Him

Negro's Face Gashed In Bus Seating Fight

Herald 9-2-B Tues. 4-16-57 Miami, Fla.

A 20-year-old Negro charged a Miami Transit Co. bus driver with assault and battery Monday after he said the driver smashed him in the face with a money-changer when he refused to move to the rear of a bus.

Charles Nesbitt, of 1742 Ali Baba Ave., Opa-locka, was treated for a severe forehead gash at Jackson Memorial Hospital following the bloody skirmish on Bus 662 at NW 59th St. and 17th Ave.

Nesbit took out the assault and battery warrant against Elmer M. Post, 47, of 3179 NW 91st St. In doing so, Nesbitt admitted he tried Post's patience by deliberately making three trips from 79th Street to Flagler Street, sitting directly behind the driver.

Post voluntarily surrendered at police headquarters and was released without bond pending trial on the charges in City Court on April 26.

Nesbitt said he got on the bus at 79th Street to go to work and sat down behind the driver. "I heard a few nasty remarks from some white passengers and they made me mad. I decided to stick it out."

Nesbitt said he rode to Flagler Street, then back to 79th. He admitted that Post said nothing to him.

On the second trip to Flagler, Nesbitt said, a white man got on the bus at NW 65th St. and 17th Ave. and took a seat two rows back of him on the opposite side.

"I heard him say "Are Negores allowed to sit up front now?'" and quoted Post as replying "I guess this Negro thinks he does since he is a smart Negro. Get in the back, Negro!"

Nesbitt said he then inquired of the driver "Do I look like a Negro to you?" and that Post answered "Yes." Nesbitt said he retorted, "As far as I know, you could be a Negro yourself."

Nesbitt said Post stopped the bus and struck him across the forehead with his money-changer and ordered him to the rear "before I finish crushing your skull."

Post said Nesbitt's version of the incident was distorted, but declined to give his own complete version.

"He (Nesbitt) was just going to push the issue until there was trouble—and there was. He rode the bus for an hour and a half and kept needling me.

"I have many colored friends as well as white on my line and I try to stay out of trouble." Post denied calling Nesbitt a Negro at anytime during the dispute.

Negro of 1742 Ali Baba Ave., Opa-locka.

Nesbitt—given a 60-day jail sentence for breach of the peace and $50 or 20 days on the profanity charge—boarded Post's bus April 16 at NW 79th Street and 17th Avenue.

Testimony showed the youth sat immediately behind the driver for almost an hour and a half, paying three fares, and refusing to go to the rear when asked.

During this time, witnesses said, passengers kept up a running stream of remarks directed to Post about Nesbitt's seating.

Finally one passenger asked Post if Negroes were allowed to sit up front. Post testified that he replied "no, but this one is a smart one."

Angry words followed between Post and Nesbitt. Witnesses said Post pulled the bus over, got up and smashed the money changer in Nesbitt's face.

Post testified he struck Nesbitt after constant needling. He said Nesbitt called him foul names.

Nesbitt told the court Post started the name-calling by referring to him as a "nigger."

Ed Cowart, attorney for Post, said his client had "every justification for striking Nesbitt.

"The boy asked for what he got," Cowart said.

L. E. Thomas and G. E. Graves, attorneys for Nesbitt, claimed the boy did no wrong in sitting in the seat, and that the breach of peace was not his doing. They were unsuccessful in attempts to make segregated bus seating an issue in the trial, and may appeal.

Sobieski ruled the youth's action, "by design or orders of some organization or of his own accord, was bad judgment. We will not tolerate such meddling in a situation that time alone can cure.

"I feel that Post's action in striking Nesbitt was tantamount to self defense," Sobieski said.

Nesbitt is crippled and walks with a marked limp.

A white bus driver who admitted hitting a young Negro passenger in the face with a money changer was found innocent of an assault charge Monday.

The Negro was sent to jail for breach of the peace and profanity in a dispute over the seat he took on the bus.

Both cases were heard before Miami Municipal Judge Francis A. Sobieski, who proclaimed: "The city will not tolerate meddling with a situation (segregation) bigger than all of us."

On trial were Elmer Post, 47, of 3179 NW 91st St., Miami Transit Co. driver, and Charles Nesbitt, 20-year-old

Tallahassee Bus Plan Assigns Seats to Riders

Star Times. 1-8-57 Washington, D.C. P.8-A

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP).—An unusual seating plan was ordered by the City Commission today in an effort to preserve traditional segregation on Tallahassee city buses.

The plan allows drivers to assign riders to specific seats for which they are handed tickets.

Passengers will be required to occupy the assigned seats under penalty of a possible $500 fine or a 60-day jail sentence unless they elect to have their fares refunded.

The commission yesterday substituted the plan for the segregation section of the city bus franchise which the city officials said now had "doubtful validity" in view of recent court decisions.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of a Negro organization working for integrated seating, declined comment on the action until the plan can be studied.

The new system can not be started for a few days at least, however, since city buses are still suspended under a New Year's Day order of Gov. Leroy Collins. No date has been set for buses to resume.

An aide of Gov. Collins said the Governor didn't have any plans to restore service today or tomorrow when large crowds will be in Tallahassee for Gov. Collins' inauguration for a new four-year term.

Today in his prepared inagural address, Gov. Collins appealed to Floridians for mutual understanding on racial problems but declared "it is folly for anyone to expect judicial dictation to compel social adjustment."

He hastened to add that the United States Supreme Court decisions in the segregation field are the law of the land and that no good whatever could be accomplished by defying the court.

He declared, however, that "boycotts, ultimatums and peremptory demands can never achieve what persuasion, peaceful petitions and normal judicial procedure can do for the Negro race."

Racial Situation Stressed

The 47-year-old Florida Governor devoted fully half of his speech to a discussion of tense racial situations growing out of moves for integration.

"In our search for the answer we should begin by being honest with ourselves, by recognizing realities which exist," he said.

"Man's greatest failures have come when he has refused to recognize the realities of a changed situation and failed to understand that to admit the existence of a reality is not necessarily to welcome or even agree with it."

The Governor repeated that he believed segregation laws passed by a special session of the Florida Legislature last summer could be expected to preserve traditional segregation in the State's public schools "for the foreseeable future."

On the subject of racial integration on city buses Gov. Collins said that both races must change their attitudes.

"We should admit that our attitude generally in the past has been obstructive all along the line," he said.

"We must be constructive and practical, white and colored citizens alike must see wrong on their side as well as right. Our strength to support the right is weakened if we arbitrarily refuse to admit the wrong."

Gov. Collins used his emergency powers to suspend bus service in Tallahassee after the first acts of violence during the long fight by Negroes to win the right to sit where they choose on city buses.

Tallahassee Tries Out New Scheme

Drivers Assign Number As Each Passenger Boards

BY J. RUSSELL BONER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Tallahassee City Commission, in a special meeting, Monday unanimously adopted an ordinance which will provide a "reserved seat" plan for the city's buses.

The ordinance, obviously aimed at maintaining segregation on buses in the Florida capital, calls for seats to be numbered. The bus driver would give each passenger a number and assign him a certain reserved seat on the vehicle.

Call

Under the ordinance, violators (those who would refuse to take the seat assigned by the driver) would be subject to a fine "not exceeding $500 or 60 days in jail, or both."

Bus service of Cities Transit Inc., the Tallahassee Bus company, has been suspended by Florida Governor Leroy Collins in the wake of recent segregation disputes. The governor was not immediately available for comment on the new ordinance.

One section of the ordinance reads:

Kansas City Mo.

"The company shall make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations governing the seating and placement in its motor buses of passengers transported by it for hire in such a manner as to insure:

"(A) Equal distribution, because of weight . . . ; (B) The maximum health and safety of the passengers being transported by it to the end that life, limb and person of said passenger will not be endangered or threatened by violence or over acts of violence . . . "

Mayor John Y. Humphress declared:

"In taking this action, the City Commission calls upon the citizens of Tallahassee to assist the bus company in discharging its duties under the ordinance when bus transportation is resumed. We urge the people of this community to refrain from any acts or demonstrations which will have the effect of increasing racial tension or which will cause violence, disorder or further breaches of peace in our city."

Details of the ordinance, which amends the bus company's franchise, has not been completely worked out, according to city commissioners.

Meanwhile, two suits, one filed by the city in circuit court and another fled by the bus company in federal court, were dismissed Tuesday by mutual agreement of the parties concerned.

The bus company had asked $100,000 damage from the city in the wake of the squabbles concerning segregated seating and the city had filed a counter suit.

ATLANTA. — (INS) — A Florida city moved into a new experiment in maintaining racial segregation on city buses this week, as a southwide Negro campaign to wipe out racial barriers appeared likely to spread to Georgia.

Negro sources in Atlanta said a mass movement was being organized to end separate seating on transit vehicles in the Georgia capital city. The plan, according to usually well-informed sources, was to have Negroes in large numbers board buses and take seats in the front of the vehicles, in open disregard of local law and long-standing custom.

In Tennessee, buses in Chattanooga operated without enforced segregation, but most riders appeared not to have noticed the elimination of "seat from the rear" signs, and the separate seating pattern continued. Chattanooga was the 22nd city where enforced segregation has ended quietly in the South, but in virtually all instances, voluntary segregation remained the rule.

In Tallahassee, where buses were suspended by Gov. LeRoy Collins under emergency police powers to preserve order, the City commission approved an ordinance giving drivers power to assign seats, on a "reserved seat" basis, to individual riders. The measure carries a $500 fine or 60 days in jail, or both, for persons who refuse to accept a specific bus seat assigned by a driver.

The move was made, the Tallahassee Commission said, to assure "equal distribution (of passengers) because of weight," and to assure that "life, limb and person of said passenger will not be endangered or threatened by violence or overt acts of violence."

Collins suspended bus service in Tallahassee last week for the second time within a year when Negroes launched a "ride where we please" campaign. In Miami, a federal court declaration that Florida segregation laws are "dead" followed the U.S. Supreme court decision outlawing segregation in Montgomery, Ala.

Spokesmen of the Atlanta Negro community refused to discuss the reported plan to move toward desegregation in the Georgia City but rumor of the plan was widespread.

Such a movement as urged at a mass-meeting last week by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., young Baptist minister who successfully led a year-long campaign at Montgomery from which the effort spread.

Current southwide desegregation King, and leaders of desegregation moves from Birmingham, and Tallahassee were scheduled to meet in a strategy session in Atlanta Thursday.

In the Alabama cities, in Tallahassee and in Miami, as well as in Baton Rouge, La., efforts to remove racial bars to indiscriminate seating of bus patrons have been met with official opposition. Negro leaders in Jackson, Miss., have discussed an end to segregation there, but the move was ignored by city and state officials.

Atlanta city officials reportedly held a recent meeting with Community Negro leaders, but refused to discuss the touchy subject publicly. Georgia state officials, including Gov. Marvin Griffn and State Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, however, have been outspoken in their desire to maintain segregation in all of its forms in the state.

Cook acknowledged that he had heard of isolated instances of Negroes attempting to ride city buses in Atlanta on an unsegregated basis. Individual riders were either ignored, or in one case, forced from the bus on the pretext that the vehicle had suffered mechanical failure.

"We will not fall for any test case incidents," Cook had said.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(INS)— Four youths were arrested in Montgomery for throwing sparkplugs at one of the recently integrated city buses.

Police Captain E. P. Brown said four white boys, aged 11-15, were apprehended within minutes after they had thrown two sparkplugs at a bus as it passed through a white residential area.

No one was hurt.

Tallahassee's Buses Halted by Governor

Times New York

By The Associated Press.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 1—Gov. Leroy Collins ordered a temporary suspension of Tallahassee bus service today. He said he acted in an effort to prevent further violence in the drive by Negroes to end segregation in bus seating.

Governor Collins' move came several hours after rocks smashed through the windows of the home of a Negro leader of the bus integration movement and two shotgun blasts were fired into a Negro grocery store.

Wed. 1-2-57

Emergency powers were granted to the Governor by a special session of the Florida Legislature last summer.

The Legislature authorized the Governor to take control of public facilities to prevent riots and disorders.

The shotgun blasts were fired through the front window of Speed Brothers grocery store, but Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said it was uncertain whether the shooting was connected with bus integration.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, reported to the police that chunks of concrete shattered four windows at his home half an hour after he received an anonymous telephone call.

Times 1-2-57

The Speed brothers are cousins of Dan Speed, who has headed the car pool operated by Negroes during a bus boycott here. The police said, however, that they did not believe the Speeds had been participating in the boycott or in any integration move.

The Governor's proclamation ordering the suspension said that continued operation of buses in Tallahassee under existing conditions "may well endanger life, limb and property of the citizens residing therein, and will cause or tend to cause further breaches of the peace and will endanger the peace and good order of society."

Wed. 1-2-57

In a statement accompanying the proclamation Governor Collins said:

"In this emotionally charged atmosphere and in the face of threats and overt acts of violence, there is only one logical and effective answer for the present and that is the suspension of bus operations. * * *

"I am convinced the suspension of operations until such time as the emergency passes is in the public interest. I confidently believe that, without the opportunity for continuing agitation by those who actually seem to want to provoke incidents, a sound and wise and harmonious solution can be worked out within a relatively short time."

Legal Move Planned

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 1 (UP)—City officials will meet tomorrow to consider ways of preventing a test of the city's segregation laws in Federal court.

Robert E. Lindbergh, Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner, said he would meet with officials of the city's legal departments to consider dropping charges of segregation law violations against twenty-one Negroes who defied a city ordinance by riding in the white sections of buses.

They would be charged instead with disorderly conduct under the proposal now being considered.

Curfew Extension Pondered

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 1 (UP) — The Montgomery City Commission will meet tomorrow to consider extending a ban on night bus service.

Buses have been fired on five times since segregation was ended by Federal court order.

FORMER BUS PROTEST OFFICER SEEKS CITY COMMISSION POST

Daily World Thurs. 1-10-57
Atlanta Ga. P. 1

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The vice president of the Tallahassee Negro Inter-Civic Council, Rev. K. S. Dupont, qualified Wednesday as a candidate for the City Commission and will oppose Commissioner Davis Atkinson in next month's election. Atkinson is a strong advocate of segregation.

The 53-year-old Rev. Dupont is the first Negro candidate for the City Commission in modern times. He filed for the office Wednesday at City Hall.

Atkinson is serving his first term in office by appointment of Florida Fov. Leroy Collins.

Negroes comprise approximately 20 per cent of Tallahassee's 8,000 registered voters.

Rev. Dupont, born in adjacent Gadsden County, is married and the father of five children.

Burn Cross On Minister's Lawn

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.,—(INS)—The Negro minister who is spearheading the figbt for integrated bus seating in Tallahassee said Thursday he had not requested special police protection, despite a cross burning in 'ront of his church Thursday night

"At the moment that incident was taking place," the Rev. C. K. Steele said, "I was at a meeting telling my people I didn't want any more incidents."

Steele's 11-year-old son, Clifford, saw the four-foot cross blazing on the lawn late last night and called his mother, who doused the flames with a tub of water and called police. The Steeles live next door to the church.

The incident was the second involving the Negro minister in as many nights. Shortly before dawn Tuesday, rocks were hurled through a window of his home.

Meanwhile, Florida's capital city still was without public transportation.

Gov. LeRoy Collins declared a state of emergency New Year's Day in view of the incidents and temporarily suspended bus service.

Lack of transportation was sorely felt this morning when the mercury dipped to a chilly 34 degrees and workers were forced to walk to their jobs or take taxis.

A police spokesman said although Steele had requested no "special" protection, efforts were being made "to see that everyone is protected."

The spokesman said no clues had been turned up as yet in the cross burning.

Collins Is 'Giving In,' Says Foe of Integration

ATLANTA — (INS) — Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said Tuesday that Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins is "giving in" to integration forces in proposing tolerance toward bus integration.

COOK

Collins, in his inaugural address, most of which he devoted to the South's segregation problem, said he believed white people would not object to bus integration, but that Florida would be able "in the foreseeable future" to maintain school segregation.

"He's giving in," Cook said, adding: "He should know better than that."

"There's no such thing as voluntary segregation," Cook said, referring to Collins' expressed belief that local traditions and customs would work to maintain school segregation.

"Agitators will not be satisfied with integration on buses," the Georgia official said, adding: "They want integration in everything—it is their avowed aim."

He said Collins, in adopting a tolerant attitude to one aspect of the segregation question, "is doing the same thing they did in Tennessee about the schools — leaving it to local communities." This procedure will not insure segregation, Cook said.

He observed: "I can't see the NAACP stopping short of complete integration."

Gov. Collins Halts Buses In Tallahassee Flareup

Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 1-2-57 P. 1

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins today ordered a temporary suspension of Tallahassee bus service in an effort to prevent further acts of violence during the tense bus seating dispute.

Collins took the action under emergency powers granted him by the special session of the Florida Legislature last summer.

The Legislature authorized the governor to take control of public facilities to prevent riots and disorders.

SHOTGUN BLASTS, ROCKS

The action came several hours after rocks were hurled through the window panes at the home of the Negro leader of Tallahassee's bus integration movement and shotgun blasts were fired into a Negro grocery store.

The governor's proclamation said that continued operation of the system under existing conditions "may well endanger life, limb and property of the citizens residing therein, and will cause or tend to cause further breaches of the peace and will endanger the peace and good order of society."

In a statement accompanying the proclamation Collins said:

"In this emotionally charged atmostphere and in the face of threats and overt acts of violence, there is only one logical and effective answer for the present and that is the suspension of bus operations. . .

TO REMOVE CAUSE

"I am convinced the suspension of operations until such time as the emergency passes is in the public interest. I confidently believe that, without the opportunity for continuing agitation by those who actually seem to want to provoke incidents, a sound and wise and harmonious solution can be worked out within a relatively short time."

The governor's proclamation was filed with the secretary of state's office and became effective immediately.

It was the first time the governor had invoked the emergency powers granted him by the Legislature.

UNCERTAIN ABOUT TIE-IN

Two shotgun blasts were fired through the front glass window of Speed Bros. grocery store in the Negro section but Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said it was uncertain whether the shooting was connected with the bus situation.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, reported to police that chunks of concrete shattered four windows at his home a half hour after he received an anonymous telephone call.

Steele said the caller, who appeared to be a teen-ager, told him "Steele, the city buses are fixing to run." After the rock throwing, he said he could see a white youth running from the scene.

No one was injured.

Constitution

The Cities Transit Co. complied immediately with the governor's order, and directed buses to stop rolling at 6 p.m. P. 11

The Rev. Steele denounced the governor's action. He said the actions leading up to the suspension were "concocted by the Florida White Citizens Council."

Steele added: Wed. 1-2-57

"I think it fits into a pattern, "the vandalism last night and the people of the White Citizens Council were trying to impress the governor that there is a state of emergency.

"I think it is tragic that an agency of government would tend to pacify the Citizens Council rather than upholdin law and order."

BUS SEGREGATION FOR FLORIDA IS OUTLAWED BY DECISION IN MIAMI

Matter Already Settled, Federal Justice Declares

MIAMI — (INS) — A Federal Court Judge in Miami Thursday declared the bus segregation laws of the State of Florida and the city of Miami unconstitutional.

Judge Emmet C. Choate, in ruling on a case brought against the Miami Transit Co. Oct. 12 by four Negroes, declared the U. S. Supreme Court has already settled the question and added:

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable."

Meanwhile, the city commission met in an emergency session which lasted only 10 minutes. The commission ordered City Attorney George Okell to study the decision and render a proposal of action in the next few days. Okell said he was opposed to taking legal steps merely "for the purpose of delay if nothing can be accomplished from it."

Judge Choate surprised both parties in the suit, which was handled by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The judge told G. E. Graves, Jr., NAACP attorney for the four plaintiffs, Mrs. Maggie Garmon, Mrs. Eleanor M. Fair, Mrs. Alice Jackson and Mrs. Gloria Matthews, that "the courts have already ruled on the power of a state or city to say there must be segregation in buses." He added:

ALREADY SETTLED

"If this is merely a suit to determine the constitutionality of segregation in buses, that has already been settled by the Montgomery (Ala.) case."

In Tallahassee, the Florida capital, Gov. LeRoy Collins said Judge Choate's ruling "may have some effect on the attitude of the people and in that sense will effect the state." The governor Tuesday night suspended operation of Cities Transit, Inc., the Tallahassee bus company which began unsegregated seating recently. Gov. Collins was given such powers by the last state legislature.

After handing down his decision, Judge Choate asked Lee Worley, attorney for the Miami Transit Co., "what do you think about that?" (his decision)

Morley replied that he was "inclined to agree in substance."

Officials of the NAACP hailed the verdict as a "tremendous victory" in the South's segregation battle. Graves said he felt that integration on Miami buses can proceed "immediately."

At the same time, Assistant City Attorney Jack Smith warned that anyone who tried "to use force to make a Negro sit in the back of a bus will be in contempt of Federal court."

Octavio Cuevas, assistant general manager of the bus company, declared that the coaches would continue to operate on a segregated basis until the court's formal opinion is received. "We are still bound by our franchise," he said, "and we will have to wait until the city directs us to disregard the sections of the franchise and municipal ordinances requiring segregation."

Judge Choate gave the city 10 days to contest the case if it wishes to file an answer disputing the constitutional question. Graves said he would file a motion in 10 days for a summary judgment which would make today's ruling a formal opinion.

No Use Wasting Time, Choate Tells Startled Lawyers

Herald Fri. 1-4-57 Miami, Fla. P.1-a

By RONALD T. YORK
Herald Staff Writer

Mixed seating of the races on Miami buses probably will begin in a matter of days.

The long-standing color line was swept aside Thursday by Federal Judge Emett C. Choate in a brief oral ruling from his bench.

He said the City of Miami would be given 10 days to answer his ruling, but added his decision will stand despite any last-minute arguments by city officials.

"There's no use taking a lot of time talking about something that's already been decided," Choate commented to surprised attorneys for the city, the Miami Transit Co. and four Negro petitioners who filed a request for a desegregation order Oct. 12.

The ruling in effect declared two city ordinances unconstitutional. The local laws require white persons to seat from the front of buses and Negroes to seat from the rear.

While the order specified Miami Transit operations, the effect presumably would extend to suburban bus company segregation seating policies if they are challenged.

No cases of immediate Negro efforts to desegregate were reported by bus drivers at a late hour Thursday.

Judge Choate's order would become effective when he hands down a formal written declaration which is expected in a few days.

Transit company officials said they would comply with the order.

The burden of putting Choate's ruling into effect by wiping out existing bus segregation laws fell immediately on city and state officials.

Choate refused to enjoin the bus company from complying with existing laws, and in effect ruled them out of the litigation.

In the crackling atmosphere following the decision, Assistant City Attorney Jack Smith warned that anyone using force to maintain bus segregation may stand in contempt of federal court.

The ruling came on a petition filed in behalf of four Negro women bus riders. They asked that state and city bus segregation laws be declared unconstitutional, and the bus company be enjoined from complying with them.

The Rev. Theo Gibson, president of the Miami chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said:

"We want immediate compliance, as soon as the judge's decision is handed down.

"We've waited long enough. We want everybody getting in line — the company and the drivers."

The Rev. Mr. Gibson said no effort will be made to force the bus integration until Choate's judgment is final.

G. E. Graves Jr., Negro attorney, was surprised and jubilant.

"I thought the judge was going to convene a three-judge court and have us go to trial on this," Graves said.

Graves went to court primed to fight to get his case into court, as in other integration suits.

Herald P.2-a

Smith opened the hearing by arguing that the Negroes "had not exhausted administrative remedies" by first asking city officials to end segregation.

The "administrative remedy" argument has been the first defense in all six integration suits now in Miami federal court.

"If this is merely a suit to determine the validity of segregation on buses, I think that's already been decided," Choate said, ending all argument. He cited the Montgomery, Ala., case in which the U. S. Supreme Court recently made the color line on buses a dead issue.

"I have no hesitancy about striking down these statutes," the judge said. "They are unconstitutional."

Judge Choate refused to enjoin the bus company, he said, because it is a private corporation.

"I don't want by mandate to tell you how to run your business," he told Lee M. Worley, bus company attorney.

"But all this (making Negroes move to the rear of buses) is being done by the bus drivers," Graves argued.

"If, after I strike down the laws, they do it, then they can be brought to court," Choate answered.

He gave the city 10 days in which to answer the petition, a right under rules of procedure. But he said it will have no effect on his decision.

"The courts have already ruled on the power of a state or city to say there will be segregation on buses," Choate said.

"Whether we like it or not, the fact remains that they have no such power."

Worley said he told company officials after the hearing that "eventually, they've got to desegregate buses."

"But we can't do anything until the judge's written opinion comes down," he said.

Judge Rules In Miami Dispute

MIAMI — (INS) — Federal Judge Emmet C. Choate, in a ruling that caught both sides by surprise, ruled Thursday the city of Miami's and the state of Florida's bus segregation laws are unconstitutional.

The judge said the issue had already been settled by the U. S. Supreme Court in its rulings in connection with bus seating in Ala.

Judge Choate was sitting in a case brought Oct. 12 by four Negro bus riders — Maggie Garmon, Eleanor M. Fair, Alice Jackson and Gloria Matthews.

The four plaintiffs challenged segregation statutes and those of the city of Miami.

The suit was backed by the NAACP and requested that a three-judge bench be impaneled to rule on the constitutional question.

Judge Choate commented there was no need for such a panel in view of recent Supreme Court decisions. He said:

"I have no hesitation in saying these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are un-enforceable."

The Miami Transit co., co-defendant in the case along with the City of Miami, said it would continue operating its buses on a segregated basis until a formal order is received.

Judge Choate's ruling is expected to have far reaching effects in Florida.

The stage was set for Thursday's verdict when the U. S. Supreme Court, in a series of rulings which followed the historic 1954 verdict outlawing segregation in public schools, struck down the color line in use of other public facilities, including buses.

Although numerous suits have been brought by Negroes in Florida's capital city of Tallahassee over the bus seating issue, the heart of the Florida law remained untested until Thursday.

The statutes to which the NAACP took exception were set forth in an exhibit appended to the federal court suit. One of the statutes reads:

"Any white person unlawfully and willfully occupying, as a passenger, any car or part of car not so set apart and provided for white passengers, and any colored passenger unlawfully and willfully occupying, as a passenger, any car or part of car not so set apart and provided for colored passengers shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months."

Appeal Doubtful In Bus Seat Case

2 on Board See Fight Hopeless

Hearn Awaiting Counsel's Advice

Miami city commissioners, faced with an almost certain federal court decision outlawing segregated buses, may make no effort to appeal when the ruling is handed down.

Federal Judge Emett Choate, who said Thursday the segregated seating is unconstitutional, formally ruled Friday against sending the case to a special 3-judge court.

The city of Miami was given 10 days to make further arguments.

If those arguments fail to convince Judge Choate there is sufficient reason for trial, he then will rule the city ordinance unconstitutional.

The city commissioners would have to decide whether to appeal.

Two Commissioners said Friday they felt it would be a waste of time. A third said if the city attorney recommended no further legal action he would go along with the recommendation.

Only City Commissioner James W. High admitted he would be strong for appealing a Federal Court decision outlawing segregation on buses.

George W. DuBreuil joined Otis W. Shiver in declaring that a federal court order would represent the "law of the land" and should be followed. Both said any move the city might make would be a "losing battle."

Though Commissioner B. E. Hearn said he would go along with a recommendation against appeal, he refused to disclose what his attitude would be if the Legal Department went the other way and recommended appeal. He promised to have a statement later, after the recommendation is in.

Mayor Randall N. Christmas refused to be pinned down on how he felt about pursuing the case.

"I'm not about to answer that question," he declared.

But he is expected to vote with High, who said he will demand that "the Commission pursue whatever legal means possible to uphold our ordinance."

If the city doesn't appeal, he said, "a lot of people will resent it."

Counsel for both the City of Miami and the four petitioning Negro bus riders here agreed, Judge Choate said, that the city bus ordinance in Miami is "in all substantial respects identical" to one declared unconstitutional in Montgomery, Ala.

G. E. Graves Jr., counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, whose suit resulted in Judge Choate's decision, said his organization will await the final written order of the court before seeking an end to segregated seating.

Miami OKs Appeal on Bus Ruling

By JUANITA GREENE
Herald Staff Writer

The City of Miami Tuesday authorized the first legal step necessary to appeal a federal court ruling outlawing segregation on Miami buses.

Whether it will go all the way to the U. S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans will be decided later.

But the City Commission instructed George S. Okell to file an answer to a suit attacking the ciy's bus segregation laws.

Federal Judge Emett C. Choate last Thursday gave the city 10 days to file the answer after dismissing pleas by the city and Miami Transit Co.

At the time Judge Choate gave the opinion that the ordinances were unconstitutional, and said he would not change his mind.

Okell, however, told the commissioners at an informal conference that the city should file the answer so that it would not be prevented from appealing Choate's order if it decided to do so later.

"After filing the answer, and exploring all possibilities before Choate," Okell said, "the city can decide whether to take an appeal if the judge declares the ordinances unconstitutional."

Okell said in the meantime the commissioners should "not presume that the judge will rule against you."

The commission asked the advice of Okell although Olavi Hendrickson also was in the room. Hendrickson was declared Miami's lawful city attorney by the Supreme Court last Friday.

A commission majority indicated it would continue to use Okell as special counsel if not as city attorney in the bus segregation case.

Miami Policemen Order Negro High School Youths off Bus

. . . Joseph Sands, 17, Vernon Clark, 18, refused to go to rear

CONFUSION IN MIAMI—Although a Federal judge recently declared Miami's bus segregation laws unconstitutional, city police still insist on enforcing the segregated seating. Here two high school students, Joseph Sands, 17 (left) and Vernon Clark, 18, refuse to move to rear of bus on orders from driver and police. Later, however, they got off bus when policeman told them to. A formal ruling on the law is awaited.

Two Negro Youths Put Off Bus

By ALAN MacLEESE
Herald Staff Writer

Two Negro high school seniors boarded a Miami Transit Co.-owned bus in downtown Miami Wednesday night, refused to sit in the rear and were ordered off the bus by Miami police.

The officers said they ordered the youths off the bus because "under existing city ordinances they were creating a disturbance."

It was the first racial incident on a bus in this area since the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People told its people Tuesday to "sit where you please" on Miami buses.

The youths, Joseph Sands, 17, of 3793 Oak Ave., and Vernon Clark, 18, of 3719 Thomas Ave., boarded the South Miami Coach Lines bus (recently purchased by Miami Transit Co.) at S. Miami Avenue and 2nd Street.

The two George Washington Carver High School students sat down in the seat immediately behind the driver, James Driggers, of 1569 Sunset Dr., South Miami, after paying their 20 cent fares.

Driggers said he asked the youths to sit in the rear of the bus. A number of white persons were sitting in the front and several Negroes in the rear.

"They refused to go to the rear so I sent someone to call police," Driggers said.

When officers Harold Whitaker and W. B. White arrived, the youths were sitting in the front seat, talking to a Herald reporter.

The officers first ordered the youths to the rear, and, on their refusal, ordered them off the bus. The youths, both of whom have lived in Miami most of their lives, complied.

No arrests were made.

Capt. William O'Connell, in charge of the uniformed radio patrol Wednesday night, said "we're supposed to live up to existing city ordinances in cases like this."

Both boys are members of the Christ Episcopal Church, which is led by Rev. Theodore H. Gibson, past president and spokesman for the NAACP.

The boys denied, however, that they were under any specific NAACP instructions to refuse to go to the rear of the bus in order to create a test case.

"We've both been thinking about it and now that the NAACP said it's all right we decided to do it and see what would happen," Sands said.

Octavio Cuevas, executive vice president of Miami Transit Co., said:

"The driver did the only thing he could do: obey the existing city ordinances we must observe under our franchise."

The driver said that none of the white passengers in the front of the bus made any objections about the youths' seating.

Earlier Wednesday Rev. Gibson said "there is no reason for excitement. We are loyal American citizens and will obey all valid laws."

The NAACP advised Negroes that they were not bound to observe segregated seating after acting Miami City Attorney George S. Okell informed Federal Judge Emett C. Choate that the city has never tried to enforce ordinances requiring races to sit separately.

That was the city's answer to a suit by four Negroes to have bus segregation declared unconstitutional. Judge Choate ruled informally that bus segregation was void, but has not yet handed down his formal order.

Rev. Gibson said he made a tour of bus lines Wednesday and found some mingling of races. But it was not general and resulted in no incidents.

Florida House Backs Segregation Bill Veto

Post + Times Herald 6-8-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 7 (AP)—The House upheld the Governor's veto of the "last resort" bill today, beating down a strong segregationist attempt by a vote of 48-42, far short of the required two-third vote.

The action put to death the bill which Gov. LeRoy Collins fought throughout the Legislature and school forces condemned as a threat to operation of public schools.

Attorney General Richard Ervin led legislative fight for the bill which would have allowed schools or any other public facility to be closed by referendum of 25 per cent of the residents of any area.

Ervin had called it a "safety valve" to retain segregated schools when all other means failed.

Rep. Chappell of Marion led the fight to override the veto. Chappell said the measure was "aimed at peace by preventing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People from making a peaceful community into a race problem."

Rep. Turlington of Alachua warned the House against overriding the veto, saying the law would hurt white children far more than Negroes.

The bill had gone through the Senate, 26-11, after the House had passed it, 57-36. The Governor put off his veto message for the full five days allowed by law before sending it up last night.

Collins called the bill "wholly unnecessary" and said it was not the "last resort" bill but the "first resort for the agitators."

White Bus Riders Accept Decline of Segregation

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. P. 1 Sec. 2

MIAMI, Fla.—White bus riders generally accepted the news that segregation laws had been struck down in Miami and indicated that they were surprised that it had not happened earlier.

A newspaper poll at one of the city's busiest intersections where many Negroes and whites board the bus revealed that white riders by a margin of 10 to one admit that they will not be disturbed when segregated seating ends on Miami's public transportation.

It was generally conceded that the ending of segregated seating could have been effected more quickly in Miami if there had been less publicity about it.

ONLY A FEW white bus riders said they opposed integrated seating but even they admitted there was nothing they could do about it.

One Southern-born white stated "I guess I'll have to buy a car now."

The majority of the white riders said they had no intention of discontinuing riding the bus.

On the other hand, a number of Negroes who had previously refused to ride the buses because of the segregated seating now state they will start riding public transportation.

Graves Jr., who represented four Negro complainants who had sought redress for being segregated on the public buses in Miami.

Judge Choate then told attorneys for the city and for the bus company that he would follow up the oral opinion with a written one "if necessary."

THAT WAS that as far as Miami was concerned. There was some rumblings and some attempt at delaying action on the part of the city . . . but the existing opinion is that segregation on the buses can be ended in Miami without difficulty if the local authorities cooperate.

Judge Choate told the stunned attorneys that he would give the city of Miami ten days to answer his ruling but his ruling would stand despite any arguments by city officials.

"There is no use taking a lot of time talking about something that's already been decided," Choate commented.

The action by Attorney Graves was entered Oct. 12.

Father Theodore Gibson, president of the local branch of the NAACP, and Attorney Graves stated there would be no immediate attempt to effect integrated seating by the 2,000 members of the local branch . . . "but we cannot speak for all the Negroes in the community.

"We want immediate compliance, however, as soon as the written decree is handed down," Father Gibson stated.

• In the meantime Assistant City Atty. Jack Smith warned that anyone using force to maintain bus segregation may stand in contempt of Federal Court.

Bus drivers were instructed that until the judge's decree was made final that any Negro defying the city's segregation ordinance would be requested to sit in the rear . . . "but all you can do is ask them courteously to sit in the back of the bus."

End of Bus Bias Leaves Miami Calm

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-12-57

MIAMI—The unexpected was accepted with expected calmness here last week.

Bus segregation in Florida and in Miami was declared unconstitutional by Federal Judge Emett C. Choate in an oral decision which caught everybody by surprise here Thursday.

• "I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable," Judge Choate told Atty. G. E.

Miami U.S. Judge rules Florida law not enforceable

Afro American p. 1 Baltimore, Md.

MIAMI, Fla.—"You people can just sit anywhere. "As far as I'm concerned, segregation is gone. There's no use taking a lot of time talking about something that's already been decided."

With this brief statement Federal Judge Emett C. Choate of the U.S. District Court ruled that Florida and City of Miami bus segregation laws and ordinances are unconstitutional.

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws (pertaining to buses) are unconstitutional and hence unenforceable," he said.

The Ohio born judge promised to put his oral opinion in writing if necessary.

Sat. 1-12-57

HIS SHORT and to the point opinion took everyone by surprise, even G. E. Graves, attorney for the plantiffs who had petitioned the courts to declare the segregation laws unconstitutional.

Graves filed the petition on behalf of four women on Oct. 12. The petition also asked the court to enjoin the bus company from complying with city and state segregation statutes.

Judge Choate delivered his surprising opinion shortly after assistant City Attorney Jack Smith opened arguments for the defense, claiming the petitioners "had not exhausted administrative remedies."

AT THIS point, the judge interrupted to say:

"If this is merely a suit to determine the validity of segregation on buses, I think that's already been decided."

He based his ruling on the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision which ordered an end to segregation on the city buses in Montgomery, Ala.

Although Judge Choate declared Florida and the City of Miami segregation laws unconstitutional, he refused to enjoin the bus company because it is a private corporation.

The City of Miami was given 10 days in which to answer the petition.

Afro American

SHORTLY afterward it was reported that the local transit company served notice that its passengers would travel on an integrated seating basis.

Assistant City Attorney Smith also warned that anyone attempting to maintain segregation on the buses may stand in contempt of federal court.

When the judge failed to enjoin the bus company, Graves pleaded that the drivers were the ones who enforced the segregation laws by making colored patrons move to the rear of the bus.

Judge Choate said "If, after I strike down the laws, they do it, then they can be brought to court."

Sat. 1-12-57

LOCAL NAACP officials greeted the ruling as a "real victory."

The Rev. Theo Gibson, president of the Miami NAACP branch, said: "We've waited long enough. We want everybody to get in line — the company and the drivers."

He explained, however, that no efforts would be made to force integration until Judge Choate's decision is final.

Graves told reporters following the hearing that he was taken with complete surprise; that he had come to court prepared for a fight to get the case in the court.

GOV. LEROY COLLINS commented that the judge's oral ruling "speaks for itself." He did say, however, that the ruling "doesn't have any immediate and direct effect" on the Tallahassee issue.

Last week Federal Judge Dozier A. Devan of Tallahassee said in an offhand statement that all segregation laws are "deader than any doornail."

He told newsmen that Judge Choate's opinion "has no legal effect on litigation pending in my district.

He referred to a pending suit filed to rule on the valdy of Tallahassee bus segregation laws.

* * *

AFTER THE hearing Lee M. Worley, attorney for the bus company, said he told bus company officials that "they've got to desegregate the buses eventually."

City Attorney George S. Pickell said he would have to study the case further before deciding whether the federal judge's ruling would be contested.

Following an emergency meeting called by the City Commissioners to decide if the city should continue its legal battle to maintain segregation, Commissioner Otis W. Shiver said:

"The commission is only kidding itself in ordering further legal study of the problem. We have no alternate but to accept the decision of the court. It's the law, whether we like it or not."

Fla. Bus Segregation Laws Are Ruled Unconstitutional

Weekly Sat. 1-19-57 New Orleans, La.

P. 1

MIAMI, Fla. (ANP) -- A federal judge in Miami Thursday ruled that Florida laws and Miami city ordinances requiring segregated seating on public buses are unconstitutional.

Judge Emmett C. Choate made his ruling on a motion by the city of Miami to have a suit filed by the NAACP thrown out of court.

Choate refused to convene three-judge court to hear arguments in the case, which was filed by Florida branches of the NAACP last Oct. 12, naming the Miami Transit Company, the City of Miami and the individual city commissioners.

The judge said there was no substantial question of constitutional law in view of the recent United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation on public buses in Montgomery, Alabama.

Choate dismissed the transit company as a defendant, ruling that the firm is a private corporation without any connections with the state.

Miami Transit Company officials had contended that in requiring segregated seating it was merely following ordinances of Miami and that it would continue to do so until the laws were changed.

Immediately following Judge Choate's ruling, Florida Gov. Leroy T. Collins announced that the decision would have no effect on his order suspending bus service in Tallahassee, the state capital, where attempts at desegregation have resulted in violence.

Gov. Collins used his emergency powers Wednesday to suspend runs to prevent further violence.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the Negro drive for integrated seating on Tallahassee buses, reported a 4-foot wooden cross was burned in front of his Church late Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the Souths bus-seating troubles continued to spring up in other integration hot spots. Weekly

Only One Commissioner Opposes Mixed Seating

Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-12-57 P. 3

MIAMI, Fla.—The Courier has learned from reliable sources that only one City Commissioner has expressed the desire to go all out to block integrated seating on buses in Miami.

This same commissioner on other matters involving the race issue has been adamant in his attitudes toward maintaining the status-quo.

The other commissioners, although openly expressing that they have no desire to foster integration, admit that there is no longer any legal way to continue segregation laws.

In Montgomery, Alabama where the desegregation "fever" began two weeks ago when the U. S. Supreme Court ordered an end to segregation of races on public vehicles, a curfew on night bus operations were extended until next Tuesday. Sat. 1-10-57

In New Orleans, there were conflicting reports over the shooting of a young Negro man by police, after the Negro allegedly hurled two segregation markers from a New Orleans bus. New Orleans, La.

Frank Jones, 25, who was given a 50-50 chance to live, was shot in the spine. P. 1

Police said Jones was shot after he threatened a bus driver with a knife -- a charge which Jones denies.

There was also these other developments in the bus segregation controversy:

In Tuscaloosa and Mobile, Alabama, Negroes mapped plans for riding the buses on an integrated basis.

A mass meeting was called by Negro leaders in Mobile to discuss a recent decision of the local bus line to remove the segregation boards.

At Tuscaloosa, the Rev. W. B. Sheeley, a Baptist minister, said he has organized a Negro "Fellowship" which will press for "all rights and privileges of American citizenship."

And in Birmingham, the fourth Alabama city affected by the bus segregation issue, city officials said they would ask for a postponement of the cases of 22 Negroes charged with violating local segregation laws in mixing with white passengers on buses.

Miami Judge's Ruling Surprise To Both Sides

Call P. 1 Kansas City, Mo.

MIAMI.—(INS) — Federal Judge Emmet C. Choate, in a decision that caught both sides by surprise, ruled Thursday, Jan. 3, that the city of Miami's and the state of Florida's bus segregation laws are unconstitutional. Jan. 1-4-57

The judge said the issue had been settled by the U. S. Supreme Court in its rulings on bus seating in Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.

Judge Choate was sitting in a case brought Oct. 12 by four Negro bus riders—Maggie Garmon, Eleanor M. Fair, Alice Jackson and Gloria Matthews—who challenged the constitutionality of Florida segregation statutes and those of the city of Miami.

The suit was backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and requested that a three-judge bench be impaneled to rule on the constitutional question.

Judge Choate commented there was no need for such a panel in view of recent Supreme court decisions. He said:

The Miami Transit Co., co-defendant in the case along with the city of Miami, said it would continue operating its buses on a segregated basis until a formal order is received.

Miami Negroes sit in back despite plea

News P. 14

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 16—(AP)—Negroes continued to sit in rear bus seats today after NAACP leaders urged them to "sit where they please." Wed. 1-16-57

Bus drivers reported no attempts at integrated seating on last night's runs. A photographer who looked for some pictures of integrated seating returned empty-handed.

The Miami council of the NAACP in a statement yesterday said, "We advise our people that from henceforth they may sit where they please on Miami transit buses."

The action came after the city of Miami had filed an answer to a ruling by Federal Judge Emett Choate that Miami bus segregation laws were unconstitutional.

In the answer, City Atty. George Okell said a suit brought by Negroes aimed at knocking out segregation on buses failed to show that the city was enforcing such laws.

Choate made his informal ruling Jan. 3 during pre-hearing maneuvering in the segregation case, but still has not put the ruling into a formal order.

The Negro leaders urged that no demonstration be made but that the Negro patrons "just sit where they want."

Authorities at Ruston, La., investigated a cross burning and a reported attempt by white men to run down a Negro janitor with their car yesterday.

The Tennessee White Citizens Councils, headed by John Kasper, proposed that the State constitution be amended to provide for closing public schools in that state in order to avoid court-enforced integration.

BUS SEGREGATION FOR FLORIDA IS OUTLAWED BY DECISION IN MIAMI

Matter Already Settled, Federal Justice Declares

MIAMI — (INS) — A Federal Court Judge in Miami Thursday declared the bus segregation laws of the State of Florida and the city of Miami unconstitutional.

Judge Emmet C. Choate, in ruling on a case brought against the Miami Transit Co. Oct. 12 by four Negroes, declared the U. S. Supreme Court has already settled the question and added:

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable."

Meanwhile, the city commission met in an emergency session which lasted only 10 minutes. The commission ordered City Attorney George Okell to study the decision and render a proposal of action in the next few days. Okell said he was opposed to taking legal steps merely "for the purpose of delay if nothing can be accomplished from it."

Judge Choate surprised both parties in the suit, which was handled by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The judge told G. E. Graves, Jr., NAACP attorney for the four plaintiffs, Mrs. Maggie Garmon, Mrs. Eleanor M. Fair, Mrs. Alice Jackson and Mrs. Gloria Matthews, that "the courts have already ruled on the power of a state or city to say there must be segregation in buses." He added:

ALREADY SETTLED

"If this is merely a suit to determine the constitutionality of segregation in buses that has already been settled by the Montgomery (Ala.) case."

In Tallahassee, the Florida capital, Gov. LeRoy Collins said Judge Choate's ruling "may have some effect on the attitude of the people and in that sense will effect the state." The governor Tuesday night suspended operation of Cities Transit, Inc., the Tallahassee bus company which began unsegregated seating recently. Gov. Collins was given such powers by the last state legislature.

After handing down his decision, Judge Choate asked Lee Worley, attorney for the Miami Transit Co., "what do you think about that?" (his decision)

Morley replied that he was "inclined to agree in substance."

Officials of the NAACP hailed the verdict as a "tremendous victory" in the South's segregation battle. Graves said he felt that integration on Miami buses can proceed "immediately."

At the same time, Assistant City Attorney Jack Smith warned that anyone who tried "to use force to make a Negro sit in the back of a bus will be in contempt of Federal court."

Octavio Cuevas, assistant general manager of the bus company, declared that the coaches would continue to operate on a segregated basis until the court's formal opinion is received. "We are still bound by our franchise," he said, "and we will have to wait until the city directs us to disregard the sections of the franchise and municipal ordinances requiring segregation."

Judge Choate gave the city 10 days to contest the case if it wishes to file an answer disputing the constitutional question. Graves said he would file a motion in 10 days for a summary judgment which would make today's ruling a formal opinion.

Bus Segregation In Miami Illegal, U. S. Judge Rules

By ROLAND DOPSON

MIAMI, Jan. 3 (UP)—A federal judge ruled today that Miami and Florida bus segregation laws are illegal. The transit company served notice that 100,000 daily riders here will travel on a mixed basis.

Miami has 10 days in which to appeal the decision by District Judge Emett Choate.

But in Tallahassee, the Florida capital, Gov. LeRoy Collins and state legal experts said the ruling had no "immediate or direct" effect on that city. Tallahassee buses were halted on the governor's orders as a measure to preserve order.

7 SOUTHERN CITIES

With Miami now involved, a total of seven Southern cities has been brought into the bus integration struggle which began two weeks ago at Montgomery, Ala. Buses there were ordered cleared of racial barriers by the Supreme Court.

The decision of Judge Choate, 65, caught everyone by surprise. The judge ruled that the U. S. Supreme Court already had decided the question in holding that segregation on buses in Montgomery is illegal.

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable," he said.

The State Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, which regulates common carriers in Florida, said there is no state law requiring segregation on buses.

CLAIM RIGHTS VIOLATED

Judge Choate's decision came at a hearing on a motion by city attorneys to dismiss a petition brought by four Negro women. The Negroes complained that their rights under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution were violated when they were required to move from the front to the rear of a Miami Transit Co. bus last October.

The judge ended the hearing 15 minutes after it started.

"There is no use taking up a lot of time talking about something already decided," he said. "If this is merely a suit to determine the validity of segregation in buses, I think that has already been decided (in the Montgomery cases)."

U. S. Judge Rules Bus Segregation Illegal in Florida

Jan. 4-4-56

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 3 (AP)—A Federal district judge ruled today that Florida and Miami bus segregation laws were unconstitutional.

In an oral opinion, which he promised to put in writing if necessary, Judge Emett Choate said: "I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws [pertaining to buses] are unconstitutional and hence unenforceable."

He gave the city ten days to file a motion in answer to his ruling. The City Commission quickly went into a special session, after which it instructed the City Attorney's office to study the matter and take "whatever legal action" was warranted.

Jack Smith, Assistant City Attorney, cautioned that "anybody who attempted to intimidate or use force to make a Negro sit in the back of a bus will be in contempt of Federal court."

A spokesman for Florida branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People hailed the ruling by the 65-year-old judge as a "real victory" in their fight to end segregation.

G. E. Graves Jr. of Miami, counsel for the N. A. A. C. P., and other attorneys connected with the case indicated they felt it would be futile for the city to answer the ruling, since the judge had made it clear he con-segregated seating unconstitutional. In stating his opinion, Judge Choate cited the recent United States Supreme Court ruling against bus segregation in Montgomery, Ala.

The N. A. A. C. P. filed suit here last Oct. 12, naming the Miami Transit Company, the city and individual city commissioners as defendants. Four Negroes were listed as plaintiffs.

They complained that their

Judge Choate's decision came on a motion from the defendants asking dismissal of the case. The judge dropped the bus company from the list of defendants, saying it had merely carried out state and city requirements. He refused to dismiss the case missioners.

The transit company operates

Whether municipal buses are common carriers, as defined in the city's future action "depends

No Effect in Capital Seen

In Tallahassee, where city and taking front seats.

Tallahassee Negroes decided to

RULED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Judge Voids Miami Bus Segregation

JUDGE EMMETT CHOATE
Overturns Miami Segregation

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 3 (AP) — U.S. Dist. Judge Emmett Choate ruled today that Florida and Miami laws requiring Negroes to sit in the rear of Miami Transit Co. buses are unconstitutional.

Adv. 1-4-57

In an off-the-cuff oral opinion, which he promised to put in writing if necessary, the judge said:

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws—pertaining to buses—are unconstitutional and hence unenforceable."

He gave the city of Miami 10 days to file a motion in answer to his ruling. The City Commission went into a hurried, special session to map future strategy.

After a brief meeting, the commission instructed the city attorney's office to study the matter further and take "whatever legal action" it feels is warranted.

And Asst. City Atty. Jack Smith, who handled the case for the city, cautioned that "anybody who attempted to intimidate or use force to make a Negro sit in the back of a bus will be in contempt of federal court."

Spokesman for Florida branches of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People hailed the ruling by the 65-year-old Republican judge as a "real victory" in their fight to end segregation.

G. E. Graves Jr. of Miami, counsel for the NAACP, and other attorneys connected with the case indicated they felt it would be futile for the city to file any answer to the ruling, since Choate spelled out so explicitly that he considers any segregated seating requirements unconstitutional. In stating his opinion, Choate cited the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling against bus segregation in the Montgomery, Ala., case.

The NAACP filed the attack on segregation Oct. 12, 1956, naming the Miami Transit Co., the City of Miami and the individual city commissioners as defendants. Four Negroes—Maggie Garmon Eleanor Fair, Gloria Matthews and Alice Jackson — were listed as plaintiffs.

Adv. 1-4-57

They complained that their rights under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution had been violated when they were forced to move from the front to the rear of Miami buses last October.

Choate's decision came on a motion from the defendants asking dismissal of the case. The judge dropped the bus company from the list of defendants, saying the company was merely carrying out state and city requirements. But he refused to dismiss the case against the city and the city commissioners.

Mg. 1-4-57

In Tallahassee, where the city buses have been halted under an emergency order issued by Gov. Leroy Collins, the governor said he did not believe Choate's ruling would affect the situation in the state capital. Collins ordered the buses halted Tuesday following incidents of violence which occurred after Negroes ended a seven-month boycott by returning to the buses and taking front seats.

Tallahassee Negroes decided to end their boycott after the Supreme Court ruled against segregation on Montgomery, Ala., city buses, the first all-out test of bus segregation statutes in the South.

In Birmingham, Ala., 22 Negroes have been charged with mass violation of that city's bus segregation laws. Their trial has been postponed until Feb. 11 in Recorder's Court by agreement of city and defense attorneys. The home of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which led the demonstration Dec. 26, later was dynamited. There have been no arrests in the blast case.

City buses have been fired on three times in Birmingham and five times in Montgomery. The Montgomery City Commission has ordered a 5 p.m. bus curfew and appropriated funds to hire additional policemen to prevent new violence. Negroes began riding [redacted]

Actually, no specific state law requires segregation on city buses. The State Railroad and Public Utilities Commission has required segregation on common carriers by authority of a state law. But there is a legal question whether municipal buses are common carriers as defined in the statute. They are not mentioned in the law.

The common carrier statutes were cited in the suit.

Miami Mayor Randall Christmas said the city's future action "depends on the attitude of the people affected. We hope everybody will be reasonable and trust the court's decision will not prompt any violence or disruption."

After the City Commission meeting, Commissioner Otis W. Shiver said, "We have no other alternative but to accept the decision of the court. Whether we like it or not, it is the law of the land. . . . The best thing we can do is accept the fact that integration at public places is on its way. That way we can avoid many bloody battles and a losing war with all its carnage, hate and destruction."

Bus Segregation In Miami Illegal, U. S. Judge Rules

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. p. 1 Fri. 1-4-57

By ROLAND DOPSON

MIAMI, Jan. 3 (UP)—A federal judge ruled today that Miami and Florida bus segregation laws are illegal. The transit company served notice that 100,000 daily riders here will travel on a mixed basis.

Miami has 10 days in which to appeal the decision by District Judge Emett Choate.

But in Tallahassee, the Florida capital, Gov. LeRoy Collins and state legal experts said the ruling had no "immediate or direct" effect on that city. Tallahassee buses were halted on the governor's orders as a measure to preserve order.

7 SOUTHERN CITIES

With Miami now involved, a total of seven Southern cities has been brought into the bus integration struggle which began two weeks ago at Montgomery, Ala. Buses there were ordered cleared of racial barriers by the Supreme Court.

The decision of Judge Choate, 65, caught everyone by surprise. The judge ruled that the U. S. Supreme Court already had decided the question in holding that segregation on buses in Montgomery is illegal.

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable," he said.

The State Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, which regulates common carriers in Florida, said there is no state law requiring segregation on buses.

CLAIM RIGHTS VIOLATED

Judge Choate's decision came at a hearing on a motion by city attorneys to dismiss a petition brought by four Negro women. The Negroes complained that their rights under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution were violated when they were required to move from the front to the rear of a Miami Transit Co. bus last October.

The judge ended the hearing 15 minutes after it started.

"There is no use taking up a lot of time talking about something already decided," he said. "If this is merely a suit to determine the validity of segregation in buses, I think that has already been decided (in the Montgomery cases)."

Some Integration On Tallahassee Buses Reported

Advertiser P. 7-B
Tues. 1-1-57
Montgomery Ala

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Dec. 31 (AP)—Some bus riding on an integrated pattern was reported in Tallahassee today but the number of riders appeared to be running less than usual for this holiday period.

Two teams of six Negroes rode the buses as part of a ride-the-bus campaign, and afterwards reported there were white riders on the same buses.

Dan Speed, campaign chairman, said that on one bus white and Negro riders sat opposite each other on lateral front seats back of the driver.

Speed said that on another bus a white woman took a seat at the rear of the bus.

A spot check by newsmen showed that in most buses the Negroes were continuing to sit from the rear.

There were no reported incidents and Negro leaders said no mass demonstrations were planned.

Tallahassee Buses Try Rider-Assigning Plan

Constitution Tues. 1-8-57
Atlanta, Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP)—The Tallahassee City Commission today knocked out the racial segregation section of the city bus franchise and substituted a passenger assignment ordinance.

P. 1

The new ordinance provision, which will become effective as soon as it is published tomorrow, said the action was taken in view of the "doubtful validity" of the section and in view of recent court rulings.

Under the new plan the bus driver will issue tickets to riders assigning them to seats. The passengers will be required to occupy these seats under penalty of a possible $500 fine or 60-day jail sentence unless they elect to have their fares refunded.

An attorney for Cities Transit, Inc., which operates the Tallahassee bus system, told the commissioners the transit firm would accept the new arrangement.

The new ordinance is designed to preserve traditional segregated seating arrangements on city buses.

City officials said the ordinance is patterned after the Florida pupil assignment law designed to preserve segregated schools, and it was believed it would withstand legal tests.

The pupil assignment law enacted by a special session of the Florida Legislature last summer allows county school boards to send students to schools for which they are believed best suited.

Mayor John Humphries said the city was cognizant that an emergency exists in Tallahassee in view of recent acts of violence and in view of recent moves by Negroes to force integration through the courts.

Constitution P. 13

"We urged the people of this community to refrain from any acts or demonstrations which will have the effect of increasing racial tension which would cause violence, disorder or further breaches of the peace of our city," he said.

The segregation section of the franchise agreement which was repealed today said:

"The company shall make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations providing for the segregation of the human races when more than one race is transported on the same bus."

Violence causes suspension— Tallahassee afoot as buses are halted

News P 23

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 2—(AP)—Tallahassee took a mandatory suspension of is bus service in stride today with white and Negro riders alike getting to work by walking, catching rides and using taxis.

There were a few reports of difficulties being encountered by early shift workers who were caught by surprise by the sudden action of Gov. Leroy Collins in ordering temporary suspension of service.

Dunn Pan.

ON THE WHOLE, however, most of those who normally depend upon city buses to get back and forth appeared to have made alternate arrangements.

The problem will be complicated tomorrow, though, with resumption of classes at Florida State University and Florida A&M University. Many of the approximately 10,000 students at the institutions have been away for the holidays.

First acts of violence in the city's long bus integration dispute prompted the governor to order temporary suspension of bus service yesterday.

He took the action under his emergency powers after a teen-age youth hurled rocks through the windows of a Negro leader's home and a Negro grocery was blasted with shotgun fire.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, who has headed the bus integration movement, said the suspension would work "a tremendous hardship" temporarily on some Negro bus riders who were unable to work out other means of transportation.

Wed 1-2-57

The governor's suspension order was to be discussed at a mass meeting of the Negro Inter Civic Council tonight.

How long the bus suspension will remain in effect no one could say.

STEELE SAID there had been some discussions about moves toward racial integration in other public facilities here but no definite plans for it.

There were no further incidents here last night.

The Cities Transit Co., complied immediately with the governor's ultimatum to suspend service but Steele angrily charged that events leading to the suspensioin were "concocted by the Florida White Citizens' Council."

Southeast News Panel Discusses Integration on 'Press Gallery'

Segregation problems of the Southeastern Empire were discussed on Press Gallery Sunday by six newsmen who contribute to the Sunday Atlanta Journal-Constitution's Southeastern Empire page.

Reporting on recent strife in the attempted integration of the Tallahassee bus lines, Charles Hesser, Miami Daily News staff writer, said the situation had been exaggerated. He said people outside of Florida's capital seem more worried about the situation than are Tallahassee residents.

Jay Jenkins of the Raleigh bureau of the Charlotte Observer, said in some cities of North Carolina segregation has not been enforced on city buses for several years. This has been done with little publicity or trouble, he added.

S. C. CALM

S. L. Latimer Jr., editor of The (Columbia, S. C.) State, said there is no excitement on the subject in South Carolina.

Everything is 100 per cent segregated on every level in Mississippi, Kenneth Toler of the Mississippi bureau of The Memphis Commercial-Appeal said. He said there was no agitation and expected the status quo to remain.

Fred Taylor, Birmingham News staff writer, said that racial troubles in Birmingham have quieted down. In Montgomery, he said, feeling is more intense and the situation more explosive.

AWAIT OUTCOME

He said that Negroes are now mostly riding in the rear of buses, awaiting disposition of the recent integration arrests.

Joe Hatcher, Nashville Tennessean staff writer, reported there have been no bus troubles so far in Tennessee. In schools, he said, a possible solution lies in local option, whereby east Tennessee might have integration while west Tennessee would continue on a segregated basis.

He said he believed there would have been no trouble in school integration in Clinton without outside interference.

TAX PICTURE VARIED

Switching to the tax situations that will face the various state legislatures when they convene, the newsmen presented a varied tax picture for the Southeast Empire.

While Latimer predicted an increase for South Carolina, Jenkins said North Carolina has a $38 million surplus and will probably lower taxes.

Hesser predicted a broadened base for Florida's 3 per cent sales tax. Toler said Mississippi ended the year with a surplus, Taylor and Hatcher said neither cuts nor increases were in sight for Alabama or Tennessee. Moderators on the WSB-TV program were Atlanta Constitution Editor Ralph McGill and Atlanta Journal Editor Jack Spalding. The Constitution and Journal are sponsors of the panel.

Seats Will Be Assigned To 'Preserve Good Order,' New Ordinance Declares

By The United Press

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 7.—The City Commission passed a law today that will in effect make drivers responsible for bus segregation by requiring them to assign seats so as to "preserve good order."

The ordinance passed at a hurried meeting made no mention of race or the custom of Negroes seating toward the rear of buses in this city where transit service is now suspended to prevent violence.

But the law provides that each driver will assign seats to "distribute the weight of the passengers" equally and to preserve "peace, tranquility, and good order among said passengers being so transported and of society generally."

Seeks To Avoid Violence

The measure also provides that seating regulations shall be designed so that the "life, limb, and person of passengers will not be endangered or threatened by violence or overt acts of violence."

It would be a violation of the law for any passenger to occupy a space other than that assigned him. He would be subject to arrest if he refused to take the assigned seat and refused to leave the bus when his 15-cent fare was refunded.

At the same time, a suit brought in Federal Court by the bus company seeking $100,000 damages from the City and a decision on the validity of segregation laws was dismissed. A Circuit Court suit brought by the City against the bus company to require segregated seating or the forfeit of its franchise was also dropped.

City Still Without Buses

But Tallahassee still is without service. Governor Leroy Collins, using special emergency powers, suspended service New Year's Day until emotions aroused by an integration drive by Negro leaders cool off.

Cities Transit, whose 10 buses were the target of the "sit-where-you-please" campaign by the Negro Inter-Civic Council, immediately won the franchise to furnish Tallahassee's public transportation needs under the new ordinance.

While Tallahassee moved to circumvent expected court rulings against local segregation, separation of the races officially ended on buses in Chattanooga, Tenn. But Negroes apparently kept to their old ways of going to the rear on a voluntary basis as the last boards designating white and Negro came down.

Some Integration Seen For Florida by Governor

Wed. 1-9-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins said in an inaugural address today that Florida is ready for some forms of racial integration such as mixed seating on buses, if it is not made compulsory.

While Florida schools cannot be desegregated in the "foreseeable future," Collins said on taking office for a second term, he believes buses here and in other Florida cities can be integrated without public violence.

But Collins lashed out at Negro leaders for using "boycotts, ultimatums and peremptory demands" in their drive in Tallahassee for a right to ride on city buses as the equals of whites.

Collins said that as governor he will "use every lawful power at my command to preserve law and order."

All bus service was halted in this city of 40,000 population by an order Collins issued Jan. 1 after flareup of violence marked a mass attempt of Negroes to sit in forward sections of the buses.

"I am convinced that the average white citizen does not object to non-segregated seating in buses any more than he objects to riding the same elevators with Negroes or patronizing the same stores," Collins said.

"But he does resent some of methods being used to achieve certain ends."

The City Commission yesterday in an effort to maintain segregation and remove the threat of violence so buses can run again passed an ordinance requiring drivers to assign seats to passengers. The ordinance does not mention racial segregation.

Board To Hear Negroes Talk May Void Bus Rule Appeal

The Miami City Commission promised Tuesday to meet with all Negro factions before deciding whether to carry its fight for bus segregation to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

It also would like to meet with Gov. LeRoy Collins and State Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin before making the decision.

The commission decided at an informal conference Tuesday to send official invitations to Collins and Ervin after Mayor Randall N. Christmas complained that "Miami is taking the brunt of what is primarily a state problem."

Federal Judge Emett C. Choate Tuesday set Feb. 4 as the date for hearing a motion for immediate decision on a suit filed by four Negro bus riders attacking the city bus segregation ordinances.

Choate already has said the ordinances are unconstitutional but gave the city time to file an answer, which it did. He is expected to rule officially against the city after the February hearing.

Christmas said the timetable gives the city about a month to decide whether it will appeal the order to the Circuit Court in New Orleans.

Representatives of the "conservative" element in the Negro community called on City Manager E. A. Evans Tuesday and asked for a conference.

Their spokesman, Father John E. Culmer, said the commission will be urged to forego any appeal in the interest of preventing violence. The time lapse, he said, would give lawless elements time to organize.

Commissioner Otis W. Shiver insisted that the commission talk with all Negro leaders, "including the so called radicals, who have been leading the fight for desegregation."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Tallahassee's law enforcement officials have been handed an ultimatum by Florida's Gov. Leroy Collins to stop the growing movement of violence directed against this city's Negro population.

Governor Collins warned, "This sort of thing is inexcusable and must stop. It is a matter that local authorities should attend to and I expect some effective action."

• Florida's Governor has the power to either call out the National Guard or suspend sheriffs who fail to carry out their duties. The Governor's warning came after shotgun blasts ripped into the home of the Rev. C. K. Steele, who has been heading the drive to integrate this city's public bus lines.

The Rev. Mr. Steele, whose home and church had been stoned before, told a mass meeting that if Negro children had invaded a white community here "they would be arrested immediately." Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said that "everything humanly possible is being done" to keep law and order.

Officers of Tallahassee's Inter-Civic Council have been riding buses in an effort to determine whether or not a legal test is needed to bring about the end of segregated seating.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins today ordered a temporary suspension of Tallahassee bus service in an effort to prevent further acts of violence during the tense bus seating dispute.

Collins took the action under emergency powers granted him by the special session of the Florida Legislature last summer.

The Legislature authorized the governor to take control of public facilities to prevent riots and disorders.

SHOTGUN BLASTS, ROCKS

The action came several hours after rocks were hurled through the window panes at the home of the Negro leader of Tallahassee's bus integration movement and shotgun blasts were fired into a Negro grocery store.

Tallahassee Bus Runs Suspended

Governor Declares State Of Emergency

Birm. Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan 1 (U.P.)—Gov. Leroy Collins declared a state of emergency today and suspended operation of Tallahassee's buses following several violent racial incidents. P.1

Collins used powers given him by a special legislative session earlier this year. He said he acted to "protect the public safety and preserve the public tranquility."

Unidentified persons tossed rocks through the windows of four Negro homes and blasted a grocery store with shotgun fire shortly before dawn today.

One of the homes hit by flying rocks was that of the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council which is spearheading a concerted drive to desegrate local buses. The shotgun blasts were directed at a Negro grocery store.

In Tallahassee buses were idle today because of the holiday. The rock-throwing and shotgun incidents were the first violence since the council ended a seven-month boycott of buses and Negroes went back with the avowed intention to sit anywhere they please.

Steele was the only one to see the rocks actually thrown. He said he saw a teen-aged white boy, dressed in a red shirt and blue jeans, toss the rocks through his windows. Some of the broken glass fell on a bed where a 15-year-old son, one of five children at home at the time, but the youth was not cut.

A White Citizens Council met here last night and called on Collins to use his emergency powers to halt bus integration.

Birmingham Ala. P.30

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 3—(AP)—A four-foot cross was burned last night in front of the church served by the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the Negroes who are campaigning for integrated seating on Tallahassee's buses.

Steele was at a church on the other side of town at the time, presiding at a meeting of the Negro Inter Civic Council which has spearheaded the integration drive.

Police were summoned by Mrs. Steele but were not in time to make any arrests.

It was the second incident directed at the Steeles, who live next door to the church, in as many days. The Steeles have five children. Rocks were thrown at their windows early Tuesday morning and four panes of glass were shattered.

MRS. STEELE and a neighbor knocked the cross over and threw water on it. It was wrapped with Spanish moss which police said had been soaked in kerosene.

Asked if the Steeles would be given special protection, Police Sgt. Eugene Christie said the incident is being investigated and "we're going to keep law and order in town."

Mrs. Steele had this to say about the cross burning:

"I'm a little afraid for my children but you can't fight anything that's in the dark. Whoever did it, I don't believe they could possibly know anything about what Christianity means."

Negroes End 7-Month Bus-Boycott In Tallahassee, Fla.

Globe & Independent Nashville, Tenn. P.M. 1-4-57

Tallahassee, Fla.—The Negroes of Tallahassee were expected to return to the buses unsegregated Monday, Dec. 24, after a seven month old boycott of the Cities Transit System because of its seating pattern along racial lines. The executive Secretary of the City has sent telegrams to Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Governor Leroy Collins of Florida, Attorney General Richard Irvin of Florida and U. S. District Attorny Harold Carlswell stating that Negroes are returning to the buses on an unsegrated seating arrangement. The telegrams also stated that the Negroes are seeking unqualified assistance in maintaining order and preventing violence on the part of the City Commission and Police department. The Negroes are encouraging that the law be applied equitably and the peace maintained.

The ICC has been preparing the people for a few weeks with the idea of returning to the buses. At the last mass meeting a pantomine was presented to show how to act and respond in case of an unpleasant incident. The ICC also printed leaflets to the people in regard to the court order. The Negroes were reminded not to strike, curse or push even if they were struck, pushed, or cursed. Negroes were also encouraged to sit to the front of the bus rather than in the rear to break the seating pattern which they are so accustomed to.

The Negroes and the ICC were waiting for the Federal Court order to arrive in Tallahassee and the Conference of Attorney General Herbert Brownell with the 34 Southern District Attornies before making an active move. These two acts are now in the past and from here on the law will be put to test.

The bus boycott and the birth of the Inter-Civic Council began May 28, 1956, the result of the arrest of two Florida A&M University coeds who sat besides a white woman on an over crowded bus. In a few days the boycott was 100 per cent effective and the bus company decided not to operate with the loss of more than 60 per cent of its trade. The buses did not ride in Tallahassee for three weeks, but at the urging of the City Commission and the Chamber of Commerce they came back to the streets in August with Negro drivers on the predominantly Negro route and promises of more courteous treatment. In the meanwhile the police arrested all the members of the Executive Committee and members of the ICC on the charge of running cars for hire who were sentenced and fined $500 or sixty days in jail, plus a suspended sentence of sixty days. At present the ICC is still in the process of appealing this case.

December 23, 1956—The Negroes of Tallahassee voted unanimously to return to the buses on an integrated basis. Leaflets advocating the same basic principles which Jesus taught two thousand years ago on Mt. Sinai were passed out among 500 people at the mass meeting tonight and encouraged not to retaliate and keep their balance spiritually, mentally and physically in spite of any abuse. P.4

December 24, 1956, Negro ministers, leaders and members of the inter-Civil Council began seating themselves wherever a seat was available and there were no incidents of violence and rioting as had been prophesied. The only scuffle today was between Bus Company Manager Carter and a television man. Carter did not want any pictures taken on the buses.

December 25, 1956—The bus company suspended operations on Christmas Day.

December 26, 1956—Integration on the buses has a new interpretation. As long as no Negro sits besides a white person, he is not considered as riding integrated. So few people ride the buses in Tallahassee that it has not been necessary for a Negro to sit besides a white person.

After a seven hour meeting Monday the City Commission ordered the bus company to maintain segregation on the buses. The bus company has announced that its lawyers will file suit in the federal courts at the end of the week to get a clear statement in relation to Tallahassee of the recent Supreme Court ruling on bus segregation.

The Negroes are still riding on an integrated basis without conflict. The ICC is still encouraging the Negroes to sit more to the front of the buses rather than to the rear. The ICC issued a statement stating that they will not pay the same fare as others and be segregated illegally and unfairly We will either ride in peace or walk in protest.

According to the ICC the city needs a bus transportation system and we are willing to do all in our power to see to it that the city's transit company will thrive and grow. On the basis of our experiences this week riding the buses, we are launching a "Ride The Bus Campaign." Mr. Dan Speed, the former chairman of the transportation committee, has been named chairman of this campaign. He gave a button to all members of the ICC who had ridden the bus integrated. Ironically these are the same buttons which the whites were using this summer when they were trying to save the company financially. The Negroes got the buttons from the bus company and hopes to have about 500 Negroes wearing buttons for riding integrated buses.

At the mass meeting Rev. C. K. Steele read Brownell's interpretation of the recent Supreme Court ruling emphasizing the fines and sentences which goes along with a discriminatory act against a person. He said that no white man hated a Negro so much that he is willing to go to Atlanta or Leavenworth (i. e. the federal penitentiary) over us.

December 27, 1956—The City Commission voted last night to revoke the franchise of the Cities Transit Co. for failing to enforce segregation on city buses according to a city ordinance.

This morning nine bus drivers and the bus manager were arrested for attempting to run a bus line without a franchise. Again this is ironical call for the city arrested ICC officers and drivers for running a car pool this summer without a franchise. All bus drivers arrested were white, although the line has four Negro drivers.

Tallahassee Leaders Receive Abusive Calls

World P. 1 Wed. 1-2-57 Birm., Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — "Threatening and abusive" telephone calls by segregation advocates were reported Saturday to have been received by Negro leaders of the Tallahassee bus integration movement.

The leaders said they hadn't reported any of the calls to police because they believed they were, in the main, the work of "cranks." Thy said they had been receiving calls since Thursday night after a planned bus ride demonstration was called off.

Rev. J. Rollins said his life had been threatened by a caller who warned him against riding the buses. He said, however, that he boarded a bus the following day.

Rev. K. S. Dupont said he had been threatended with a house bombing.

Some leaders said their phones had been ringing almost constantly since Thursday. They said the calls continued throughout the night and often the phone would ring, and the caller would hang up when they answered.

There was little if any activity today with business generally below normal and no reports of Negroes riding in front seats, but leaders said they would be riding up front on Monday.

Cook Will Draft Bus-Closing Law Like Florida's

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 1-3-57

A law similar to one used by Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida to close the Tallahassee bus system will be drafted for Georgia, Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said Wednesday.

Cook said he had talked with Florida Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin by telephone Wednesday morning and was promised a copy of the Florida statute.

The proposed Georgia law will be drafted in time for the coming General Assembly session, Cook said.

The attorney general said he will submit the bill to Gov. Griffin for final approval.

The governor probably has necessary police power to close a transit system in case of emergency under existing law, Cook said. He said he felt, however, that a more specific law would put the state on firmer legal ground.

Tallahassee Busses Halted By Governor

Advertiser P. 1 Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP) —Gov. Leroy Collins today ordered a temporary suspension of Tallahassee bus service in an effort to prevent further acts of violence during the tense bus seating dispute.

Wed. 1-2-57

Collins took the action under emergency powers granted him by the special session of the Florida Legislature last summer.

The Legislature authorized the governor to take control of public facilities to prevent riots and disorders.

The action came several hours after rocks were hurled through the window panes at the home of the Negro leader of Tallahassee's bus integration movement and shotgun blasts were fired into a Negro grocery store.

The governor's proclamation said that continued operation of the system under existing conditions "may well endanger life, limb and property of the citizens residing therein, and will cause or tend to cause further breaches of the peace and will endanger the peace and good order of society."

In a statement accompanying the proclamation Collins said?

"In this emotionally charged atmosphere and in the face of threats and overt acts of violence, there is only one logical and effective answer for the present and that is the suspension of bus operations. . .

"I am convinced the suspension of operations until such time as the emergency passes is in the public interest. I confidently believe that, without the opportunity for continuing agitation by those who actually seem to want to provoke incidents, a sound and wise and harmonious solution can be worked out within a relatively short time."

The governor's proclamation was filed with the secretary of state's office and became effective immediately.

It was the first time the governor had invoked the emergency powers granted him by the Legislature.

Two shotgun blasts also were fired through the front glass window of Speed Bros. grocery store in the Negro section but Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said it was uncertain whether the shooting was connected with the bus situation.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, reported to police that chunks of concrete shattered four windows at his home a half hour after he received an anonymous telephone call.

Steele said the caller, who appeared to be a teen-ager, told him "Steele, the city buses are fixing to run." After the rock throwing, he said he could see a white youth running from the scene.

No one was injured.

The Speed brothers are cousins of Dan Speed, who has headed the car pool operated by Negroes during the bus boycott.

The Cities Transit Co. complied immediately with the governor's order, and directed buses to stop rolling at 6 p.m.

The leader of the Negro integration movement, the Rev. C. K. Steele, denounced the governor's action. He said the actions leading up to the suspension were "concocted by the Florida White Citizens Council."

"I think it fits into a pattern, "the vandalism last night and the people of the White Citizens Council were trying to impress the governor that there is a state of emergency.

"I think it is tragic that an agency of government would tend to pacify the citizens council rather than upholding law and order."

To preserve segregation on buses—

Reserved seat plan ordered in Tallahassee

News Birm., Ala. Wed 1-8-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 8 ~~(AP)—A unique~~ seating plan was ordered by the City Commission today in an effort to preserve traditional segregation on Tallahassee buses.

The plan allows drivers to assign riders to specific seats for which they are handed tickets.

Passengers will be required to occupy the assigned seats under penalty of a possible $500 fine or a 60-day jail sentence unless they elect to have their fares refunded.

P. 12

THE COMMISSION yesterday substituted the plan for the segregation section of the city bus franchise which the city officials said now had "doubtful validity."

The Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of a Negro organization working for integrated seating, declined comment on the action.

The new system can't be inaugurated at once, since city buses still are suspended under an order of Gov. Leroy Collins. No date has been set for buses to resume.

An aid of Collins said the governor didn't have any plans to restore service today or tomorrow when large crowds will be in Tallahassee for Collins' inauguration for a new four-year term.

AN ATTORNEY for Cities Transit, Inc., which operates the buses, told the City Commission the concern would accept the new plan for seating arrangements.

Mayor John Humphries said an emergency exists in Tallahassee in view of recent acts of violence and in view of moves by Negroes to force integration.

Tallahassee Bus Service Is Halted To Avert Seating-Dispute Violence

Governor Uses Special Powers

Louisville, Ky. p. 3

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 1 (AP)—Governor LeRoy Collins today ordered a temporary suspension of Tallahassee bus service in an effort to prevent further acts of violence during the tense bus-seating dispute.

Collins took the action under emergency powers granted him by the special session of the Florida Legislature last summer.

The Legislature authorized the Governor to take control of public facilities to prevent riots and disorders.

Order Follows Violence

The action came several hours after rocks were hurled through window panes at the home of the Negro leader of Tallahassee's bus-integration movement and shotgun blasts were fired into a Negro grocery store.

Cities Transit Company complied immediately with the Governor's order, and directed buses to stop rolling at 6 p.m.

The leader of the Negro integration movement, the Rev. C. K. Steele, denounced the Governor's action. He said the actions leading up to the suspension were "concocted by the Florida White Citizens Council."

Says Persons Endangered

The Governor's proclamation ordering the suspension said continued operation of the system under existing conditions "may well endanger life, limb, and property of the citizens residing therein, and will cause or tend to cause further breaches of the peace and will endanger the peace and good order of society."

In a statement accompanying the proclamation, Collins said:

"In this emotionally charged atmosphere and in the face of threats and overt acts of violence, there is only one logical and effective answer for the present and that is the suspension of bus operations. . . .

'In Public Interest'

"I am convinced the suspension of operations until such time as the emergency passes is in the public interest. I confidently believe that, without the opportunity for continuing agitation by those who actually seem to want to provoke incidents, a sound and wise and harmonious solution can be worked out within a relatively short time."

It was the first time the Governor had invoked the emergency powers granted him by the Florida Legislature for dealing with matters growing out of segregation disputes.

Shots Fired Into Store

Two shogtun blasts were also fired through the front glass window of Speed Brothers grocery store in the Negro section. Police Chief Frank Stoutamire said it was uncertain whether the shooting was connected with the bus situation.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic Council, reported to police that chunks of concrete shattered four windows at his home half an hour after he received an anonymous telephone call.

Both incidents are being investigated, Chief Stoutamire said, but no arrests have been made.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 1.—(UP) — Officials here and at Montgomery will meet Wednesday to seek solutions to problems confronting the two racially troubled cities.

City officials here are scheduled to meet to consider ways to block Negroes from asking Federal courts to declare local bus segregation laws unconstitutional.

At Montgomery, the City Commission will discuss whether or not to lift the 5 p.m. curfew imposed on the newly integrated city buses after they had been the targets of snipers.

Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner Robert E. Lindbergh said he plans to meet with officials of the legal department to consider dropping charges of segregation law violations against 21 Negroes who defied a city ordinance and rode in the white sections of city buses.

Their Recorders Court trials are set for Thursday, but a delay appears likely.

The Rev. J. Metz Rollins, Jr., a leader in the Tallahassee, Fla. bus integration movement, received a telephoned threat on his life last weekend. An anonymous caller told the young Presbyterian minister "You better not ride (the buses) tomorrow . . . if you do, you'll be dead." The threat came after announcement that Tallahassee leaders would ride city buses in unsegregated manner.

Drivers Assign Seating In New Segregation Plan

P.M.

NO MONTGOMERY RUNS

Memphis Press-Scimitar

By The United Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 12.—A bus driver told a young white girl to "take seat 1" up front Saturday and directed a Negro to seat 23 in the rear as Tallahassee's buses went back to operation under a new plan designed to maintain segregation.

A recently-enacted city ordinance gave bus drivers full responsibility for seating passengers to ensure "the maximum health and safety of passengers to the end that life and limb will not be endangered by violence."

Whites Get Front Seats

The drivers doled out seat numbers to each pasenger, giving white riders the front seats 1-20 and Negroes the back seats from 20 up. There was no immediate protest from Negro riders.

The integration issue was just as quiet at other points around troubled Dixie.

No buses ran in Montgomery, Ala., where a Supreme Court ruling wiped out segregated seating. Transit service was cut off for the second time after a wave of violence including dynamitings and sniper fire at buses.

In Birmingham, police received a report that a group of armed Negroes had desegregated a bus coming from Montgomery but an investigation showed a drunken Negro had started a brawl among other Negroes at the rear of the bus.

In Atlanta, six Negro ministers awaited possible indictment for violating Georgia's segregation laws. At the end of a two-day meeting in the Gateway City, integration leaders from nine Southern states wired an appeal to President Eisenhower to intervene personally to end bus segregation and a Southern "state of terror" over the racial issue.

Hagerty Admits Receipt

White House press secretary James C. Hagerty said in Washington that the telegram had been received. He said President Eisenhower had urged a stronger civil rights program in his State of the Union message to Congress which represents all states.

The Negroes' appeal brought the comment from R. Carter Pittman, president of the pro-segregation States' Rights Council of Georgia, that "there is no use for anyone to try to compete with those Negro preachers."

"They can't be beat," Mr. Pittman said. "They didn't have to hunt headlines. The headlines hunted them. They called on Mayor Hartsfield (of Atlanta) and he delivered, according to plan. That encouraged them to believe that an approach to the President, the Vice President and attorney general would meet with equal success."

Bus Seating Plan Called 'Iniquitous'

Star P.10-A
Wed. 1-9-57
Washington D.C.

TLLAHASSE, Fla., Jan. 9 (AP). —A plan under which Tallahassee bus riders will be told what seat to take has been assailed by Negro integrationists as an "iniquitous scheme" and a "crime against the United States."

The Tallahasse City Commission enacted the new seat assignment regulation as a means of preserving racial segregation on the buses. Commissioners said previous segregation requirements of the bus company's franchise were of "doubtful validity."

"The plan is merely a delaying tactic of the City Commission to evade the spirit and letter of the United States Supreme Court decisions," said officials of the Negro Intercivic Council.

"Deprivatio nof Rights"

The council, which has spearheaded the campaign by Tallahassee Negroes for integrated bus seating, declared it was "clear that the enforcement of any segregation law amounts to a wilful deprivation of constitutional rights and, in addition, constitutes a crime against the United States.

"We cannot and will not subscribe to this iniquitous scheme nor anything less than full compliance with the Supreme Court's decision for to do so would make us parties to the violation of the laws of the United States."

$500 Fine or Jail Term

Under the new plan, drivers will assign passengers to seats as they get on the buses. Riders who sit elsewhere will be subject to a $500 fine or 60 days in jail.

A tryout of the plan will be delayed until Gov. Leroy Collins puts the buses back in service. He issued an executive order taking them off the streets New Year's Day after a Negro leader's home was stoned and a shotgun blast was fired at a Negro grocery store.

From Christmas eve until suspension of service Negroes had been "riding integrated" without official interference. The Governor has not indicated when he will permit the buses to start running again.

Negroes Flay Seating Plan In Tallahassee

Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP) — Negro leaders today denounced the new bus seat assignment plan ordered by the City Commission as an "iniquitous scheme" to delay integration and declared they would not subscribe to it.

The unique plan was enacted by the commission yesterday to preserve traditional segregation on Tallahassee city buses. It replaces a segregation section of the bus franchise which was repealed as having "doubtful validity."

The plan allows drivers to assign riders to specific seats for which they are handed tickets. Passengers are required to occupy these seats under penalty of a possible $500 fine or 60-day jail sentence unless they elect to have their fares refunded.

DELAYING TACTICS

A statement of Negro Inter Civic Council directors handed out by the Rev. C. K. Steele said the announced purpose of the council to ride integrated remained unchanged despite the new regulation.

"The plan is merely a delaying tactic of the City Commission to evade the spirit and letter of the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions," the statement said.

"It is equally clear that the enforcement of any segretation law amounts to a willful deprivation of constitutional rights and, in addition, constitutes a crime against the United States.

"We cannot and will not subscribe to this iniquitous scheme, nor anything less than full compliance with the Supreme Court's decision, for to do so would make us parties to the violation of the laws of the United States."

Inaugural Speech Poetic, But Firm

Other Pictures, Stories, On Page 14-A

By JOHN BOYLES

TALLAHASSEE — In poetic phrases and strong terms, Gov. LeRoy Collins stood up to be counted on the segregation issue Tuesday.

He told an inaugural crowd that Florida must adopt a "constructive" attitude and realize the U.S. Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land.

He said he is convinced "that the average white citizen does not object to non-segregated seating in buses — anymore than he objects to riding the same elevators with Negroes or patronizing the same stores."

"As I see it," he said, "we must side with truth even though now we may share her wretched crust. History requires that we not stand aside, coward-like, waiting for the multitude to make virtue of our position."

Taking the oath of office as the only Florida governor to succeed himself, Collins made his boldest statements on racial problems and predicted that the proposed new state constitution would provide therapy for economic growing pains.

He received the oath from Justice Campbell Thornal, one of his appointees to the Supreme Court, and then delivered a 5,500 word speech from a platform in front of the capital and overlooking the Supreme Court building.

The governor told Floridians that in searching for the answer to racial differences "we should begin by being honest with ourselves, by recognizing realities which exist.

"Man's greatest failures have come when he has refused to recognize the realities of a changed situation and failed to understand that to admit the existence of a reality is not necessarily to welcome or even agree with it."

Collins said the average white citizen resents some of the methods being used to achieve certain ends by integrationists.

"Boycotts, ultimatums and peremptory demands can never achieve what persuasion, peaceful petitions and normal judicial procedures can do for the Negro race," Collins declared.

But he said wise solutions can be found only "if the white citizens will face up to the fact that the Negro does not now have equal opportunities; that he is morally and legally entitled to progress more rapidly, and that a full good faith effort should be made forthwith to help him move forward in the improvement of his standards."

Herald P.14-A

"Attitudes become increasingly important as we deal with the whole field of segregation, including those types of it outside the public school. And we should admit that our attitude generally in the past has been obstructive all along the line," the governor said.

"It is not easy to say, but is nevertheless true and I feel that I should stand up and say it.

"The Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land. And this nation's strength and Florida's strength are bottomed upon the basic reverse premise that ours is a land of the law," Collins said.

The governor said he believes that legislation enacted last summer to govern assignment of pupils in the public schools will enable Florida to "live honestly, honorably and peacefully with the two great realities facing us: The court decision and the social and economic conditions existing in the South."

Because of these laws, the governor said "our traditions and customs of segregation in the public schools can be expected to prevail for the foreseeable future."

He said the court decisions do not make "integration of our schools compulsory. They recognize to a degree local conditions and problems.

"Mutual respect and confidence on the part of both races are essential," Collins said, but he declared "it is folly for anyone to expect judicial dictation to compel social adjustment."

"First and foremost among governmental reforms, we need a constitution," the governor said, to cope with "growing pains" and to avoid "aches of stagnation."

Touching on reapportionment, the governor said "our legislators, I feel, will recognize our need for an up-to-date charter.

"They will take up this significant task with the benefit of months of careful work by the Constitution Advisory Commission.

"I feel that fair minds, conscious of their responsibility for the future of Florida, surely will settle the areas of likely controversy."

In other areas of government the governor called for expanded highway safety, educational facilities, improved state correctional institutions, a board mental health program, continued industrial development, the furthering of labor-management harmony and encouragement of good community planning.

Chief Declares Anti-Negro Vandalism Must End

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 17. —(AP) — Police Chief Frank Stoutamire declared angrily Thursday that shooting and stoning of homes of Negro integration leaders has got to stop.

"I don't stand for that sort of thing," the veteran officer said after receiving reports that windows of a Negro home were smashed by gunfire and a brick Wednesday night.

The two cases of violence were the latest in a series which erupted after Negroes halted a long bus boycott and started "riding integrated" on Christmas Eve.

"That's not my kind of law enforcement," Chief Stoutamire declared.

"I'm meeting my policemen shift by shift and telling them I expect them to do something about it. I'm going to tell them to find out who is doing it and bring them into court."

Chief Stoutamire has said repeatedly he believed that vandalism aimed against leaders of the Negro Inter-Civic Council is the work of teenagers.

"I don't care who is doing it, whether it's my boy or your boy, it's got to stop," he said.

Hit by the latest acts of violence were the home of Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, and the car of Dr. M. C. Williams, secretary of the council.

Gov. LeRoy Collins suspended bus service in Tallahassee New Year's Day after Mr. Steele's home was stoned, a cross was burned on Mr. Steele's lawn and a shotgun blast was fired into a Negro crocery. The Governor ordered resumption of bus service last Friday, expressing hope that the restoration would test "the good will prevailing among and between the people of both races."

Mixed Bus Ride Planned, A & M Student Testifies

Herald Thurs. 2-7-57 Miami, Fla. P.10-A

By JOHN BOYLES
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Five students were given $1 each to finance an integrated city bus ride in violation of a Tallahassee city ordinance, a witness testified Wednesday before the legislative committee investigating activities of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in Florida.

Harold Owens of Tampa, Florida A. & M. freshman, told the probers that Daniel Speed, an officer of the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council, handed him and four others including two white students, the money when they met in the council's office in Speed's store on the morning of the ride.

The students would sit together and if nothing was said to them, they would get off the bus and transfer to another bus at a downtown point, Owens said.

"You were determined to get arrested before you stopped, weren't you?" Mark Hawes, the committee's counsel, asked Owens.

"That's it," the Negro student answered.

Owens said he and the other students knew the council would provide legal services if they were arrested. Joseph Spagna of St. Petersburg, an FSU student, and Johnny Herndon and Leonard Speed, A & M students, are under arrest for violating the ordinance.

Jon Folsom, an FSU student from Jacksonville, who is a material witness in the bus ordinance violation case, invoked the Fifth Amendment and declined to tell the legislators what took place on the bus when his companions were arrested.

Folsom, who said he is not a member of the NAACP, denied testimony by Joan Boardman that he (Folsom) telephoned Boardman Jan. 18 and asked him to take part in a bus ride the next day.

Earlier, Boardman, barred from reregistering at FSU for violating a campus segregation rule, told Rep. W. C. (Cliff) Herrell that he is not now and has never been a member of the Communist Party.

Herrell posed the question after the committee reversed an earlier decision to avoid any reference to communism.

Boardman, a member of the NAACP for 11 months, said elimination of laws against inter-marriage would be "considered the target of any group working against racial discrimination."

He said under questioning he was not aware of any specific NAACP activity to encourage mixed marriages.

"I believe there are cases testing anti-miscegenation laws in federal courts," Boardman told the probers' third day of public hearings.

The 24-year-old Iowan said since he joined the organization "I have urged students of the two universities (FSU and Florida A & M) to get in contact with each other because of common interests. They are not working at cross-purposes to bring about the NAACP program relating to integration."

Boardman said he had appealed his suspension from FSU to President Doak S. Campbell and testified he had not decided whether he would file a court suit to obtain reinstatement in the graduate school.

He said his parents live in Fort Dodge, Iowa, that he holds an AB degree from the University of Chicago, an MS degree from Iowa State University and that he has been working toward a Ph. D degree in theoretical physics at FSU under a $150 a month assistanceship awarded him by the National Research Council.

Boardman said that to his knowledge "I am the only member of the NAACP on the FSU campus."

Postpones hearing of 6 students

Afro-American Sat. 2-2-57 Baltimore, Md. P.2

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (ANP) —A city judge here has postponed "for the time being" any action against the five college students and a state employee arrested last Saturday for defying local bus segregation laws.

The six— three from Florida A and M College, two from Florida State University and a white state department worker— appeared in court Monday but were told the case has been put off indefinitely.

A crowded courtroom, including many colored spectators, appeared to be disappointed when news of the postponement was announced.

FOLLOWING THEIR arrest, the six young men were taken to police headquarters and questioned for more than two hours.

The colored students gave their names as Leonard Speed, son of Dan Speed, chairman of the Ride the Bus Campaign in Tallahassee, and John Herndon, a native of Lake Park, Ga. A third student was unidentified.

ARRESTED WHITES were Jon Folsom, Miami; Joe Epogna of St. Petersburg, both university students; and Jim Kennedy, a clerk at the state road department.

* * *

THEY TOLD police they met on the Florida A and M campus and had come to the city together on a "sight seeing" tour. They admitted they would not sit where the bus driver placed them, as is required by a new city ordinance.

Following a Federal Court decision declaring Tallahassee bus segregation illegal, city and bus officials agreed upon an "assigned seating" plan whereby the bus driver is given the right to assign seats to passengers.

Francisco Rodriguez, Tampa lawyer, and attorney for the NAACP, said the arrests were definitely not set up to create a "test case" against the new bus seating plan.

Also denying any part in the Saturday incident was the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council, a colored organization supporting bus integration.

THE ARRESTS topped off a week of bus integration troubles which resulted in Gov. Leroy Collins threatening to take "immediate and effective" action to halt further anti-colored violence in the state capital.

Collins, who recently suspended bus services for almost two weeks after a flare-up of racial troubles, issued the statement after shotgun blasts shattered windows in the Baptist church of the Rev. C. K. Steele, head of the Inter-Civic Council.

"This sort of thing is inexcusable and must stop. It is a matter that local authorities should attend to and I expect some effective action." Collins said.

White Students, Negroes To Appear Tomorrow

Sun. 2-3-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Feb. 2. —(UP)—A state legislative committee investigating the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's activities in Florida Saturday summoned Negro leaders spearheading the bus integration drive here and both white and Negro college students to a Monday hearing.

The hearing was called by State Representative Henry Land, who said it would be open to the public.

He said subpenas were issued for 20 to 25 persons over the state, most of them Negroes. Representative Land declined to make the names public since some of the subpenas will not actually be delivered until Sunday.

However, a number of officials of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, which has been leading the bus desegregation drive, and four university students who participated said they received summonses.

They included Joe Spagna, 25, white Florida State University student, and Negro university students John Herndon, 26, and D. Leonard Speed, 24, who face trial in City Court for violating the city's new bus seating ordinance. The students have asked Federal Court to call off their trial and declare the ordinance invalid.

Spagna said officials also had a subpena for John Boardman, Florida State graduate student from Iowa, who was barred from enrolling for next semester's work because he took three Negro students to a party on the campus. Boardman said he is a member of the NAACP.

The act creating the committee authorizes it to investigate "any person or group . . . whose principles or activities include a course of action which would constitute violence or violation of the laws of the state."

Bus Trial Today May Reach Far

Herald P.2-A Thurs. 2-7-57 Miami, Fla.

City Judge Mitchell Goldman hears a simple disorderly conduct case today which may have far-reaching effects toward eliminating segregation on Miami buses.

The case involves Laura Beckton of 3192 NW 42nd St., a Negro, who has accused a Miami Transit Co. driver, J. H. Mehaffey, of disorderly conduct and creating a disturbance in forcing her to take a rear seat.

The incident occurred last week when a white passenger complained to Mehaffey when Mrs. Beckton took a seat near the front of the bus. Over her complaints and those of other Negro passengers, Mehaffey moved her to the rear.

Negro leaders who declined to be named said Wednesday that the case "could very well" serve as the stepping stone toward new efforts to force integration.

They said it was possible that similar charges against other bus drivers would be brought if Judge Goldman finds Mehaffey guilty.

Boycotters hit back

By S. F. YETTE
AFRO Staff Correspondent

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A lengthy and sharply-worded letter sent to Gov. Leroy Collins by the Inter-Civic Council of Tallahassee Friday night called the Governor's suspension of bus service in this city New Year's day an attempt "to delay or frustrate the desegregation of public transportation facilities."

The letter, drawn up by the council's executive committee in a Friday afternoon meeting, stated that the council was "surprised and quite disappointed" by the action.

"It appears to have been inspired and pressured by the segregation proponents represented by the White Citizens Council," the statement said.

Governor Collins was not available for comment.

Pat. 1/12/57

THE GOVERNOR'S use of his police powers to suspend the city's transit services followed the stoning of four homes of colored families, coupled with the request of the White Citizens Council that the buses be stopped to prevent violence and disorder.

Immediately after the Tuesday evening suspension of bus services, the Governor said that he had not received the White Citizens Council resolution, and that it had no effect on his decision.

The Governor was granted an extension of his police powers by the last legislature of the state which foresaw a need for broader powers for the top executive to deal with probable school integration suits.

FOLLOWING THE bus suspension, Governor Collins released a statement to a daily paper here in which he blamed "irresponsible colored leadership" and "rabid pro-segregationists" for the action he took.

He said: "Irresponsible Negro leadership, not satisfied with quiet acceptance, has sought to force the issue (integration), through demonstrations and staged occasions.

"The result has been to focus attention on their attitude. It is one of challenge and not sincerity; for these leaders have not been on the buses for the normal purpose of getting somewhere in Tallahassee, but rather for getting somewhere in the magazines."

"ON THE other extreme," he said, "rabid pro-segregationists have engaged in intimidation and the result has been that shots have been fired and rocks thrown in this community of fine people, all of whom deserve the fullest measure of protection."

Though the Inter-Civic Council was not named in the Governor's statement, they took the charge directly, and sought to answer in their letter Friday night.

"For the attempt to assert our constitutional right of using the public transportation facilities without regard to race, you have dubbed us irresponsible extremists. Not many people in other parts of the nation and the world will agree with you.

* * *

"RATHER, THEY will doubt the responsibility of Florida's Governor in aggravating the situation by depriving everyone of the convenience of public transportation."

The council letter further disagreed with a statement which it attributed to the Governor that "the lifting of the suspension should depend upon a change of attitudes" of both extremes.

* * *

"THE ATTITUDE of the cross burners, race bigots and intimidators will be changed only by bold and forthright enforcement of the law," the council letter stated.

In this regard, the 1500-word letter called upon the Governor "for forthwith revocation of your suspension order," and demanded "effective and forthright law enforcement."

The Governor had stated earlier that he felt that the bus stoppage could be worked out "in a short time," but that the return of services will depend on improved community "attitudes," observed through his "day-by-day" observation.

CAMPUS RULES VIOLATED

FSU Student Facing Ouster For Invitation To Negroes

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 1-27-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 26 (UP)—Florida State University today asked a graduate student to withdraw from the all-white institution for bringing three Negro students for bringing three Negro the campus in violation of university regulations.

The student, John Boardman of Fort Dodge, Iowa, who regularly attends mass Negro integration meetings in this racially-troubled Florida capital, charged the action amounted to "suspension" and he would fight it.

University President Doak S. Campbell said the principle reason for the school's move was his action in bringing the Negroes to a holiday party. Boardman had been told it "would be in violation of university regulations."

"When asked specifically whether in the future he would be willing to abide by regulations, Mr. Boardman said he had no intention of abiding by any regulations concerning racial tension," Campbell said.

"After full investigation, the university came to the conclusion it had no alternative but to ask him to withdraw at the end of the present semester.

"He was permitted to finish out this semester merely as a concession so that he might secure his credits," Campbell added.

Boardman told newsmen earlier that he was asked not to enroll for the second semester beginning Feb. 6 for violating the rules barring racial mixing and also for publicly advocating election of a Negro to a city post.

He said he retained Francisco Rodriquez, Tampa attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as his counsel.

IMMEDIATE SUSPENSION

Dean of Students R. R. Oglesby confirmed Boardman's statement that the student was told not to enroll next month but added that Boardman broke faith by talking to newsmen without advising him first and "I intend to recommend immediate suspension."

Mon. 1-27-57

Boardman said Dean of Students R. R. Oglesby called him to his office this morning and advised him he was not wanted at the university. He said Oglesby stated he could complete the present semester but would not be accepted next semester.

The graduate student, who attends Florida State on a $150 a month assistantship from the National Research Council, said Oglesby gave him two reasons, including Boardman's statement at a Negro Inter-Civic Council mass-meeting Wednesday night urging white Tallahasseans to vote for the Rev. K. S. DuPont in next month's city elections.

SECOND REASON

The second reason, Boardman said, dates back to December when he brought three Negroes from Florida A&M University to a Christmas Party of the International Club on the Florida State campus.

Boardman said the International Club has many foreign members and the three Negroes he brought were from the Bahamas and Panama. He admitted he knew of a Board of Control regulation prohibiting mixing of Florida State and A&M students on the campus.

Boardman is working for a doctorate in physics. He got his masters from Iowa College and his parents live at Fort Dodge. He said he chose Florida State because of its excellent physics department.

He said "Dean Oglesby claimed my support of DuPont was a violation of a Board of Control policy" warning students of both universities here to stay out of the racial dispute.

Florida schools cannot be desegrated in the "foreseeable future," Gov. Collins said on taking office for a second term. But he said he believes buses here and in other Florida cities can be integrated without public furor or violence.

Gov. Collins lashed out at Negro leaders for using "boycotts, ultimatums and peremptory demands" in their drive in Tallahassee for a right to ride on city buses as the equals of whites.

He said he will "use every lawful power at my command to preseive law and order."

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 8.—A unique seating plan was ordered by the City Commission today in an effort to preserve traditional segregation on Tallahassee city buses.

The plan allows drivers to assign riders to specific seats for which they are handed tickets. Passengers will be required to occupy the assigned seats under penalty of a possible $500 fine or a 60-day jail sentence unless they elect to have their fares refunded.

The new system can not be inaugurated for a few days at least, however, since city buses are still suspended under a New Year's Day order of Gov. Leroy Collins. No date has been set for buses to resume.

3 Go Into Court In Bus Law Test

Evening Star Washington, D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 21 (AP)—Three university students—two Negroes and one white—pleaded not guilty in City Court today to charges of violating Tallahassee's new bus seat assignment law.

p.23-A

Municipal Judge John Rudd did not set a trial date immediately.

Mon. 1-21-57

The courtroom was packed, many spectators being Negroes.

Francisco A. Rodriguez, Tampa Negro attorney representing the three, entered their pleas.

The three who were charged were among a group of six—three of them white—arrested Saturday on charges that they refused to move to seats assigned them on a Cities Transit, Inc. bus.

The seat assignment law was adopted by the City Commission after it eliminated the requirement of segregated seating in the bus company's franchise as having "doubtful legality."

Mr. Rodriquez warned last night of "the possibility of reprisals" against the three white youths who helped test the bus seating ordinance.

He told a meeting of the Intercivic Council, Negro organization sponsoring a drive to integrate the buses, that the council would protect the white youths "against persecution."

The three white youths who took part in the test were accorded an ovation when they were introduced to the meeting.

Joe Spagna of St. Petersburg was the only one of the white youths charged. He is a Florida State University student. Leonard D. Speed and Johnny Herndon, students at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes, also were charged.

The three others were released, but told to appear in court as material witnesses.

Florida Judge Delays Ruling On Jurisdiction Of Bus Suit

Advertiser Wed. 2-13-57 P. 14

Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Feb. 12 (AP) — Federal Judge Dozier Devane today delayed a decision on whether he will take jurisdiction of a suit challenging constitutionality of Tallahassee's bus seat assignment Ordinance.

The veteran jurist said he wouldn't hand down a ruling until after the municipal court trial of two Negro university students who brought the federal court test.

Devane said it might be that the constitutionality issue will be settled during the course of the trials of Johnny Herndon and Leonard D. Speed.

Herndon and Speed, students at Florida A and M University, were arrested Jan. 19 with a white student from Florida State University on a charge of refusing to move to seats assigned them by the bus driver.

The seat assignment ordinance requires drivers to assign riders to specific seats on the basis of weight distribution, possibility of violence and other factors.

No trial date has been set yet for Herndon and Speed in municipal court.

Suit Against Bus Order Hit In Tallahassee

Montgomery, Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Feb. 11 (AP) —Dismissal of a federal court suit seeking to stop enforcement of Tallahassee's new bus seat assignment ordinance will be asked tomorrow on the ground the court lacks jurisdiction.

The suit was filed by Johnny Herndon and Leonard Speed, students of Florida A. and M. University for Negroes. They were arrested Jan. 19 on a charge of violating the ordinance.

Their attorney, Francisco Rodriguez, called the ordinance unconstitutional on its face and "a legal monstrosity designed to continue the evil of segregation."

Leo Foster, city attorney, told Federal Judge Dozier Devane in moving for dismissal that the "special delicacy of the adjustment to be preserved between federal equitable power and state administration of its laws has been a historic ordinance concern of congressional enactment."

The bus seat assignment ordinance makes no mention of segregation but authorizes drivers to tell passengers where to sit on basis of their weight possibilities of violence and other factors.

A bus boycott by Tallahassee Negroes lasted until Christman even when they began "riding integrated." No arrests were made until after adoption of the new city ordinance, however.

Delay trial of students in bus case

Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Federal District Court Judge Dozier Devane, Friday, refused to intervene in the Municipal Court suit against two Florida A. and M. students being held on the charge of violating the city's new bus seating assignment ordinance.

The judge held that he was barred by Federal law from interfering with cases which were within the jurisdiction of municipal courts.

Devane postponed until Feb. 12 a hearing on the motion by the city and National Bus Lines which operates the city buses that the student's cases be dismissed. However, he stated his readiness to hear further argument by counsel for the students as to why the case should not be dismissed.

* * *

JOHNNY HERNDON and Leonard D. Speed were the students who branded Tallahassee's bus seating assignment ordinance "a subterfuge" to preserve segregation and petitioned the District Court to declare the ordinance unconstitutional.

"It is inescapable that the ordinance is designed to circumvent what is now the established law of the land," the suit, filed by Francisco Rodriquez of Tampa, set forth.

Herndon and Speed, along with two white students from the University of Florida, and Harold Owens, also of FAMU, were arrested when they refused to obey a bus driver's order that they occupy racially separate seats on a local bus.

THE U.S. Supreme Court in December had ordered that segregation no longer be practiced on city buses in Tallahassee as the result of a long-drawn-out suit brought by the NAACP.

Following the high court's mandate, on Jan. 9, the City commission passed the seat assignment ordinance giving bus drivers the power to delegate seats to riders "in the interest of public safety," etc. No reference was made to race.

Herndon and Speed were indicted on charges of violating this ordinance when along with the three other students, they boarded an almost vacant bus and rode without segregating themselves in defiance of the driver's order.

Attorney Rodriquez could not be reached for comment on the case.

Meanwhile the scheduling of the Municipal Court case against Herndon and Speed has been indefinitely postponed.

3 FLORIDA STUDENTS GUILTY IN BUS CASE

New York

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Feb. 27 (AP)—Three university students, including two Negroes, were convicted in Municipal Court today on charges of violating Tallahassee's unusual bus seat assignment ordinance.

Municipal Judge John Rudd adjudged the three guilty after overruling a defense motion for acquittal on the ground the city's seating ordinance was unconstitutional.

The ordinance does not mention segregation, but permits drivers to assign seats on the basis of proper distribution of weight on the buses, health factors and like considerations.

Sentencing of the three students was postponed until Monday. The maximum penalty is sixty days in jail and a $500 fine.

The defendants are Joseph Spagna of St. Petersburg, a white student at Florida State University, and Leonard P. Speed and Johnny Herndon, Negro students at Florida A. and M. University.

Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa, attorney for the students, argued that the ordinance was unconstitutional because it set up an arbitrary classification of persons using public transportation.

City Solicitor Edward J. Hill told the court the city had a legal right to set up a seat-numbering arrangement for assignment of passengers. He observed that the Pullman Company assigned seats and that airlines did so on certain occasions.

The students were arrested after they had boarded a bus and declined to occupy the seats the driver assigned them.

The sentences were imposed on Joseph Spagna of St. Petersburg, 25-year-old white student at Florida State University, and Leonard D. Speed and Johnny Herndon, students at Florida A. and M. University for Negroes.

The students were arrested Jan. 19 while on a sightseeing tour of the city with three other persons when they left their assigned seats and rode beside each other in integrated fashion.

BIRMINGHAM, March 4. — (UP)—United States District Judge Seybourn Lynne Monday dismissed a suit by two Negroes seeking to have segregation in Birmingham Terminal Station waiting rooms declared unconstitutional.

Judge Lynne ruled the Negroes had no legitimate case since disorderly conduct charges placed against them after their arrest for sitting in the white waiting room there had been dropped by the city.

The judge also said in a lengthy ruling "there is no ordinance of the City of Birmingham or statute of the State of Alabama which purports to compel Negro interstate passengers to occupy waiting rooms designated 'colored.'"

The suit was filed by Carl L. Baldwin and his wife who were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct Dec. 22 for sitting in Terminal Station's waiting room marked "interstate and white only." They had tickets to Milwaukee. The city commission, Terminal Station Co. and Alabama Public Service Commission were named defendants in their suit.

Warn Students In Fla. Bus Fight

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Florida State Board of Control warned students of Florida State university, a white co-educational school, and Florida A&M students, a Negro co-educational school, to stay out of Tallahassee's bus segregation controversy.

The action followed the Saturday afternoon arrests of a Florida State student and two Florida A and M students for attempting to sit together on a city bus. Three other men including two students, one from each college, were arrested with the three.

The Board of Control, which supervises all state institutions of higher learning, sent a letter to the two universities warning that any type of action that might lead to "public strife or violence" would be considered as "endangering the welfare of our universities.

The letter requested that the schools' presidents "and other administrative officials will take note of this statement."

The letter was signed by Dr. Ralph Miller, chairman of the Board of Controls.

An estimated 20 FSU students have been attending recent meetings of the Negro Inter-civic Council, which is promoting racial integration movements. After Saturday's arrests, 18 carloads of Florida A and M students were present at the Council's meeting Sunday night.

They also asked a permanent order to enjoin Cities Transit, Inc., and the Tallahassee city commission from further enforcement of the ordinance.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Three university students were given mandatory 60-day jail sentences and fined $500 in Tallahassee Municipal Court Monday for violating the city's unique bus seating assignment ordiance.

City Judge John Rudd delivered a stern lecture to the three young students, urging they consider what he called their "obligations as citizens of the community rather than attempting to be modern fly-by-night martyrs."

Sentenced were JosephSpagna, 25, a white student at Florida State University, and Leonard Speed and Johnny Herndon, students at Florida A and M. University for Negroes.

Their attorney said the sentences would be appealed to Circuit Court

Judge Rudd told the students:

"I consider your action a deliberate overt act to violate the peace and tranquility of our city in a time of great crisis. As you grow older you will realize that discretion is the better part of valor".

Rudd overruled a claim that the city ordinance was unconstitutional, and also rejected a request for a new trial.

Negroes have already asked Federal Court for a ruling on constitutionality of the city ordinance. which required bus driver to seat riders in numbered seats taking into consideration weight distribution, health factors and other matters.

The three students were arrested Jan. 19 when they left thir assigned seats and rode beside each other in integrated fashion.

Judge Convicts 3 Bus Riders

Post & Times Herald P.4-B Thurs. 2-28-57 Washington, D.C.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. Feb. 27 (U.P.)—A city judge convicted one white and two Negro students today of violating a stopgap segregation ordinance in a trial that developed a side issue over film coverage of such cases.

Judge John Rudd ordered two television cameramen to destroy film taken of witnesses just outside the courtroom. One of the cameramen asserted the jurist was following the local official policy of "keeping the public in the dark."

The other cameraman refused to destroy his film and turned it over to his station in Tampa. The station said it probably would show the film if it determines such coverage was not in conflict with state law.

The trial of the three youths for sitting unsegregated on Tallahassee buses was another step in the legal wrangle to determine if the U. S. Supreme Court policy shall prevail over the custom of racial separation in the South.

Judge Rudd found that Joe Spagna of St. ePtersburg, student at all-white Florida State University, and Johnny Herndon and Leonard Speed, students at the Florida A. & M. University for Negroes, had violated a new local ordinance. It provides that bus passengers shall occupy seats assigned by the driver on a basis of health, weight and safety and to preserve the peace.

The students were convicted of failing to move to seats designated by the driver on Jan. 19.

Rudd deferred sentence pending a motion Monday for a new trial.

The Judge ruled no evidence was presented to upset the "presumption" the city bus ordinance adopted Jan. 7 is legal. Negro Attorney Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa charged the ordinance was clearly an unconstitutional attempt to preserve Racial segregtation.

'This is a fight to save America,' Rev. Steele says

By SAMUEL A. HAYNES

NEWARK, N.J.

"Our fight is not only for the 15,000 colored people in Tallahassee.

"It is a fight for colored people everywhere, but greater still, it is a fight for the very life of our America.

"If we win, America wins. If we lose, America loses."

A capacity interracial audience of 1,000 persons applauded this interpretation of the boycott against bus segregation in Tallahassee, Fla., at a rally to aid the movement at Hopewell Baptist Church last Thursday.

* * *

THE SPEAKER was the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter - Civic Improvement Council which is directing the fight for compliance by the bus company and Tallahassee city officials with the Supreme Court's ruling to integrate bus passengers.

The rally was sponsored by the Baptist Ministers Conference of Newark and Vicinity under the auspices of its Social Action committee headed by the Rev. E. G. Thomas Jr., who presided.

The Rev. Mr. Steele, who is also president of the NAACP Branch in Tallahassee, and pastor of Bethel Baptist Church, captivated the audience with an emotion - packed appeal, flavored with spiritual and moral logic and a dramatic racial challenge.

After telling how his home was stoned and his family life threatened by hoodlums, and explaining some of the unusual techniques employed to make sure that no law was being violated, the Rev. Mr. Steele declared:

* * *

"MANY HAVE been our experiences.

"We have been on the mountain top of joy and laughter, and in the valley - low experiences of tears and disappointments."

But, he added dramatically: "It is now our responsibility to our nation, our race, our children and the world to implement the Supreme Court's decision by overcoming fear with faith in God that will drive all fear out of our hearts."

THE REV. Mr. Steele received shouts of "Amen" from the ministers and church people when, alluding to his own safety as a "marked man" in Tallahassee, he declared solemnly:

"I am perfectly confident that nobody can harm me. They can destroy my body, but they can't harm me."

Here is how the Florida crusader voiced his and his followers' agreement with the nonviolence creed of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King and his associates in Montgomery, Ala.:

"This battle for civil rights," he warned, "will not be won by individuals who have not dedicated themselves to God.

"GOD IS calling America to a more persistent prayer life.

"The time has now come for God to demonstrate — through we colored Americans — what can be done by good will.....

"We can only win our battle for civil rights, for first - class citizenship by overcoming hate with love.

"Love is the most powerful force in the world.

"THE ONLY way to drive hate out of the enemy is with love."

The Rev. Mr. Steele received a standing ovation as he closed with these words:

"We colored people in Tallahassee, in Montgomery and all over America are going to vote, and we are going to the courts—

"But, if we win at the polls, if we win in the courts, let us not forget that we must still win the heart of our enemy with love."

Youths Get 60 Days And Fines

Herald P.2-A

Miami, Fla.

Tues. 3-5-57

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — City Judge John Rudd Monday handed maximum 60-day jail sentences to a trio of white and Negro university students who defied a city law and sat together on a local bus.

Accusing the students of trying to be "modern-day martyrs" in the southern racial segregation crisis, Rudd imposed the maximum penalty of 60 days in jail and a $500 fine on Joe Spagna, St. Petersburg, and Leonard Speed and Johnny Herndon, Tallahassee. Spagna attends Florida State University. The other two are students at A&M University for Negroes.

The students, represented by Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa, Florida attorney for the NAACP, posted $1,000 bond and were freed pending their appeal to Leon Circuit Court.

Simultaneously, Federal Judge Dozier A. Devane set March 11 for a hearing on a suit by Speed and Herndon seeking to invalidate the city law requiring bus drivers to assign numbered seats to passengers on a basis of weight, health and safety and to prevent violence.

Judge Rudd, who found the youths guilty last Wednesday and refused them a new trial Monday, delivered a stern lecture to Spagna, Speed and Herndon dealing with community responsibility.

He said he imposed the stiff penalty and refused to suspend the jail term "because at this time of great crises in the racial affairs of the South these young men took it upon themselves to go off on a spree that could have resulted in great harm" when they ignored a bus driver's seat assignment Jan. 19 and sat side by side.

Rodriguez contended the bus seating law, although it makes no mention of race or color, is an attempt to continue segregated seating by "subterfuge." He served notice he will attack validity of the law in both the state and federal courts.

"Perhaps these young men are not old enough to realize that a person who determinedly goes out with an intent to cause strife is entitled to no consideration under the law," Rudd said. Calling the three students before the bar, Rudd told them, "I hope with age you will learn more discretion."

Tallahassee Students Get 60-Day Sentence $300 Fine For Integrated Bus Riding

Bluefield Thurs. 3-7-57

Tallahassee, Fla.—Municipal Judge John Rudd Monday ordered three university students to serve a 60-day jail sentence and pay a $500 fine for violating Tallahassee's bus seat assignment ordinance.

The sentence was the maximum provided in the ordinance which requires bus drivers to seat riders in numbered seats on the basis of weight distribution, health factors and other considerations.

The students' attorney, Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa, announced an appeal would be taken to circuit court.

Sightseeing Tour

Those sentenced were Joseph Spagna, 25, white student at Florida State University, and Leonard D. Speed and Johnny Herndon, students at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes.

The three students were arrested Jan. 19 and convicted last week.

They were on a "sightseeing tour" with three other persons when they left their assigned seats and rode beside each other in integrated fashion.

City Solicitor Edward J. Hill told the court the city has a legal right to set up a seat-numbering arrangement. He said the Pullman Company, the airlines and railroads at times used numbered seating arrangements.

The ordinance was adopted Jan. 7 after Tallahassee Negroes began their "ride integrated" bus campaign. It does not mention racial segregation.

Two of the students, Herndon and Speed, are challenging the ordinance in a federal suit.

Collins Halts Buses In Capital

Herald Wed. 1-2-57 Miami, Fla. P. 5-a

Suspension Ordered After Outbreaks

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — Gov. LeRoy Collins declared a state of emergency Tuesday and suspended operation of Tallahassees buses following several violent racial incidents.

Collins used powers given him by a special legislative session earlier this year. He said he acted to "protect the public safety and preserve the public tranquility."

Unidentified persons tossed rocks through the windows of four Negro homes and blasted a grocery store with shotgun fire shortly before dawn.

One of the homes hit by flying rocks was that of the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter-Civic Council which is spear-heading a drive to desegregate local buses. The shotgun blasts were directed at a Negro grocery store, empty at the time.

Similar incidents have also plagued Alabama's two major cities, Montgomery and Birmingham, where Negroes have also ridden in the front seats traditionally reserved for whites until the Supreme Court outlawed segregated bus seating in Montgomery two weeks ago.

Tallahassee buses were idle Tuesday because of the holiday. The rock-throwing and shotgun incidents were the first violence since the council ended a seven-month boycott of buses and went back with the avowed intention to sit anywhere they please.

Police Chief Frank Stoutamire, who ordered his men not to interfere with the buses integrated or otherwise following issuance of the federal injunction, said no trace of the vandals who shot two blasts through the window of Speed Bros. grocery and tossed rocks at four homes had been found.

Steele was the only one to see the rocks actually thrown. He said he saw a teen age white boy, dressed in a red shirt and bluejeans, toss the rocks through his windows. Some of the broken glass fell on a bed where a 15-year-old son was sleeping, but the youth was not cut.

A White Citizens Council met here Monday night and called on Collins to use his emergency powers to halt bus integration.

Collins acted after conferring with members of a special committee named to help deal with racial relations.

In Birmingham, police said a bus driver was fired on by a group of Negro youths Monday night when he parked near a cemetery in the Negro section of the city. The bullet lodged in the front of the bus near driver C. E. McCullough but none of the six passengers aboard was hurt.

A dynamite blast tore the corner of the home of Otis Flowers, a Negro who moved into a house formerly owned by whites in a fringe neighborhood of Birmingham.

City officials will meet Wednesday to consider dropping charges of violating Birmingham segregation laws brought against 21 Negroes who sat in the front of buses.

The defendants would be charged only with disorderly conduct to prevent a court test of city segregation ordinances.

Showdown Seen On Seating Law

FLORIDA

TALLAHASSEE — (AP) — Three Negro university students and three White youths who went for a city bus sightseeing tour in a body were arrested Saturday in the first test of Tallahassee's unique bus seating ordinance.

A Florida State University student and two Florida A. & M. university students later were charged with refusing "peaceably" to leave the bus after rejecting the driver's demand that they change seats.

Francisco Rodriguez of Tampa, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the cases "lend themselves to a legal test of the seat assignment ordinance."

The three who were charged were released on $50 bonds posted by the Negro Inter Civic Council and ordered to appear in city court at 9 a.m. Monday. They were Joe Spagna, 25, of St. Petersburg, an FSU student, and Leonard D. Speed and Johnny Herndon, 26, both A. & M. students from Tallahassee.

The three others were released but were directed to appear in court as material witnesses. They were Harold Owens, 22, of Tampa, an A. & M. student; Jon Folsom of Miami, an FSU student, and James Kennedy, 24, of Tallahassee, a statistical clerk at the State Road Department.

Herndon said the group met at a grocery store operated by Speed's father by agreement and started on a tour of the city by bus. He said they rode together on one bus without being disturbed.

But he said that when they started to board another bus downtown, the driver, Emory Elkins, ordered them to separate and sit in assigned seats after they had ridden about two blocks.

After their release, Folsom went out to the A. & M. campus to pick up his car.

The bus seat assignment ordinance adopted by the city commission last week was an outgrowth of a long bus integration dispute here, requires drivers to assign riders to numbered seats, taking into account weight distribution on the bus, the need for preventing violence and other factors.

The new ordinance makes no mention of segregation. It replaces the segregation clause of the Cities Transit, Inc., franchise which the City Commission declared now had "doubtful validity."

Negro leaders have approached the new seating arrangement cautiously saying they wanted to determine "whether any pattern is being followed in assignment of seats that would violate our constitutional rights."

Six arrested in Tallahassee test of new seating law

Afro-American Sat. 1-26-57 Baltimore, Md.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Six students, three from Florida A. and M. University and three from the white Florida State University, were arrested here Saturday as they forced a test of Tallahassee's new seat assignment law. P. 1.

The test was made without the knowledge of the Inter Civic Council which has been directing the bus protest here, officials of that organization said.

However, Francisco Rodriquez, NAACP attorney, appeared to represent the youngsters and secured their release. If convicted, they can be fined up to $500 and given six months in jail.

Students Warned On Segregation

Herald Wed. 1-23-57 Miami, Fla. P. 2a

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE—University students Tuesday were barred from participating in the controversy over racial segregation on Tallahassee city buses.

Dr. Ralph Miller of Orlando, chairman of the Florida Board of Control, warned that "participation by students in demonstrations or other activities calculated to, or having the effect of, inflaming the public, or inciting strife or violence, will be considered as endangering the welfare of our universities."

Dr. Miller's statement followed the arrest last weekend of two Negro students at Florida A & M and a white student attending Florida State University, accused of violating Tallahassee's new bus seating law.

Dr. Miller said disciplinary action will be left to Dr. Doak S. Campbell, president of FSU, and Dr. George Gore, president of A & M. He said the statement is not a direct ban, but warns students that involvement in incidents leading to arrest or violence will be considered a breach of conduct.

After discussing the situation with presidents of both universities, Dr. Miller said he had recommended that student publications omit controversial articles dealing with the segregation issue.

Student letters to the editor of The Flambeau, FSU campus newspaper, recently supported the Negro Inter-Civic Council in its move for integration on city buses.

"We hope, of course, that our students, both as individuals and through their organized activities, in the interest of preserving peace and good order on the campuses and in the community, will see the wisdom of maintaining such conduct as will protect the universities against unfortunate incidents or unfavorable criticism," Dr. Miller said.

Disciplinary policies are still under consideration. Dr. Gore could not be reached and Dr. Campbell said he had "no comment at this time." He said he had not had time to review the Board of Control statement.

Trial of Joe Spagna, FSU senior from St. Petersburg; John Herndon, 26, A & M student from Valdosta Ga., and Leonard D. Speed, 24, A & M sophomore, has not been set in Municipal Court.

They are accused of violating the ordinance which requires drivers to assign riders to numbered seats. It provides a maximum $500 fine or 60 days in jail.

Three others ordered to report in court as material witnesses are Jon Folsom, FSU student from Tallahassee, formerly of Miami, and James Kennedy, 24, of Tallahassee, a State Road Department employe.

3 Whites, 3 Negroes Arrested in Tallahassee Bus

Herald Tribune

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 19 (UP).—Police arrested three white and three Negro youths found sitting together on a bus today and charged the three of them with violating Tallahassee's new stopgap ordinance to save segregation.

Two Negroes and one white youth, all college students, were booked for violating the ordinance providing that the bus driver shall assign seats on a basis of "weight, health and safety." They were released under $50 bond each.

One Negro and two whites were released without charge but ordered to appear in City Court Monday as material witnesses in the case.

Johnny Herndon, a student at Florida A. & M. University for Negroes and one of those charged, said "we were all friends and we decided to sightsee." He said the bus on which they were arrested was the second one they had ridden on an integrated basis today.

Besides Mr. Herndon, those booked were Joe Spagna, twenty-five, of St. Petersburg, student at all-white Florida State University, and Leonard D. Speed, twenty-four, A. & M. student and son of a prominent Negro integration leader.

Summoned as material witnesses ere Jon Folson, twenty-four, former State student now working for the State Road Department, and Harold N. Owens, twenty-two, A. & M. student.

Francisco Rodriguez, of Tampa, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, represented the students. He told reporters the arrests might lead to a test of validity of the seating ordinance.

The youths were charged with a misdemeanor which could lead to a penalty of a $500 fine of sixty days in jail.

Earlier, Police Capt. Wayne Todd said the six youths had refused to sit where they were told and "we are going to make charges against all six."

This was the first incident directly involving the buses since Negroes began a drive for integration Christmas Eve, ending a seven-months boycott of the segregated transit line.

Recently, Gov. LeRoy Collins suspended bus service because of violence directed against integration leaders at their homes and business places. He lifted his order last week after the city adopted its driver-assignment ordinance for seating.

The student newspaper at Florida State University recently urged students to attend mass meetings of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, the group seeking integration in Tallahassee. A number of white students attended the last mass meeting at a Negro church Wednesday night and were praised by Negro leaders.

Avoid Bus Issue, College Students Warned By Board

Daily World Wed. 1-23-57

Atlanta, Ga.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The Florida State Board of Control warned students of Florida State University, a white co-educational school, and Florida A&M students a Negro co-educational school Tuesday, to stay out of Tallahassee's bus segregation controversy. P. 1

The action followed the Saturday afternoon arrests of a Florida State student and two Florida A&M students for attempting to sit together on a city bus. Three other men, including two students, one from each college, were with the arrested three.

The board of control, which supervises all state institutions of higher learning, sent a letter to the two universities warning that any type of action that might lead to "public strife or violence" would be considered as "endangering the welfare of our universitys."

The letter requested that the schools' presidents "and other administrative officials will take note of this statement."

The letter was signed by Dr. Ralph Miller, chairman of the Board of Controls.

An estimated 20 FSU students have been attending recent meetings of the Negro Inter-Civic Council, which is promoting racial integration movements. After Saturday's arrests, 18 carloads of Florida A&M students were present at the Council's meeting Sunday night.

Tallahassee Buses Remain Integrated

Wash. Post P. 1 38b

Wed. 1-1-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — Two "teams" of five Negroes each rode Tallahassee buses on a non-segregated basis Monday, but there were no reports of violence.

The Rev. C. K. Steele, head of the Negro Inter-Civic Council which is spearheading the battle for integrated seating, said he personally rode with one of the teams.

Rev. Steele said his group and another led by council member Dan Speed, periodically boarded buses in different parts of Tallahassee yesterday and took front seats.

Tallahassee Negroes ended a seven-month-old bus boycott just before Christmas, holding the Supreme Court's decision striking down segregation on Montgomery, Ala., buses had made further protests unnecessary.

MONTGOMERY

In Montgomery, Ala. city officials planned no alterations of the city bus schedule despite a pre-dawn shooting attack on a bus Monday, but promised to meet Wednesday to discuss the entire situation again.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said the city had no plan to alter the schedule beyond the night time curfew which is in existence thru January 1.

A mass meeting held in Tallahassee Sunday night saw 400 Negroes appoint an 11 man "ride-the-bus" campaign committee. The Rev. C. K. Steele, a leader of the integration movement said he is speeding up a campaign urging students at all-Negro Florida A&M University to join in the integration move.

Elsewhere in the South, police had apparently cleared up a night attack on Birmingham buses with the arrest of five Negro boys ranging in age from 10 to 14. The boys said they were "just playing" with B-B guns they had received for Christmas.

The incident in Montgomery Monday morning in which no one was injured, occurred about a mile away from the scene of a Friday night shooting in which a pregnant Negro woman was sounded, and marked the first time the attackers have struck during the day. The four other shootings in the Alabama capital had all come at night.

Bus service was suspended by Gov. Leroy Collins Jan. 1 after an outbreak of violence over attempts to integrate Negro and white passengers.

Passengers today were sitting where they pleased but on the whole the Negroes followed the traditional pattern of seating from the rear while the white riders seated from the front.

Two Negroes were observed sitting toward the front of one bus occupied by a white passenger who sat across the aisle.

The buses started rolling again yesterday afternoon when Leroy Collins lifted the suspension order.

Leaders of a Negro integration group and a white segregation organization said they hoped there would be no further flareups of violence. But neither side backed down in its stand.

Resumption of service came without advance notice, and as a result there was only a handful of riders.

Bus Riders Sit As They Used To

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 12 (AP)—Tallahassee city buses resumed normal operations today with no incidents and but few riders.

Klan Guards Kasper—

Mixed Bus Riders Get Top Fine, Jail Term

Post Herald Tue. 3-5-57 P. 3

Birm., Ala.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 4 (U.P.)—A city judge gave one white and two Negro students maximum fines and jail terms today for sitting together on a bus as he accused them of trying to be "fly-by-night martyrs" at a time of grave crisis.

Tallahassee's stop-gap segregation ordinance was at issue in both city and federal courts. Arch Segregationist John Kasper was in the state and a Ku Klux Klan leader said a guard of 35 Klan "Confederate Army" riflemen would escort Kasper at Miami speech-making Friday.

An elderly Quaker minister, the Rev. Ashton Jones of Atlanta, received a 30-day suspended jail sentence in Miami on charges that he disturbed the peace when he interrupted a segregation rally last week to preach brotherhood.

Tallahassee Judge John Rudd gave sentences of 60 days in jail and $500 fines each to Joe Spagna, white and Leonard Speed and Johnny Herndon, Negroes, for the mixed bus riding incident Jan. 19.

Bonds of $1000 were posted by the youths and their attorney, Francisco Rodriquez, said he would appeal to Circuit Court.

At the same time, U. S. District Judge Dozier Devane set March 11 for a hearing on a suit by Speed and Herndon seeking to invalidate the city law making bus drivers responsible for seating passengers to best distribute their weight and assure their health and safety. The new ordinance was an admitted means of enforcing segregated riding without mentioning race.

Judge Rudd said he imposed the stiff penalty and refused to suspend the jail term "because at this time of great crises in the racial affairs of the South these young men took it upon themselves to go off on a spree that could have resulted in great harm" when they ignored the bus drivers' seat assignment and sat side by side.

Bill Hendrix, one-time Grand Dragon of the Florida Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, said a 35-man rifle team was called up to escort the visiting Kasper at Miami Friday night after he received several threatening telephone calls yesterday. He said "at least a dozen" persons called and threatened to kill Kasper if he speaks in Miami.

The Klan sponsored Kasper's speech Saturday night. And Hendrix was his week-end host.

Miami officials said, however, if Kasper needed any protection the Miami police would furnish it.

"We're not about to give out a permit for any armed guards for anybody," City Manager A. E. Evans said.

While Kasper was in Florida preparing to "spread the segregation gospel," federal authorities in Knoxville remained noncommital on their plans for his arrest.

The 27-year-old Kasper is wanted on contempt charges in connection with racial tension at integrated Clinton, Tenn., High School.

John D. Crawford, U. S. district attorney at Knoxville, said "we can get him any time we want to" by amending his warrant to permit his arrest outside the East Tennessee jurisdiction.

Tallahassee Buses Try Rider-Assigning Plan

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP)—The Tallahassee City Commission today knocked out the racial segregation section of the city bus franchise and substituted a passenger assignment ordinance.

The new ordinance provision, which will become effective as soon as it is published tomorrow, said the action was taken in view of the "doubtful validity" of the section and in view of recent court rulings.

Under the new plan the bus driver will issue tickets to riders assigning them to seats. The passengers will be required to occupy these seats under penalty of a possible $500 fine or 60-day jail sentence unless they elect to have their fares refunded.

An attorney for Cities Transit, Inc., which operates the Tallahassee bus system, told the commissioners the transit firm would accept the new arrangement.

The new ordinance is designed to preserve traditional segregated seating arrangements on city buses.

City officials said the ordinance is patterned after the Florida pupil assignment law designed to preserve segregated schools, and it was believed it would withstand legal tests.

The pupil assignment law enacted by a special session of the Florida Legislature last summer allows county school boards to send students to schools for which they are believed best suited.

Mayor John Humphries said the city was cognizant that an emergency exists in Tallahassee in view of recent acts of violence and in view of recent moves by Negroes to force integration through the courts.

"We urged the people of this community to refrain from any acts or demonstrations which will have the effect of increasing racial tension which would cause violence, disorder or further breaches of the peace of our city," he said.

The segregation section of the franchise agreement which was repealed today said.

"The company shall make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations providing for the segregation of the human races when more than one race is transported on the same bus."

Tallahassee Buses Resume

Times Pub. Sat. 1-12-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 11 (AP)—City buses rolled back into service today on orders from Gov. LeRoy Collins, who suspended their operation eleven days ago to head off racial violence.

Sat. 1-12-57

Governor Collins said his action would test "the good will prevailing among and between the people of both races."

Wilbur Turner, manager of Cities Transit, Inc., said drivers were prepared to assign seats under a new city ordinance if whites and Negroes attempted to disregard segregation laws in taking seats.

New York

The Governor emphasized that his decision to restore service was not "an expression of approval of the action taken by the City of Tallahassee amending the franchise ordinance."

Negroes began "riding integrated" here on Christmas Eve, ending a seven-month bus boycott, which began when two Negro girls were arrested for taking a front seat.

Collins Demands End of Violence

TALLAHASSEE — (UP) — Gov. LeRoy Collins called on city and county authorities here Thursday to take "immediate and effective" action to prevent further violence against Negro leaders of the bus integration drive.

Collins, who suspended bus service New Year's Day after a flareup of violence, issued a statement after shotgun blasts peppered the empty Baptist parsonage of the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Negro Inter Civic council which is spearheading the integration drive.

But Doesn't Endorse City Ordinance

Collins Ends Bus Ban in Tallahassee

Herald

By JOHN L. BOYLES
Herald Staff Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Gov. LeRoy Collins Friday ordered Tallahassee city buses back into operation, but said he has no confidence in a new city ordinance adopted by the City Commission to preserve segregated seating.

Miami

"I wish to make it clear I have not issued the proclamation authorizing bus service as an expression of approval of the actions taken by the city of Tallahassee in amending the franchise ordinance," the governor said.

The governor suspended bus service New Year's Day, invoking emergency powers granted him by the Legislature, to avoid further violence in the eight-month old dispute over segregated seating.

During the suspension, the City Commission rescinded its ordinance which called for segregated seating on the basis of color, and adopted a new measure which requires bus drivers to assign seats to passengers on the basis of weight distribution and general rules for "health, safety, and welfare."

Sat. 1-12-57

Collins said the ordinance is "essentially a local problem and as governor I do not feel I should attempt to impose my judgment over a decision reached by local authorities unless it becomes absolutely imperative.

"However," he said, "it is not my judgment that this new ordinance or any rules or regulations likely to be established under it, will provide the basis for an ultimate solution of the problems confronting the people of Tallahassee."

Reiterating the statement he made in his inaugural address, the governor said he is convinced that the "attitudes of the people regardless of any law that may exist will determine the ability of this community to overcome the situation which for so many months has provoked discord and disruption of normal community life."

Collins asserted the resumption of bus service is "authorized not to provide a test of a law but of the good will prevailing among and between people of both races and of the ability of the bus company to furnish a needed public service with due regard to every citizen."

The governor said the responsibility to "conduct themselves with reason and understanding and without demonstrations and agitations rests upon each and every resident, regardless of color and calling."

The governor's order was effective at 4 p.m. Friday but it was not known immediately how long it would take the company to resume operations.

The governor suspended bus service after a shot was fired through the window of a Negro store and a stone was thrown through a window of another Negro establishment.

Bus Segregation Suit Delayed

Herald Tribune
Atlanta Ga.

MIAMI, Fla.—A suit by four Negro women seeking to declare the state and city's bus segregation laws unconstitutional was postponed Monday by Federal Judge Emmet C. Choate.

Tues. 7-23-57

Blaming the delay on a busy court calendar, the judge re-set the suit for Wednesday.

The judge's decision in the case is expected to be in favor of the Negroes' petition. He said in January he would have no hesitancy striking down the segregation laws because they have already been declared unconstitutional.

4 Negro Women Challenge Law

Bus Segregation Trial Starts Today

Herald Miami, Fla.
Mon. 7-22-57

By CECIL MANN
Herald Staff Writer

Miami's bus segregation issue—a boiling controversy that slowed down to a simmer—goes on the fire again today in Federal Court.

The case involves four Negro women — Maggie Garmon, Eleanor M. Fair, Alice Jackson and Glorida Matthews — who are challenging Miami and Florida laws which call for separation of white and Negro passengers on public carriers.

Whatever the outcome, the long-standing color line practiced on transportation systems of Greater Miami is not likely to change for some time.

Federal Judge Emett C. Choate probably will declare the laws unconstitutional if the case is presented properly by the women's attorneys.

In January he said he would have no hesitancy about striking down the laws because they already had been declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

If Choate makes an official ruling on the laws Miami officials are expected to appeal the case to the U.S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

After Choate's oral ruling in January that the laws are unconstitutional, Negro groups made plans for immediate integration of buses.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People advised Negro passengers to sit where they please, but no general attempts to wipe out segregation materialized.

One of the women in the case charges that she was sent to city jail after refusing orders of a bus driver and a policeman to move to a rear seat. Another said she was threatened with jail if she did not move. The other two petitioners said they were ordered to the rear against their will.

All contend bus segregation laws deny them their rights under federal laws and the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Miami Transit Co. pleaded successfully that it merely was enforcing local and state laws concerning segregation provisions as required by its franchise, and that it should not be a defendant in the suit. The company was dropped from the case by Choate.

Miami Backs Bus Segregation As Federal Court Test Nears

NAACP Suggestion That Riders Sit Where They Choose Is Ignored

Atlanta Ga. P.5-C

By CHARLES HESSER
Staff Writer, The Miami Daily News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 26—Miami Negroes have continued to take their customary seats in the rear of buses despite a recommendation by the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that they sit where they choose.

The NAACP suggestion came after attorneys for the organization interpreted a City of Miami pleading in Federal Court to mean that the city was not enforcing segregation ordinances.

In a public statement, the NAACP said:

"We have always contended such laws are unconstitutional and are delighted to find that our city commissioners now take the same position.

"Therefore, in complete harmony with the legal arguments of the city, we advise our people that from henceforth they may sit where they please on Miami Transit buses."

But the city contends its position was misunderstood, that present segregation ordinances are enforceable and stand until they are held unconstitutional by Federal Court.

FLORIDA

The bus company has continued to enforce its policy of whites seating from the front and colored from the rear ever since the NAACP recommendation.

Only One Incident

A spokesman for the transit firm declared that "Almost 100 per cent of our colored people are riding as always." He said there had been only one incident —that involving two Negro youths who had raised objections when the driver asked that they move to the rear of the vehicle.

The youths were escorted from the bus by police but were not placed under arrest.

Next month, Miami Federal Judge Emett C. Choate will hear a motion for summary judgement in a suit against the City of Miami which was filed by four Negroes seeking to force integration of the buses.

The hearing will be on a motion by the attorney for the Negroes.

Summary judgement, in effect, would call for a verdict in favor of the Negro group on the basis of pleading already submitted in the case and without trial by a jury on the issues.

Earlier Ruling

The judge will be asked to make a final ruling insofar as Miami Federal Court is concerned on this question:

Is the Miami Transit Co. acting constitutionally in following segregated seating of white and Negro passengers aboard its buses in compliance with state law and a city ordinance requiring such segregation?

Choate already has ruled — at a hearing Jan. 3 — that the state law and city ordinance are unconstitutional in accordance with a United States Supreme Court decree outlawing similar state law and city ordinances calling for segregated seating on buses in Montgomery, Ala.

At that time, Choate declared: "The courts already have ruled on the power of a state or city to say there must be segregation in buses. Whether we like it or not, the fact remains that they have no such power.

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable."

Legal observers point out that the present situation is one in which the court is being asked to rule on whether the continued enforcement of segregation is constitutional under laws which in themselves have been declared unconstitutional.

Anticipating a formal segregation order from Choate, and hoping to prevent appeal to a higher court by the City of Miami, a group of Miami Negroes has appealed to the city to accept integration at the earliest possible moment.

The group, which consisted of three doctors and a clergyman, said early integration will reduce racial incidents which might accompany the change.

Minister Speaks

The Rev. John E. Culmer, a member of the group and an Episcopal minister, declared:

"In the minds of most of us Miami is the most racially integrated city in the South and because of the fine relationship built up over the years, we are inclined to believe there should not be any delay in bus integration.

"If there is no substantial delay we believe there will be no incidents—we think people are ready for it."

But Miami City Manager Arthur Evans, to whom the Negroes spoke, said this would be a decision for the city commission to make after Choate's final decision is handed down.

At that time, he explained, it will be up to the city commission to decide whether it should attempt to gain an additional few months of delay by appealing to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Culmer predicted that his people would be orderly under integration and said most of them probably would sit in the rear of buses "through force of habit."

He added, "The better-class Negro or even the average Negro does not want to be where he is not wanted."

Miami Case Put Up to Choate

Negro leaders moved Thursday for a quick Federal Court order outlawing segregated buses in Miami after police and the sheriff said they will continue to enforce existing laws and ordinances until they are declared invalid.

G. E. Graves Jr., attorney handling several segregation suits, asked Judge Emett C. Choate for a summary judgment in the bus case.

Graves said the City of Miami's answer to his petition "does not present a genuine issue as to any material fact."

"Therefore the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment as a matter of law," Graves said.

The city's answer, filed by George S. Okell as city attorney, said Miami is not enforcing its ordinance requiring segregated seating.

Judge Choate must set a hearing on the new motion, after which he may make a formal ruling. This will require several days.

Miami police said no racial incidents occurred on buses Thursday. Two Negro youths were ordered off a South Miami bus Wednesday night when they refused to move to the rear. They were not arrested.

Officials of the sheriff's department were told Thursday to enforce state laws requiring segregated seating until the laws have been formally held invalid by the courts.

Milton Ferrell, attorney for the sheriff, said these laws are still in effect.

Sheriff Thomas J. Kelly, at a staff meeting, told his department heads.

"Our course is clear. We're here to uphold the law and must do so as long as it's on the books."

Kelly said his men will take action if any racial incidents take place on buses outside municipal limits.

Miami's Police Chief Walter E. Headley said his men will handle each complaint as it arises.

Removal of the Negro youths from the bus Wednesday night was under the city's ordinance covering disorderly conduct by creating a disturbance.

Another segregation case — a West Palm Beach suit attacking Florida's new pupil assignment law — moved nearer a decision.

Judge Choate said the case will be heard by a single judge instead of a three-judge panel required in cases involving constitutional questions.

Judge Choate made this announcement after conferring informally with Judge Joseph Hutcheson of the Fifth Circuit Court at New Orleans.

Judge Hutcheson said the decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court and a Virginia District Court in a case similar to that pending in Miami removed all question about the constitutionality of segregation laws.

A judge is expected to be named to hear arguments in this case shortly.

Meanwhile, State and federal agencies were called on Thursday by the Florida Conference of National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People to investigate moves to dislodge a Miami Negro family from a white northwest neighborhood.

Robert W. Saunders, field secretary for the NAACP, also called on Gov. LeRoy Collins and Dade county officials to protect the family of Frank Legree, 1455 NW 55th St.

The Legree family moved into the white neighborhood last weekend. Since then a mass meeting has been held in the community to protest the Legrees' presence in the neighborhood.

At the meeting, David Ira Hawthorne, staunch foe of integration, told the group of more than 200 citizens "this is the first time a Negro family has moved deep into a white section in Miami. We've got to defend our rights or lose our homes."

A reporter visited the Legree home Thursday night, but found the house apparently empty and darkened. The two closest homes to the Legree residence have signs on their lawns reading "For Sale by Owner."

Emmett Choate, Jurist, Rules Against Miami Also

MIAMI — (INS) — Federal Judge Emmet C. Choate, in a decision that caught both sides by suprise, has ruled that the City of Miami's and the state of Florida's bus segregation laws are unconstitutional.

The udge said the issue had been settled by the U. S. Supreme Court in its rulings on bus seating in Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.

JUDGE HOATE was sitting in a case brought Oct. 12 by four Negro bus riders—Maggie Garmon, Eleanor M. Fair, Alice Jackson and Gloria Matthews—who challenged the constitutionality of Florida segregation statutes and those of the City o Miami.

The suit was backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and requested that a three-judge bench be impaneled to rule on the constitutional question.

JUDGE CHOATE commented there was no need for such a panel in view of recent Supreme Court decisions. He said:

"I have no hesitation in saying these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are un-enforceable.

The Miami Transit Co., co-defendant in the case along with with the City of Miami, said it would continue operating its buses on a segregated basis until a formal order is received.

Leaders Ask Help In Integrated Bus Seating

Daily World Wed. 1-23-57 Atlanta Ga. P. 1

MIAMI — (INS) — Four Miami leaders Tuesday requested the aid of city manager Arthur Evans in speeding integrated bus seating and expressed the belief that early integration will reduce racial incidents.

One of the leaders, the Rev. John E. Culmer, declared:

"In the minds of most of us Miami is the most racially integrated city in the South and because of the fine relationship built up over the years, we are inclined to believe there should be no delay--if there is no substantial delay we believe there will be no incidents -- we think the people are ready for it."

FINAL DECISION

Evans said the decision whether to integrate the buses would be left to the City Commission, which will decide on a course of action after Federal Judge Emett C. Choate makes a final decision in a bus suit now pending.

The judge has orally ruled that Miami's bus segregation laws are unconstitutional, but has not signed a written order making his decision official. The city of Miami has filed an answer to the decision asking the entire suit be dropped for technical reasons.

Meanwhile, a suit filed by four Negro golfers seeking integration at the municipally-owned Fort Lauderdale Golf and Country Club was transferred today from visiting Federal Judge C. C. Wyche's court to Choate's section of the court.

Choate immediately ordered that two new members of the Fort Lauderdale City Commission be named as defendants in place of two former commissioner who held office when th esuit was orginally filed.

Miami Plaintiffs Challenge Laws

By DOM BONAFEDE
Herald Staff Writer

Federal District Judge Emett C. Choate put off a decision Wednesday on Miami's bus segregation test case but left little doubt he would rule against holding the color line.

Choate allowed each side 10 to 15 days to submit supporting arguments and then added:

"But as I already expressed myself, these so-called (bus segregation) ordinances are void under the Constitution."

In a preliminary hearing in the case last January, Choate made a similar statement.

Thus, Negroes won ground for the second time in two days in attacks on racial barriers.

Tuesday, a group of Miami Negro parents succeeded in their appeal before Fifth circuit court of appeals in New Orleans for a reversal of Judge Choate's order dismissing a school segregation suit.

Choate now must hear that case also.

During Wednesday's 2½-hour trial it was brought out that the suit for the four Negro women plaintiffs is being financed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Rev. T. R. Gibson, head of the Miami NAACP, admitted the financial tieup under questioning by George Okell, special attorney for the City of Miami and the City Commission, defendants in the case.

Gibson said the NAACP is paying G. E. Graves Jr., the organization's attorney, to represent the four Negroes.

Two of the plaintiffs—Maggie Garmon and Gloria Matthews—testified that in separate instances each had been ordered to the rear of Miami Transit Co. buses after sitting in seats marked for white passengers. They said they left the buses under protest, rather than comply with the demand.

The two women, along with Eleanor M. Fair and Alice Jackson, are challenging Miami and Florida bus segregation laws.

Mrs. Garmon told the court that on Oct. 3, 1956, a Miami Transit Co. driver told her, "You'll either move to the rear or get off and go to jail."

She said she left the bus to save herself embarrassment.

Much of the trial was devoted to a disorderly conduct case involving Rudolph Reid, 19, Negro, of 2525 NW 67th St.

Reid was convicted in Municipal Court in June, 1956, in a case growing out of a disturbance on a Miami Transit bus.

Tom O'Connell, who prosecuted the case as assistant city attorney, testified that the disorderly conduct charge was lodged against Reid on the merits of the case. He said that no attempt was made to avoid a segregation test case in City Court.

O'Connell, however, did admit that Miami's segregation ordinances "are probably unenforceable."

The arresting police officer, Keith M. Hardin, declared he booked Reid for disorderly conduct because he feared that violence might result unless the young Negro was immediately taken off the bus.

"A white woman was sitting in back of me," asserted Reid. "She was violating the law as much as I."

Okell maintained that Miami's segregation ordinances were repealed by the city's new traffic code.

City Clerk F. L. Correll contradicted Okell, declaring that the ordinances are still on the books but under different serial numbers.

Judge Choate said he would hand down his formal decision a couple of days after the briefs are submitted.

U. S. District Judge Says Negroes Can't Be Required To Sit In Rear

Fri. 1-4-57 p.4

From Wire Dispatches

Miami, Jan. 3.—United States District Judge Emett Choate ruled today that Florida and Miami laws requiring Negroes to sit in the rear of Miami Transit Company buses are unconstitutional.

In an off-the-cuff oral opinion, which he promised to put in writing if necessary, the judge said:

I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws (pertaining to buses) are unconstitutional and hence unenforceable."

He gave the City of Miami 10 days to file a motion in answer to his ruling. The City Commission went into a special session.

After a brief meeting the Commission instructed the City attorney to study the matter further and take "whatever legal action" it feels is warranted.

City Attorney Warns

Assistant City Attorney Jack Smith, who handled the case for the City, cautioned that "anybody who attempts to intimidate or use force to make a Negro sit in the back of a bus will be in contempt of Federal Court."

Spokesmen for Florida branches of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People hailed the ruling by the 65-year-old Republican judge as a "real victory" in their fight to end segregation.

G. E. Graves, Jr., Miami, counsel for the N.A.A.C.P., and other attorneys connected with the case indicated they felt it would be futile for the City to file any answer to the ruling, since Choate spelled out so explicitly that he considers any segregated seating requirements unconstitutional.

Cites Montgomery Case

In stating his opinion Choate cited the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling against bus segregation in the Montgomery, Ala., case.

The N.A.A.C.P. filed a petition attacking segregation October 12, 1956, naming the Miami Transit Company, the City of Miami, and the individual City commissioners as defendants. Four Negroes were listed as plaintiffs.

They complained that their rights under the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution had been violated when they were forced to move from the front to the rear of Miami buses last October.

Choate's decision came on a motion from the defendants asking for dismissal of the case. The judge dropped the bus company from the list of defendants, saying the company was merely carrying out State and City requirements. But he refused to dismiss the case against the City and the City commissioners.

Line Holds City Franchise

Miami Transit operates under a City franchise.

In Tallahassee, where City buses have been halted under an emergency order issued by Governor LeRoy Collins, the Governor said he did not believe Choate's ruling would affect the situation in the State capital.

Collins ordered the buses halted Tuesday after incidents of violence occurred when Negroes ended a seven-month boycott by returning to the buses and taking front seats.

Tallahassee Negroes decided to end their boycott after the Supreme Court had ruled against segregation on Montgomery buses, the first all-out test of bus-segregation statutes in the south.

Federal Judge Dozier A. Devane of Tallahassee said Choate's ruling "has no legal effect on the litigation pending in my district." The bus company in Tallahassee filed a suit asking the Federal Court to rule on the legality of Tallahassee City ordinances on bus segregation. The City filed suit at the same time in Circuit Court asking for an order to require the bus company to enforce segregation on its buses.

Each Entitled to A Test

Devane said last week that he personally considered all segregation laws "deader than any doornail." But he pointed out the U. S. Court of Appeals had ruled each city has the right to have its segregation laws tested individually.

In Birmingham 22 Negroes have been charged with mass violation of that city's bus-segregation laws.

City buses have been fired on three times in Birmingham and five times in Montgomery. The Montgomery City Commission has ordered a 5 p.m. bus curfew and appropriated funds to hire additional policemen to prevent new violence. Negroes began riding the Montgomery buses on an integrated basis December 21, when the Supreme Court decision took effect.

JUDGE ORDERS MIAMI TO INTEGRATE BUSES

Commercial Appeal Thu. 1-4-57

Governor Of Florida Sees No Effect On Capital

Memphis Tenn.

DECISION IS A SURPRISE

P. 27

By The United Press

MIAMI, Jan. 3.—An Ohio-born Federal judge ruled abruptly Thursday that Miami and Florida bus segregation laws are illegal and the transit company served notice that 100,000 daily riders will travel on a mixed basis.

The City of Miami has 10 days in which to appeal the decision by District Judge Emett Choate which signaled the biggest bus integration attempt yet in the turbulent South.

No 'Direct' Effect

But in upstate Tallahassee, the Florida capital, Gov. Leroy Collins and state legal experts said the ruling had no "immediate or direct" effect on that city.

Tallahassee buses have been braked to a halt on the Governor's orders as a measure to preserve order. But unrest continued Wednesday night when a four-foot cross was burned at the church of Rev. C. K. Steele, the Negro minister who led attempts to integrate the buses.

With Miami now involved, a total of seven Southern cities has been brought into the bus integration struggle which began two weeks ago at Montgomery, Ala. Buses there were ordered cleared of racial barriers by the Supreme Court in what was considered the precedent case.

Judge Choate, 65, dropped a bombshell in Federal Court with an oral decision which caught everyone by surprise. The judge ruled the United States Supreme Court already had decided the question in holding that segregation on buses in Montgomery is illegal.

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence are unenforceable," the judge said.

Emergency Session

The Miami City Commission went into an emergency session to determine if the city will appeal the ruling. The bus company served notice that its buses would be integrated if the city did not appeal.

The state Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, which regulates common carriers in Florida, said there is no state law requiring segregation on buses. Counsel for the commission said each city has its own segregation laws pertaining to buses and the transit lines are not under the jurisdiction of the state commission.

Judge Choate's decision came at a hearing on a motion by city attorneys to dismiss a petition sought by four Negro women. The Negroes complained their rights under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution were violated when they were required to move from the front to the rear of a Miami Transit Co. bus last October.

The judge ended the hearing 15 minutes after it started.

"There is no use taking up a lot of time talking about something already decided," he said. "If this is merely a suit to determine the validity of segregation in buses, I think that has already been decided (in the Montgomery cases)."

City Given 10 Days

The judge gave the city 10 days in which to file an answer to the Negroes' petition but advised the city that an answer would not change his opinion. The city also can appeal his decision.

Federal Judge Dozier A. Devane of Tallahassee said Judge Choate's ruling "has no legal effect on the litigation pending in my district."

The bus company in Tallahassee filed a suit asking the Federal Court to rule on legality of Tallahassee city ordinances on bus segregation. The city filed suit at the same time in Circuit Court asking for an order to require the bus company to enforce segregation on its buses.

Meanwhile, in Birmingham, where 22 Negroes have been charged with violating segregation laws by mingling with white bus passengers, a segregation leader said "minutemen" are about ready to board the busses to keep the races separate.

Asa 'Ace' Carter, executive secretary of the North Alabama White Citizens Councils, said the minutemen "volunteers will be ready to go into action to enforce racial seating "as citizens" if the laws are knocked down by the Supreme Court.

The City of Birmingham was granted a request that the trial of the 22 Negroes be postponed until Feb. 11.

Smith warned that "anybody who attempted to intimidate or use force to make a Negro sit in the back of the bus will be in contempt of federal court."

U. S. DISTRICT JUDGE Emett Choate made the unconstitutional finding in an oral ruling. He refused to dismiss a petition by Florida branches of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People requesting an end to segregated bus seating.

The judge refused to convene a three-judge court to hear arguments in the case.

He said there was no substantial question of constitutional law in view of the recent U. S. Supreme Court decision banning segregated seating on buses in Montgomery, Ala.

The NAACP filed the suit Oct. 12, 1956, naming the Miami Transit Co., the City of Miami and the individual city commissioners.

The judge's action touched only segregation on city transit buses, but G. E. Graves Jr., Miami, attorney for the NAACP, said, "It is apparent that the decision has a much more far reaching effect than that. It can be extended to trains and to suburban and interurban buses."

Dr. A. Joseph Reddick, pastor of Miami's St James African Methodist Episcopal Church, instituted the suit as president of the Florida NAACP.

He said it had no "direct link" with legal attacks on bus segregation in Montgomery and Tallahassee, Fla., but "came out of the Supreme Court decision in the Montgomery case."

MIAMI TRANSIT CO. buses have signs asking Negro passengers to seat themselves from the rear.

Dr. Reddick noted that Miami Negroes have not been involved in a boycott and had not used any violence in their campaign against segregated seating.

"Our main concern has been to remove the statutes from the books," he said.

The bus company has contended since the case was filed that in requiring segregated seating it was merely following the laws of Florida and the ordinances of Miami and that it would continue to do so until the laws were changed.

Miami may not answer bus decision

News
Fri., 1-4-57
Birmingham, Ala.

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 4—(AP)—The City of Miami, faced with the ruling of a federal judge that its bus segregation laws and those of the entire state are unconstitutional, set the city attorney to work today studying what, if anything, will be he next move.

The city attorney, George S. Okell, said that if he "decided its a waste of time" he "won't file any answer."

THE RULING, made orally by Judge Emett Choate yesterday, apparently caught every one off guard. It came during what is ordinarily prehearing maneuvers in such cases.

No actual cases of integrated seating were reported last night. Negroes sat in their accustomed places at the back of buses.

G. E. Graves, attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said he went to court yesterday thinking "the judge was going to convene a three-judge court."

It was not immediately clear whether any state laws were invalidated.

The suit was brought by Graves for four Negro women who complained that their constitutional rights were violated when they were told to move from the front to the rear of a bus last October.

CHOATE, WHO HAD BEEN hearing a motion of the defendants to dismiss the case, told all the attorneys:

"If this is merely a suit to determine the validity of segregation on buses, I think that's already been decided."

He cited the recent ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of the Montgomery, Ala., buses. Then he said:

"I have no hesitation in saying that these segregation laws are unconstitutional and hence unenforcable."

Choate gave the City of Miami 10 days to file a motion to answer to his ruling.

The Miami City Commissioners would not speculate on their next move if Okell recommends no further legal resistance to the court order.

THE EFFECT of the ruling on state laws was not clear.

Lewis Petteway, general counsel for the State Utilities Commission, said Florida has no law that requires racial segregation on municipal buses.

Graves had appended to the suit a copy of a state law which empowers the State Utilities Commission to require segregation on common carriers. But there is a legal question whether municipal buses are common carriers as defined by the law.

TALLAHASSEE —(UP)— A group of Negro integration leaders and university students who have joined them in the drive have been summoned to appear Monday before a legislative committee investigating activities of the NAACP in Florida.

The hearing, to be held in the House Appropriations Committee room here at 10 a.m., was called by Rep. Henry Land, Orlando, chairman. Land said it will be open to the public.

He said subpoenas were issued for 20 to 25 persons over the state, most of them Negroes. Land declinded to make the names public since some of the subpoenas will not actually be delivered until Sunday.

They included Joe Spagna, 25, white Florida State University student from St. Petersburg, and Negro university students to a party on the white campus. Boardman said he is a member of the NAACP.

In Tampa, William A. Fordham, immediate past president of the state NAACP was served with a subpoena.

Land said the hearing does not specifically involve the Tallahassee race dispute "but the Tallahassee situation will enter in it."

Searcy said "the (Georgia) legislature has sunk to a new low in its attempt to have the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to the U. S. Constitution declared null and void."

"There are those who would turn back the clock of progress in Georgia. They would dally with the philosophy of slavery. They (lawmakers) are using tax-payers money to spread racial hate. This type of action is responsible for the existence of the NAACP. And Negroes who are not members of the NAACP should be ashame of themselves," said Rev. Searcy.

Others appearing on the program were Rev. William S. Mercer of Radcliff Memorial Presbyterian Church; John G. Gloster, chairman of the 1957 NAACP Campaign Membership Drive, who made the final public appeal for membership contributions; and Rev. H. I. If the America Negro wins the current battle for full citizenship rights, it must be done with faith in God, love, and charity toward all, declared Rev. C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, Fla., addressing a "Freedom Rally" of the local National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Big Bethel AME Church Sunday afternoon.

"God has blessed America as a nation, with the highest economical level. While people in other countries are dying of starvation, Americans die of gluttony," explained Steel.

"With every endowment or blessing, there goes a responsibility or obligation. We must overcome fear with faith. We must implement the decisions of the Supreme Court with fearlessness.

"When the Supreme Court in 1857 ruled on the "Separate but equal law" the white southerners grabbed the "separate" and let the "equal" go," said Steel, president of the Tallahassee Inter-Civic Council, which spearheaded the bus boycott in that city.

"We must proceed toward full citizenship without fear of anything but God. We must have love for everybody, because love is the only thing which can overcome hate," said the Baptist minister.

"We must do the right thing to be victorious. We must teach Americans love. This is our opportunity to help America in her role of world leadership," concluded Steele, who is also associated with the South-wide non-violence integration movement.

He was introduced by Rev. E. R. Searcy, pastor of Mr. Zion Baptist Church.

Three plate glass windows were smashed before dawn in a Tallahassee, Fla., grocery store owned by Dan Speed, a leader of the drive for bus integration in the Florida capital.

New York

Negro leaders in Montgomery began a non-violence campaign which they hope will "shame" the persons who dynamited churches and homes last week.

New Strategy.

In Miami, City Attorney George Okell disclosed a new strategy he thinks may overturn temporarily a Federal Court order outlawing segregation on Miami buses.

Mr. Okell said that in one of the test cases on which the order was based, the plaintiff was arrested for disorderly conduct rather than violation of a segregation ordinance. In three other cases, Mr. Okell maintained that the bus driver, who is not an agent of the city, ordered the Negroes to the rear of a bus.

Since the bus company has been ruled out as a defendant in the suit, "that leaves nothing for the Federal Court to decide," Mr. Okell said.

Leader Collapses.

The non-violence policy adopted by Negroes in Montgomery was outlined by the Rev. Martin Luther King at a mass meeting of Negroes. The Negro integration leader collapsed after his talk and had to be helped to his seat.

"If anyone be killed, let it be me," Mr. King said in an emotion-charged prayer.

About 500 Negroes attending the rally acclaimed Mr. King's leadership with an outburst of shouting and weeping that lasted 15 minutes.

Four Negro churches and homes of two ministers were bombed last Thursday. Mr. King said the violence was "the most startling and appalling expression of man's inhumanity to man."

Court Test Delayed on Bus Seating

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 11 (AP)—A Federal Court ruling on constitutionality of Tallahassee's bus seating ordinance was put off today until the state courts have passed on the question.

Washington D.C.

Federal Judge Dozier Devane told the attorney for two Negro students who have challenged the law he could not pass upon the ordinance now because they had elected to make their first test in state courts.

The two Florida A. and M. students, Johnny Herndon and Leonard D. Speed, field the Federal Court suit 12 days after they had been arrested by Tallahassee police in the first test of the seat assignment ordinance.

The ordinance, adopted by the City Commission on Jan. 7, requires drivers to assign riders to numbered seats on the basis of weight distribution, health factors and other considerations.

The students claimed the ordinance was "a subterfuge designed to perpetuate the un-American practice of segregation."

Francisco Rodriguez, attorney for the students, petitioned Federal Court to incorporate the Municipal Court record into the Federal Court case and expedite a ruling.

Devane told Rodriguez in denying the request:

"Let your people know that by their own conduct they cooked their goose at this time."

The jurist said the students themselves had selected their method of testing the ordinance.

"Instead of coming into this court legally they got themselves in state courts by force and the state courts assumed jurisdiction first."

The Negro students, and Joe Spagna of St. Petersburg, white student at Florida State University, were convicted in Municipal Court and handed the maximum penalty of 60 days in jail and $500 fines. The sentences have been appealed to circuit court.

Negroes Still Ride In Rear Bus Seats

Herald Miami Fla
Sat 8-10-57

By DOM BONAFEDE
Herald Staff Writer

Despite instructions to "ride wherever you like" Miami Negroes Friday were still sitting in the rear of buses except for a few isolated cases.

The instructions were issued by the Miami chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, following issuance of an order Thursday by U.S. District Judge Emett C. Choate to end segregated seating by Sept. 1.

Both the Miami Transit Co. and the Miami Police reported no disturbances among white and Negro bus passengers.

City Attorney George Okell said an appeal has been drafted and will be filed with the Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Earlier, the Rev. T. R. Gibson, head of the Miami NAACP, expressed hope there would be no appeal of the decision.

Okell added he will ask Choate to stay the effect of the ruling pending the appeal.

That means city and state bus segregation laws would remain in force until the appeal ruling is handed down.

Octavio Cuevas, Miami Transit general manager, denied a statement by G. E. Graves Jr., NAACP attorney, bus drivers had been given instructions not to order anyone to the rear of buses.

"We told them to avoid trouble at all costs. But if a passenger complains about a Negro sitting in the front then the driver must obey the law and ask him to go to the rear. If the Negro passenger refuses the driver is instructed to call the police," Cuevas explained.

"Actually Negroes have been riding at the front of buses in Miami for several months without any major incident," said Gibson.

Bus segregation in Miami ruled out

Herald Miami Fla
Fri 8-9-57

MIAMI, Fla., Aug. 9 (AP) — U. S. District Judge Emett C. Choate yesterday ordered an end Sept. 1 to segregated bus seating in Miami, thereby formally confirming a stand he already has made plain several times in remarks from the bench.

City Atty. George Okell said he had not read the formal ruling but would appeal it to the U. S. Fifth Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Okell said he had no choice in the matter. He said the city commission won't meet until September and a resolution orders him to "appeal in cases like this unless directed otherwise."

Choate said Miami's municipal ordinances that require segregated seating on buses are unconstitutional "in that they violate the due process and equal protection of law" provisions of the 14th Amendment.

His decision came almost 10 months after four Negro women filed petitions for throwing out the ordinances. All contended they were ordered to sit in the rear of buses.

GENERAL

21 CITIES IN THE SOUTH END BUS SEGREGATION

Daily World Sun. 1-6-57 Atlanta, Ga.

P. 1

A spot survey by the Southern Regional Council disclosed that 21 Southern cities have ended compulsory segregation on local buses without difficulty.

The cities are: Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith, and Hot Springs, Ark.; Charlotte, Greensboro, Durham, and Winston-Salem, N. C.; Knoxville, Tenn.; San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Dallas, Texas; and Richmond, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Newport News, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg, and Roanoke, Va.

In every case the desegregation took place without court action — usually by a change of policy on the part of the transit company involved. The changes caused no incidents of violence or organized protest

General

The experience of these twenty one cities contrasted sharply with recent developments in Montgomery, Birmingham and Tallahassee. There, nonsegregated seating on local buses has been met by both official resistance and sporadic violence by lawless elements.

In most of the cities checked, the SRC found that many passengers continued to follow the customary pattern of separate seating. But passengers are free to sit where they wish, and some degree of mixed seating is found in each of the cities reported.

In most cases, desegregation of local buses dates back to April, 1956, when the Supreme Court dismissed an appeal from the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals which held the Columbia, S. C., bus segregation ordinance unconstitutional (S. C. Electric and Gas Co. vs. Sarah Mae Flemming). Although the ruling directly applied only to Columbia, a number of transit companies operating elsewhere voluntarily revised their regulations.

Following is a brief city-by-city account of present bus practices:

Little, Rock, Ark.: The bus system has been desegregated, with Negroes frequently sitting at the front of the buses.

Pine Bluff, Ark.: Negroes sit in all sections of the buses.

Fort Smith, Ark.; Segregation signs are no longer on the buses, but generally Negroes seat from the rear.

Hot Springs, Ark.: Although segregation is not enforced, Negroes tend to sit together at the rear of the buses. The situation is similar to that in Fort Smith.

Charlotte, N. C.: Integrated seating has been more in evidence since the ruling in the Flemming case, but separate seating was not strictly enforced prior to that time. Mixed seating is found on all routes.

Greensboro, N. C.: Mixed seating is in evidence on all routes though many Negroes continue to sit toward the rear of the buses.

Durham, N. C.: Similar to the situation in Greensboro.

Winston-Salem, N. C.: All bus routes have been desegregated, in practice as well as in policy.

Knoxville, Tenn.: Segregation was ended by the bus company following the Flemming decision. All bus routes now have mixed seating.

San Antonio, Texas: The transit system has been desegregated for more than a year

Corpus Christi, Texas: The same as San Antonio.

Dallas, Texas: Bus drivers do not enforce segregation though most Negroes sit toward the rear of the buses.

Richmond, Va.: On April 24, 1956 the Virginia Transit Company announced it would no longer enforce bus segregation laws. Most Negroes contiuue in the customary segregated seating pattern.

Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Newport News, Va.; Bus desgregation became effective shortly after the Flemming decision was announced. Some customary segregation remains.

Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg, and Roanoke, Va.; Desegregation is now in effect on the buses of these cities. Mixed seating is regarded as normal, though some Negroes continue to sit at the rear of the bus.

Southern Regional Council Tells of Desegregation Without Court Action

Mon. 1-7-57

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 6 (UP)—The Southern Regional Council reported today that twenty-one cities in five Southern and border states had ended bus segregation without violence.

The council said that these cities, in Arkansas, North Carolina, Virginia, Texas and Tennessee, had dropped laws against mixed seating without court action. New York

The council is an inter-racial organization with the announced purpose of bettering race relations in the South. According to its founders, "it works for democratic solution of Southern problems, by Southerners themselves."

The council said that while segregation laws had been dropped in the twenty-one cities, in many of them Negroes still took seats in the rear of the buses. It said, however, that in many others, mixed seating was common. General

Cities Listed

The council listed the cities as Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith and Hot Springs, Ark.; Charlotte, Greensboro, Durham and Winston-Salem, N. C.; Richmond, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Newport News, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg and Roanoke, Va.; San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Dallas, Tex., and Knoxville, Tenn.

Meanwhile, no near incidents were reported today in cities where bus integration attempts had brought violence.

There were no attacks on buses in Montgomery, Ala., where integration was ordered following a decision of the United States Supreme Court. Montgomery buses have been fired on four times. A Negro woman was wounded in the leg by a bullet that passed through the side of the bus.

In Birmingham, Negroes have returned to the rear of the buses and both white and Negro leaders are awaiting a Federal test of local bus segregation laws.

At Tallahassee, Fla., bus service has been suspended by an order of Gov. Leroy Collins. In Miami, a Federal judge ruled last week that because of the Supreme Court decision, Miami and Florida state bus segregation laws are unconstitutional. The state has announced it would appeal the decision.

21 Cities Ended Bus Segregation Without Difficulty

Force Showdown Over Bus Bias

Defender P. 1

Negroes throughout the South last week were forcing a showdown on local bus segregation laws.

The movement, obviously inspired by the successful bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., had spread to several cities by the end of the week.

The pattern followed in most cities was for Negroes to ignore local jim-crow laws by sitting anywhere on the vehicles and causing a legal test of the laws by being arrested.

This happened in Tallahassee, Fla. and Birmingham, Ala. In Mobile, an order by the bus company to its drivers to ignore segregated seating was countermanded by the city commission.

SET TO DEFY LAW

In Nashville and Baton Rouge, Negroes told city officials they were prepared to defy local segregation laws unless buses were desegregated in accord with a recent decision by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Opposition to the growing determination of Negroes to end jim-crow seating came from city officials and local pro - segregation groups notably the White Citizens councils.

Generally, bus companies were willing to concede that jim-crow seating had no legal support.

This attitude also was reflected by a majority of the whites and was summed up by U. S. District Judge Dozier Devane of Tallahassee. After issuing an injunction that would prevent interference with integration on buses, he said Thursday night:

"Segregation is as dead as a doornail."

VIOLENCE

Meanwhile, Tallahassee Negroes vowed they would ride the buses and "sit where we want," but they would announce the move publicly.

While Negroes were merely trying to observe the new law of integration, White Citizens councils and the Ku Klux Klan were stirring up violence and several incidents happened:

On Christmas night, the home of Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, leader of the Birmingham integration movement, was demolished by a dynamite blast. His three children and a house guest were slightly injured.

MINUTE MEN

Two days later the White Citizens Council and Klan threatened to put "minute men" on the buses to keep Negroes in the rear seats, and city officials began arresting all Negroes they found riding near the front of buses.

Twenty-two bus passengers were arrested before Rev. Shuttlesworth declared:

"It is no longer necessary for our citizens to ride unsegregated at this time. Our riding together without violence proves most clearly that men can work together in a spirit of good will. Now we can let the issues be settled in court."

TRIAL THURSDAY

The 22 Negroes were placed under $100 bond each and will be tried Thursday.

In Montgomery, Ala., shotgun pellets and bullets riddled two buses, but the Negroes sat on the buses where they wished, disregarding the incident.

In Tallahassee, a crowd of 200 whites frightened the Negroes out of boarding city buses en masse on a non-segregated basis last Thursday. The Negroes had announced earlier that at least five would board each available bus during the afternoon and occupy front seats. In the face of the mob, they called it off.

Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the Inter-Civic Council, which is leading the integration fight, declared: "We don't want any demonstration or violence. We will continue riding the buses, however."

Negroes began riding Tallahassee buses on a non-segregated basis last Monday and Wednesday night the City Commission revoked the bus company's charter.

Later nine bus drivers and the company manager were arrested and charged with operating buses without a franchise. The bus company put up $100 bonds for the nine who were arrested and continued service, contending the city must give 30 days notice before cancelling the franchise.

JUDGE'S ORDER

The bus company then appealed to U. S. District Court Judge Dozier Devane who granted a temporary restraining order stopping the city of Tallahassee from interfering with its operation.

After receiving the restraining order, for an indefinite period, the company — Cities Transit Inc. — asked the court for a permanent restraining order and $100,000 damages from the city.

Judge Devane gave no ruling on the latter two claims, however, and indicated they should be settled in Tallahassee circuit court.

In granting the injunction, the judge declared:

"I think the bus company is entitled to that much protection from this court."

In Mobile, Ala., Negroes made no attempts to mingle with whites despite the Mobile City Lines announcement that it would not enforce segregated seating, and in Baton Rouge, La., leaders discussed possibilities of joining the Birmingham and Tallahassee integrated movements.

While no open action has been taken in Nashville, Tenn., buses are expected to be integrated soon. George H. Cate, counsel for the Nashville, Transit Authority, said he believes the state and city jim-crow ordinances are now unconstitutional.

In Tampa, Fla., the NAACP has announced it will take legal steps to end the jim-crowing seating arrangements on buses there.

Montgomery Bus Fired at; Virginia Mixing Is Upheld

Journal + Constitution Tues. 1-1-57 P. 1

By United Press

Gunfire ripped a Montgomery driver's bus for the third time Monday, while in Virginia the integration struggle was marked by a court decision that could indirectly shut down schools in two big centers.

W. H. Fullilove reported a shot was fired into his bus as he drove through a Negro section about 6 a.m. (CST). He said he saw a flash from a passing automobile. When he examined the bus he found a slug hole, apparently from a .38 caliber weapon, just below the driver's seat.

THREE WHITES ABOARD

Three white men aboard the bus "appeared calm through the whole thing," said Fullilove. "There really wasn't much they could do."

This was the fifth firing on a bus since the Supreme Court ordered Montgomery's city transit system desegregated 10 days ago, climaxing a bitter campaign by Negroes which included a year-long boycott. A Negro woman was wounded by a sniper shot into Fullilove's bus Friday night and his vehicle was fired on again the same night.

The City Commission has discontinued night bus runs for the New Year holiday period but Monday's assailant found concealment in the predawn period.

TALLAHASSEE FUROR

The White Citizens Council sought to whet up opposition to intergration in Tallahassee, Fla., where dozens of Negro leaders rode in front seats again today. The bus line there has gone to court seeking the right to let down the color barriers.

In Richmond, Va., the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld lower court orders for immediate desegregation of schools in the city of Charlottesville and the county of Arlington, a part of the metropolitan Washington, D.C., area.

The decision foreshadowed an early use of the state's new law which automatically shuts off funds for any schools that integrate the races. Virginia has one alternative, another new law that provides for pupil assignment to the schools.

Under this arrangement pupils could be sent on an individual basis to schools picked out for them by a three-man statewide assignment board. This board could see to it that schools were filled with all-white and all-Negro students under a new kind of segregation, and local school boards which might feel differently on the issue would have no authority.

The unanimous decision upholds a lower court ruling ordering the Charlottesville school to end segregation last September. It backs up another ruling ordering Arlington County to integrate elementary schools by Jan. 31, 1957, and its higher public schools by next September.

Date for delivery of the opinion to the lower courts is Jan. 31, 1957, and the rulings will become effective on that date.

GENERAL

Ministers Ask Ike To Aid Bus Integration

Daily World Sat. 1-12-57

Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

By THADDEUS T. STOKES

A delegation of Southern Negro leaders from 10 southern states, representing 29 communities, Friday, telegramed President Dwight D. Eisenhower to "come south immediately to make a speech in major southern cities urging all southerners to accept and to abide by the Supreme Court decisions, as the law of the land. And use the weight of your great office to help solve the violent racial disorder arising over civil rights."

Telegrams were sent to Vice-President Nixon; Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell. In the message to Nixon they urged him to make a fact-finding tour of the South similar to the one he made on behalf of Hungarian refugees, so he could report to President Eisenhower on the economic boycotts, reprisals and bombing and violence directed against the Negroes who are attempting to assert their rights.

In the telegram to Brownell they requested a conference to discuss the recent bombing of four churches and two homes of Negroes in Montgomery, Alabama in as much as they believe it is in connection with the Supreme Court's orders to desegregate the buses.

CONTENTS TOLD

Contents of the telegrams were revealed at a press conference Friday afternoon, held following a two-day closed conference, called by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. head of the Montgomery Improvement Association. The conference was held at Ebenezer Baptist Church, 407 Auburn Avenue.

Rev. King said, Jan. 10-11, "this is the first conference of its kind ever held in the South. He termed the conference "Southern Negro Leaders Conference on Transportation and Non-Violent Integration," newly organized.

Among the more than 60 Negro leaders from the south and north were the Reverends C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, Florida, F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, Ala., and T. J. Jemison of Baton Rouge, La., all are heading "bus integration fights" in their respective towns.

Rev. King said that the SNLCTNI conference is not affiliated in any way with the Love, Law and Liberation Movement here in Atlanta, headed by Rev. William Holmes Borders, who was arrested and jailed along with five other legal ministers, Thursday, for "violating the state segregation law" when they rode in "for whites only" seats on Atlanta buses.

King went on to say that any threats of violence in Atlanta about bus segregation is a separate operation from this conference.

He also said that the SNLCTNI conference was called to plan strategy to work toward obtaining "human dignity and to seek justice for all Negroes in the south and in the nation. And to urge all Negroes to reject segregation everywhere without physical violence." He said the new organization of which he was named temporary chairman, will include leadership from the entire south.

He said they hoped to obtain their goal by non-violence under the motto: "Not one hair of one head of one white person shall be harmed." Daily World

REV. SHUTTLESWORTH

Rev. Shuttlesworth said, under questioning, "that the conference did not work on any specific plans for any particular community." Our plans were much broader.

Dr. King said that he felt that Montgomery's chief of police was doing his best to maintain law and order, but he was not sure that the men under him were.

However, he said he felt that the Ku Klux Klans would not revive to a great extent. I am sure that they were not very successful in Alabama in a recent membership drive.

King was very optimistic when a reporter asked if he thought that the whole south would have desegregated buses by 1960. He smiled and replied, "I hope sooner than that." Adding, "I realize that it is difficult to make a transition. In our conference we agree that this job must be done through conferences on the local level between white citizens of goodwill and Negro leaders. The job cannot be done wholely by favorable court decisions. Wherever it is possible we want to avoid court cases in this integration struggle."

EVERY PHASE

When the five ministers were asked if their plans included "integrated schools." They replied "we are concerned with desegregation in every phase of life in the South."

When asked when would they start on the "other phases" King answered, "It is difficult in a struggle of this kind to put a time element on the various phases."

When asked what would they do if the white citizens resorted to violence, King said "it is unwise to say because to predict is to invite violence."

The leaders revealed that one point of the conference was to urge Negroes and whites of each southern community to hold meetings and discuss the racial problems in their particular area and work toward a solution for integration.

USE GOODWILL

They also urged that white southerners of goodwill to:

(1) Join the struggle for justice, individually and collectively, because legal approaches are not fully a remedy because treatment of Negroes is a basic spiritual problem.

(2) Christians should accept all members regardless to color or race, on equal basis.

(3) School and colleges, controlled by churches should set examples of brotherhood.

(4) White southerners should realize that the major choice may no longer be segregation or integration but law or lawlessness.

(5) Christians should speak out on morals so as to reduce violence directed toward Negro community and restore order and hasten reconcilliation.

FUTURE PLAN

When questioned about their future plans after the bus integration had been accomplish the leaders refused to spell out the procedure they would use in obtaining "complete integration." However, it is believed that they will seek to obtain equal service in public places.

Also discussed was techniques for registering and voting for all eligible Negroes in the South.

Among the many telegrams received from well-wishers were one from Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and one from Lillian Smith, Georgia's author of "Strange Fruit."

She stated, "the supreme court ruled bus segregation unconstitutional. It is our duty to accept the decision. The transition will not be difficult if Christian people take a firm stand. It can be dangerous if the good white people remain silent and fail to take a stand ....."

Mrs. Roosevelt's telegram stated in part "..... I am deeply distressed by the violence occurred. I would suggest an appeal to the President of the United States since this is a Supreme Court order." She had reference to the bombing of the four Negro churches and two homes in Montgomery.

The sixty Negro leaders call upon all American Christians to set aside the Sunday of Brotherhood week in February as a day of repentance and prayer for bombing of churches. They also suggested to Dr. J. H. Jackson and Bishop D. Ward Nichols of New York to ask the National Council of Churches to forward the idea to every church in the nation.

Among the delegation were many Northerners: Russell R. Lasley, of Chicago, an executive of the United Packing House and Meat Cutters Union; Charles Hayes also of the union; and Rev. Owen D. Pelt, of Chicago, historian of the National Baptist Union.

It was also revealed that temporary officers were elected at this meeting. And a committee had been appointed to plan for the next meeting which is scheduled to be held in New Orleans, La., sometime within the next three months.

Southern states represented included, Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Florida, Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi and Texas.

Dynamiters Hit Churches In Alabama

Post and Courier Herald P. 1

Bus Crisis Deepens, 5 Negro Ministers Held in Atlanta

Sun 1-11-57

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (AP) — Atlanta officials arrested Negro leaders today for violating bus seating laws, and Montgomery, Ala., declared a state of emergency in the South's worsening segregation crisis.

Officials of Montgomery stopped all bus service, called in auxiliary police and warned parents to get their children off the streets. Six dynamite blasts shook the city early today.

Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama offered a $2000 reward for information leading to conviction of the terrorists.

A police patrol wagon picked up five Negro ministers at an Atlantic church before they could begin a mass march to the courthouse to post bond on charges of violating segregation laws.

A sixth minister, whose wife was ill and who was not arrested, was named in warrants sworn out by Mayor William B. Hartsfield.

The six were among a dozen Negro clergymen who made a brief "test run" in the traditional white section of an Atlanta bus yesterday.

Those arrested were the Rev. William Borders, leader of Atlanta integration forces; the Rev. Roy Williams, the Rev. R. P. Shorts, the Rev. A. Franklin Fisher and the Rev. H. Bussey. The Rev. Joseph Johnson was named but was not picked up.

The five ministers were taken to the county jail, booked, fingerprinted and placed in $1000 bail each. All five posted bail and were released in a matter of minutes.

Undaunted, the preachers said "This is exactly what we wanted" as they climbed into the patrol wagon.

"We won't need to ride the buses any more until this thing is resolved in the courts," said The Rev. Borders, explaining that the arrests would clear the way for an immediate test of Georgia bus segregation laws.

Wisely Suspended

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

Negro leaders in Birmingham, Alabama, and Tallahassee, Florida, have called off further organized testing of bus segregation. Thus far enough Negroes in both cities have been arrested under state laws and municipal ordinances to provide ample grounds to carry the matter into federal courts. They wisely realized that until these courts take judicial notice that the Supreme Court's recent decision applies to these two cities as well as to Montgomery, Alabama, mass challenges to sectional taboos as well as to local laws would gain nothing at the cost of trouble.

The Montgomery bus boycott early took on a temperate, disciplined character due in large measure to the leadership of the Rev. Martin Luther King. Negroes began "riding desegregated" after Montgomery was officially notified of the Supreme Court's decision on its case.

Out of Montgomery has come a pattern of nonviolent resistance, American style, that may yet be of great significance in this transition from a partially segregated to a non-segregated nation. But it is not yet apparent that it has been successfully exported to other localities. Nothing in reports from Birmingham and Tallahassee indicates that the Negro challenges have been other than orderly. They do suggest that their leadership has been a bit uncertain and confused.

Meanwhile, in the legal struggle, the significant news comes from Tallahassee. There the bus company took pains to obey the federal court first and to let its personnel be arrested for violating the local code. It can come before the federal court, therefore, with "clean hands." Corporations have a way of looking a long way ahead.

'IKE' DIXIE TRIP URGED TO AID INTEGRATION

60 Negroes Want Immediate Visit By President

TERROR STATE CLAIMED

By The United Press

ATLANTA, Jan. 11.—About 60 Negro leaders, asserting that "a state of terror prevails," urged President Eisenhower Friday to come South immediately and use the "weight of his office" to bring about Southwide compliance with integration rulings.

The Negroes called for presidential help as the hurling of "Molotov Cocktails" at a Chattanooga bus kept the South in racial turmoil.

Meet Two Days

A statement issued after a two-day meeting of Negro leaders from nine states also called on Vice President Richard Nixon to make a "tour of the South" similar to the one he made in Europe on behalf of Hungarian refugees.

The question of Federal responsibility in the crisis should be discussed by United States Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell and representatives of the Negro group, the leaders said.

Heading the Negroes was Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the year-long Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott whose followers finally won vindication when the Supreme Court overthrew Alabama Jim Crow seating laws.

Even as the Negroes called upon white Southerners to choose between "anarchy and law," a new showdown was shaping up at Tallahassee, Fla., which with Montgomery has been one of the main integration test centers.

Order Is Revoked

Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida revoked his emergency order which suspended Tallahassee bus service on New Year's Day as a safety measure. The city, meanwhile, has adopted a new ordinance making bus drivers responsible for assigning seats so as to provide maximum safety and "health" for the passengers.

This was seen in legal circles as a means to continue segregation, but Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee Negro integration leader, said the Negroes planned to ride where they pleased.

King was named chairman of a new Southern Negro leadership conference to pursue the Negroes' drives for integration in various fields. He predicted that bus integration would be a reality before 1960. But the conference made no specific plans for pressing integration in any particular city.

Actually, there had been no integration of buses in Chattanooga. But the Southern Coach Lines, operators of city buses which also run from the Tennessee city to suburbs in North Georgia, announced early this week that the last screens separating the races had been removed from the vehicles.

Follow Old Pattern

Negroes, however, had continued to file toward the rear for seats with whites sitting up front in the traditional Dixie pattern. About midnight Thursday night, a man crouching in a culvert hurled two gasoline-filled bottles at a Chattanooga bus near Rossville, Ga., a suburb.

Walker County, Ga., Sheriff John Brock said driver Frank Bailey reported he was making his final run when the bottles, which Russian guerrillas called "Molotov Cocktails" in World War II, were thrown.

One hit the road in front of the bus and the other bounced off the rear bumper without doing damage. Six or seven white passengers were on the bus at the time.

No buses were running, meanwhile, in Montgomery, where Thursday's series of bombings prompted a cancellation of service.

Reported efforts to organize a new all-white bus system also came to light in Montgomery.

Conference Held

Two city attorneys and a member of the Alabama Legislature conferred with United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., for more than an hour Friday, reportedly about the proposed new all-white transit line.

Judge Johnson is one of two Federal judges who ruled bus segregation invalid last June 5 and issued an injunction prohibiting continued enforcement of segregation laws on city lines buses "or any other public bus transportation facility."

Attorneys who conferred with Judge Johnson reportedly sought to learn whether an all-white bus line operated by a "club" whose "members" alone could ride the buses would violate the court injunction.

Bus situation in a nutshell

CHATTANOOGA—Bus segregation was ended here Monday without incident. All racial signs have been removed by the Southern Coach Lines, operators of the vehicles. Most riders appeared to be unaware of the change.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Segregation on city buses is dead. Students who began their tests a month ago, continue to ride unsegregated without reprisals from the police or bus drivers. Colored passengers are now being encouraged not to sit in the rear.

NASHVILLE — City-operated transit vehicles are expected to be desegregated this week. A ruling from the city attorney has held that city and state segregation laws are no longer valid.

ATLANTA—Six ministers, arrested by Howard Baugh, a colored detective, are expected to be indicted by the Fulton grand jury on charges of violating the state segregation law. They had ridden a bus unsegregated on Tuesday.

NEW ORLEANS — The New Orleans Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance and the New Orleans Improvement League announced plans to seek a declaratory judgement in Federal court compeling the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., to operate its buses unsegregated. The company had earlier rejected an appeal to comply with the law.

MEMPHIS—The transit company here, already defendant in a desegregation suit, will be hailed in Federal court here on Feb. 1. to explain why it refuses to operate its buses without segregation. The action has been planned by the NAACP.

MIAMI — The City of Miami is appealing the Federal court ruling which outlawed segregation on Miami Transit Co. buses. Judge Emmett C. Choate told plaintiffs: "You people can just sit anywhere."

TALLAHASSEE — Buses resumed operation again Saturday after Gov. Leroy Collins lifted a Jan. 1 suspension. A new seat assignment arrangement has been denounced by colored leaders as "a wilful deprivation of constitutional rights and a crime against the United States."

MONTGOMERY—The bombing of four churches and two parsonages brought a second halt to operation of integrated buses here. White people for the first time are experiencing what colored passengers went through voluntarily for 381 days during the bus boycott. The Montgomery Advertiser has urged the city commission to lift the ban and operate the buses under police guard.

BIRMINGHAM—Trial of 22 persons arrested for violating Birmingham's segregation laws has been set for Feb. 4. No further efforts to ride buses unsegregated has been made by members of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

MOBILE—In the wake of two bombings, a mass meeting to discuss an attack on bus segregation here was postponed by J. L. LeFlore, leader of the protest. One of the unexploded bombs was found on his porch. The bus company here has already removed racial signs from its vehicles, but city officials insist city and state segregation laws will be enforced.

BATON ROUGE, La.—A Federal court order ending bus segregation will be asked here this week by a group of ministers after they had been warned by Attorney General Jack Gremillion that jail would await anyone who violated the state's jim crow laws. Gov. Earl Long expressed hope the test "will be all peaceful."

Militia Called Out; Bus Riding Goes On

Leaders Spearhead Meeting

MONTGOMERY — Four churches and two ministers' homes were bombed Wednesday night in a new and concerted outburst of mob violence over bus integration and the mobsters went into the Negro section and shot through a bus. No injuries were reported. The FBI is reported to be making an investigation of this newest racial outbreak. The curfew which had been lifted early this week because of "cooperation of the public" was resumed Wednesday night. In Atlanta Negro ministers in a drive to integrate the buses were scheduled to ride them in relays of large groups Thursday morning. They began Wednesday by riding in the white section of the buses. Governor Marvin Griffin has ordered the militia to stand by in case of violence.

MONTGOMERY — In an effort to coordinate and spur the campaign for integrated transportation in the South, a two-day conference is being held Thursday and Friday, Jan 10 and 11, in Atlanta, Ga.

The emergency conference is being called by Rev M King, Jr of Montgomery, Rev C K Steele of Tallahasse and Rev F L Shuttlesworth of Birmingham. Negro leaders from troubled areas all over the South are expected to attend to share thinking, to discuss common problems, to devise a unified strategy and to

A Philip Randolph, a vice-president of the AFL - CIO and International president of Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters will deliver one of the opening addresses. Mr Randolph of New York, Dean of Negro leaders is attending the conference as a fraternal representative from the North.

Rev King will open the conference by presenting eight working papers. These include such subjects as:

(1) Dealing with violence directed toward the Negro communities.

(2) The role of law in the struggle.

(3) A unified strategy in the campaign for integrated buses.

(4) Economic sharing.

(5) Dedication to non-violence.

(6) The relation of registration and voting to all efforts for justice.

In their call, the Negro leaders said:

"We are convinced that most white southerners are prepared to accept integration as the law of the land. On the other hand, a small but willful minority, dedicated to violence is resorting to threats, shootings, cross burning and bombings.

"In this manner, they seek to intimidate Negroes and to frustrate our highest laws. They believe we will retreat from the realization of democracy for all.

"This conference is called because we have no moral choice, before God, but to delve deeper into the struggle- and to do so with greater reliance on non-violence and with greater unity, coordination, sharing and Christian understanding."

The conference is convening at 2 p m at the Ebenezer Baptist Church, 407 Auburn avenue, Atlanta, Georgia. The two-day working session will be closed to the public. However, following the consultations, a public statement to the nation will be issued. A press conference will be held at the end of the last session, Friday evening, January 11.

BUS SITUATION AT A GLANCE

MONTGOMERY — Daylight operation of buses on an integrated basis resumed here Tuesday after Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers assigned squad cars to escort them. No incidents have been reported.

TALLAHASSEE — Spurred by a warning from Gov. Collins that he would take state action if local police do not halt racial violence, Police Chief Frank Stoutamire angrily told his officers Friday they must break up continued shooting and stoning of colored person's homes. Buses have been operating on an integrated basis, although a new city law empowers drivers to assign seats to passengers.

MIAMI — Two boys, Joseph Sands, 17, and Vernon Clark, 18, were put off a bus by police after taking seats directly behind the driver. The NAACP had urged its members to "sit anywhere" after the City of Miami, appealing a Federal court ruling outlawing segregation, had argued no proof exists the jim-crow ordinance had been enforced. The White Citizens Council got in the act by announcing it would photograph any colored person who insisted on sitting in the front of a bus. The threat failed to frighten colored passengers who sit where they please.

BIRMINGHAM — The U. S. District Court has been asked to issue an order declaring city and state laws requiring bus segregation to be unconstitutional. A hearing will probably be held around Feb. 22.. Meanwhile 22 persons arrested for violating the laws are slated for trial on Feb. 11. No further attempts have been made to ride the buses non-segregated.

ATLANTA — The Fulton grand jury Tuesday indicted the Rev. William Holmes Borders and five other ministers on charges of violating Georgia's segregation laws. A week before they had boarded a city bus and had taken front seats. "This is just what we wanted — a chance to make a quick court test of these laws," the ministers, out on $1,000 bonds each, told reporters.

MOBILE — Thirty organizations issued a joint statement condemning violence and asking full enforcement of city laws against cross burnings and the use of explosives. Patriotic citizens were also called upon to repudiate the Klan. Numerous cross burnings and two bombing attempts have been made here although there has been no organization effort to ride buses unsegregated. The bus company removed racial signs from its vehicles three weeks ago, but city officials also ordered police to continue enforcing the city's Jim Crow ordinance.

NEW ORLEANS — A drive begun here to black out Mardi Gras activities among colored people this year with funds being donated to finance a court test of Louisiana'a bus segregation law. The Rev. T. J. Jemison is leading the movement. The Rev. M. L. King of Montgomery is scheduled to speak here Feb. 1 on his non-violence campaign. King Zulu and other notables will be missing from this year's Mardi Gras celebration.

MEMPHIS — Private Charles A. Nabors, 29, of Mumford, Tenn., accused of taking a front seat on a bus beside a white child was fined $100 and given two 90-day sentences here. No other attempts to ride buses unsegregated have been made here, but a suit challenging Tennessee's bus segregation law is pending in Federal District court.

MONTGOMERY — Members of the Alabama League of Municipalities representing 24 cities endorsed a resolution Tuesday pledging continued enforcement of bus segregation although the state's law has been declared unconstitutional. Jack Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, who has been enjoined against enforcing the law, told the mayors it was still valid everywhere but Montgomery. John Kasper, White Citizens Council leader of Washington, showed up in Alabama for a speaking tour but did not linger in Montgomery.

Tension

BIRMINGHAM—The Rev. N. H. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights and himself, a recent bombing victim, submitted in writing a request to officials that closer scrutiny be paid to the sources and purchase of explosives, and that Negro citizens be accorded fair treatment by police.

LOS ANGELES—The CIO will push legislation for an effective fair employment act in the 1957 session, the California Industrial Union announced. The objective will be a law designed to eliminate discrimination in employment based on race, creed or color.

NEW ORLEANS — More than 75 per cent of the local social clubs will foresake their usual dances and parties to dedicate themselves to "the cause for total freedom," climaxing their efforts in a public meeting in the New Orleans Coliseum Feb. 1. The Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott, will be principal speaker.

ATLANTA — In a bitter denouncement of the attempt of Atlanta ministers to desegregate city buses, William T. Bodenhamer, director of the States' Rights Council of Georgia, said it would be "better for white people to stand rather than sit with Negroes on buses."

RUSTON, La. — Jack Shaffer, 44-year-old janitor, told police a car occupied by white men attempted to run him down as he walked to his job. Shortly afterward, a cross was discovered burning near May's Chapel Church in the same vicinity, and Police Chief O. O. Osborn said he believes the same persons are responsible for both incidents.

Rev. Dennis To Attend Ga. Bus Parley

Rev. Dave A. Dennis, pastor of Sixth Union Baptist Church, left New Orleans Wednesday to attend a two-day Southwide session by Baptist ministers in Atlanta, Georgia to discuss the bus segregation situation.

Featured speakers at the confab which gets underway Thursday will be such leaders as the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala.; Rev. C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, Fla.; Rev. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, Alabama; and Rev. T. J. Jemison of Baton Rouge.

The meet is expected to attract a large cross section of Negro spiritual leadership in the South. And it is believed the outcome of the discussion will "tone" the pattern of action to be taken throughout the South in the Negro citizens' fight to throw off the "chains" of "Jim-crowism."

REPORT ON BUS DESEGREGATION

Times P. 8-C

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Feb. 2—For a month now the South's tribulation over Federal judicial rulings attacking the complex structure of racial segregation in public facilities has been highlighted by the particular issue of desegregating intrastate transportation.

New York

Because of violence, that includes dynamiting of Negro churches and homes and snipers' gunfire at buses bearing passengers of both races, the accounts of community distress have centered on Montgomery and Birmingham, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla. In all these cities large-scale Negro efforts to integrate buses have resulted in the stormiest reaction by recalcitrant white persons.

General

At the same time enforced bus segregation has been dropped without violence and without specific court action in at least twenty-one cities in five Southern and border states.

Checkered Pattern

Consequently it is clear that the bus integration issue right now pretty much follows the same regional checkerboard pattern of compliance and noncompliance that has marked the course of the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation statutes. The recalcitrance appears to harden in proportion to the conviction of the white population that any breach in the Jim Crow wall is to be likened to the legendary hole in the dike.

Also of some importance is the fact that the Federal court ruling against racial separation of passengers on common carriers dealt specifically with litigation over an Alabama state law and a Montgomery city ordinance.

In mapping the Department of Justice's campaign to enforce this phase of the transportation seating problem, Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. advised Federal district attorneys in the area that "it is now clear" that any law, statute or regulation requiring separate seating "is a dead letter."

But segregationists in many instances take the stand that Jim Crow bus statutes in their communities are valid until struck down in specific court suits. This tends to produce a climate in which the violence-goaders rationalize their acts by saying, "the law hasn't been changed here." Also, because of the related theme of political reprisal, some white officials seem to feel they need a court test before they can wield a reasonably firm hand in support of local compliance.

Most Appealing

Of all forms of public-facility desegregation, bus integration would naturally appeal most to the Negroes as a whole. It embraces the high and the lowly, the youth and the adult. It touches the daily lives of the Negroes more than any other form of segregation. Normally the average Negro in an urban setting rides a common carrier twice a day to and from employment, market place or school. Often he has to transfer from one bus to another, shoulder his way to the rear, sometimes submit to discourteous conduct by drivers and almost always view the Jim Crow signs that spell out his role of torment.

Consequently the rank-and-file Negroes are probably not as thoroughly concerned over any other aspect of the segregation issue, such as equal admission to public schools, colleges, professional associations or municipal recreation facilities.

Unlike the public-school issue, bus integration is not hedged with complex administrative problems and legalistic maneuvering. No qualification or special talent is needed for getting on a bus.

Shallow Roots

Moreover, Jim Crow transportation has far more shallow roots than does the public-school problem in the sociological context. For the most part the separate seating laws were imposed around the turn of the century and even then were in many instances a fairly superficial manifestation of segregation mores and customs.

In addition, desegregation in interstate transportation has been achieved under Federal court rulings in recent years without any dire consequences. This further highlights for Negroes their rejection of any local talk about "serious social implication."

So the issue has become a very meaningful symbol to the Negro in the sense that it underscores for him a whimsical and arbitrary attitude on the part of the white recalcitrants. The Negro today finds a stark illogic about the importance of bus seating to white recalcitrants, and as a result Negro leaders cannot respect at any level the arguments for continued bus segregation.

It is not difficult to find many Negroes, who, while they may not agree in principle, understand the reaction of the white population in posing "sociological injury" as a defense against school integration.

It Is Seen as Symbol To Negro and White

"High fidelity."

Thiele in The Los Angeles Mirror-News

"As I was saying——!"

But intransigence over bus integration is something the Negro leader finds hard to put up with and therefore he is inclined to be more assertive about the outcome, particularly when he feels so strongly that the solution is highly susceptible to group efforts and is supported by rank-and-file Negroes along with a sizable segment of the white population that spurns the pettifogging aspects.

Non-Violence Theme

It is this background that accounts generally for the sudden spread of the movement to obtain bus integration. And as a spectacular adjunct the Negro leaders have introduced the Mahatma Ghandi theme of non-violence vis-a-vis their violence-minded oppressors.

For the Negro view that bus segregation has long meant a role of suffering under sheer perversity there is at hand an almost felicitous opportunity to point up his latent potential for practicing non-violence.

In the segregation framework the Negro has had to survive as a subordinate segment of the population by exercising restraint from the overtly hostile word or deed, by employing indirection to get much of what he wants without aggressively offending the white supremist.

Thus far the Negro leaders have had remarkable success with their non-violence technique. Its prime exponent has been the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a Montgomery minister, whose skills in this maneuver are being charted for use in other communities in the near future.

Entering Wedge

For the intransigent white population the main symbol seems to be the view that bus integration would be just another wedge in cracking the segregationist cause on other more fundamental things, which in most cases means public school desegregation.

For many of the strong-minded segregationists the bus integration issue constitutes a skirmish on the forward battlements. They cry, in effect, "Don't give in on anything at this stage."

There are many persons of goodwill who are cautious in outlook and who see some immediate problems of "public order and welfare" affecting integrated buses in areas of harsh segregation customs and high Negro population ratios. But there is a fundamental difference between this transitory problem and the stand taken by the "hold-the-line-at-all-costs" group.

Indeed, Mr. King has emphasized publicly that he attributes a large measure of recalcitrance to the "shock element" in adjusting to difficult new ways. Nevertheless, he adds, the Negro cannot put off his demand that local officials prepare to support bus integration as the law of the land.

In the twenty-one cities where enforced bus integration has ended there was clearly an admixture of goodwill, leadership and a refusal or unwillingness to view bus integration as symbolic of a "frontline skirmish."

First Showdown

At present what all this means for the integration issue in general is that bus integration will likely provide the first real showdown between enforcement of Federal court rulings and segregation barriers buttressed in recent months by public officials and lawmakers in the die-hard segregationist areas.

For the rigid areas have erected intricate "legal" defenses to hold off school integration, assuring their followers that no form of integration would be tolerated. Whether there will be any instances of coming to terms on bus integration and whether it will produce reassessment of the whole subject of compliance with court orders bids fair to be the next step in the drama.

RODS IKE ON SEGREGATION.—The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Montgomery, Ala., reads at a news conference the telegram sent to President Eisenhower Friday stating that a mass pilgrimage will be made to the nation's capitol if the President does not take a stand calling for enforcement of the Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregation. Negroes tell Ike they may march on Washington

Fri. 2-15-57

Birmingham Ala.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 15—(AP)—Negro leaders envision thousands of praying people marching to Washington unless President Eisenhower speaks out to the South on segregation violence.

The warning came to the president yesterday in telegrams sent by the Southern Negro Leaders Conference, headed by Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala.

"This will not be a political march. It will be rooted in deep spiritual faith," he told a press conference after his group ended a two-day closed meeting.

King, leader of the Montgomery bus boycott, said he did not know exactly what form the pilgrimage would take. But he said he was sure thousands of whites would join thousands of Negroes in what the telegram called a "pilgrimage of prayer."

"IF YOU, our president, cannot come South to relieve our harassed people, we shall have to lead our people to you in the capital in order to call the nation's attention to the violence and organized terror directed toward men, women and children," the telegram said.

King said the conference, comprising 97 men from 10 Southern states, would be satisfied if Eisenhower spoke in the North but pointed his remarks to the South.

"But we would prefer him to speak in a troubled Southern city, one that has been the scene of violence," he said.

THE TELEGRAM also asked the president to call a White House conference on law and order.

Noting that Eisenhower had turned down an earlier conference request to speak in the South, the telegram asked him to reconsider.

Since the Jan. 11 request, the wire continued, "violence has continued to erupt by night and by day. It has grown to alarming proportions. . . We are no longer faced with sporadic violence, but with what appears to be an organized campaign of violence and terror. . . .

". . . Our people, though resolute and courageous, cannot be expected forever to be targets for rifles, shotguns and for bombs, particularly when our women and children are brought within range of those deadly weapons.

"MR. PRESIDENT, we urge you to give democratic leadership to the confused citizens of the South and the nation in this critical hour."

Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, said "we are not threatening the president with this telegram."

Telegrams also were sent to U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, asking him to meet with the conference and Southern U. S. district attorneys; Vice President Nixon, asking him to make a fact-finding tour through the South; and Sen. Thomas C. Hennings (D., Mo.), chairman of the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights, and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 14 (AP)—Southern Negro leaders, headed by the Rev. Martin Luther King, today called on President Eisenhower to speak to the South on segregation or face a mass pilgrimage to Washington.

After sending a telegram to the President, Dr. King told a press conference he did not know exactly what form the pilgrimage would take. But he said thousands of Negroes, joined by thousands of whites in both the North and South, would go to Washington.

"This will not be a political march. It will be rooted in deep spiritual faith," said Dr. King, leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

The telegram to the President was drafted at the end of a closed two-day meeting of the Southern Negro Leaders Conference, comprising 97 men from 10 states.

They asked the President to reconsider his refusal to speak in the South on what they called the breakdown of law and order due to segregation problems.

WHITE HOUSE 'NAY'

The conference, meeting in Atlanta, Ga., last Jan. 11, had asked the President to speak anywhere in the South. A week later, Dr. King, temporary chairman, received an answer from the White House that Eisenhower would be unable to schedule such a speech.

Dr. King told newsmen today Negroes would be satisfied even if Eisenhower spoke in a Northern city but addressed his remarks to the South.

The telegram also urged the President to call a White House conference on the maintenance of law and order.

'ACTS OF VIOLENCE'

"We believe such a conference can help develop in the South and in the nation an orderly growth toward civil rights," it said.

Since the last message, the telegram stated, "violence has continued to erupt by night and by day. It has grown to alarming proportions. Some of the acts of violence would be unbelievable were the grim ruins not mute testimony.

Southern Leaders Organize

Weekly Times New Orleans La. Sat. 2-23-57

Some 97 Negro leaders from 35 communities of ten Southern states met here on Thursday, February 14, to answer the negative reply made by President Eisenhower to come South to speak out for law and order. The one-day meeting was held at New Zion Baptist Church, Third and LaSalle Sts., of which the Reverend Dr. A. L. Davis, Jr., is pastor.

The presence of these modern day freedom fighters and crusaders for law, order and justice, has served as a uniting element for Negroes wherever they meet. The Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., who has been the guiding force of this Christian-like, non-violent movement, was elected president of the organization which went into permanent organization.

This soft-spoken young disciple of righteousness and 20th century Moses, as the Rev. King has often been referred, electrifies his audiences, stimulates their thinking and desire for the promised-land of full freedom which is in view from the "mountain tops of just thinking." He brings with him an air of confidence which literally captivates those coming in contact with him, not to a point of "stirring up trouble," as he has been claimed by opponents of integration, but arousing in them a desire to move forward on freedom's road peaceably.

This was the position expressed by a reader recently in a letter to the Editor. Clover Johnson of this city, wrote that "It is certain that the presence of Rev. King has stimulated the Negroes of New Orleans to get one hundred percent behind the movement and we are proud of his leadership."

The basic action of the Conference was in the sending again of a telegram to President Eisenhower inviting him to speak out against the growing lawlessness and violence against Negroes in Southern states. It was pointed out in the communication that "Under the cover of darkness, dynamite bombs have been exploded in our churches and the homes of our ministers and citizens." It further implied that the Negro is no longer faced with sporadic violence, but with what appears to be an organized campaign of violence and terror."

A similiar communication sent to the President following the Atlanta meeting of SNLC, January 11, 1957, to which Mr. Eisenhower gave a negative reply of his inability to schedule an address in the South.

The communication of last Thursday contained the following requests of the President: (1) That he re-examine his decision not to speak out to the south on the question of law and order; and, (2) That a White House Conference on the maintenance of law and order similiar to those held earlier on Education and Juvenile Delinquency be called by the President.

In the telegram, which was signed by Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., Montgomery; Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee; Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., New Orleans; Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham; and, Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge, it was indicated that "In the absence of some early and effective remedial action, we shall have no moral choice but to lead a Pilgrimage of Prayer to Washington."

Rev. King indicated that this was no THREAT to the President and the Nation's Capitol, but an expression to the Nation and the World that our cause is just, moral and Christian-like action. "This is not to be confused with what has been known as A MARCH ON WASHINGTON as we commonly know it," said Rev. King.

Rev. King announced that the name of the Conference by unamimous vote had deleted Negro from the organization's name, which would give evidence to numerous of other racial groups that they are welcome, if interested in the movement, to join the Conference. The conference is now known as the Southern Leaders Conference.

Rev. King was the principal speaker on Thursday night at a Mass Meeting held at New Zion. Other speakers included Rev. Kelly Miller Smith of Nashville, Tennessee, Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, Alabama and the Rev. Martin Luther King, Sr. of Atlanta, Ga.

Other officers elected to head the Conference are Rev. C. K. Steele, Tallahassee, Fla., Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., New Orleans, Rev. Samuel Williams, Atlanta, all vice presidents; Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge, Secretary; Rev. Medgar W. Evers, Jackson, Miss., Assistant Secretary; Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Montgomery, Ala., Treasurer; Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham, Historian; and Atty. Louis Berry, New Orleans, La., Parliamentarian. Attorney I. M. Augustine, Jr., New Orleans was elected to the executive committee.

Rev. Jemison announced that the telegram had been sent to Vice president Richard Nixon; Senator Thomas C. Hennings, Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights; Congressman Emanuel Cellers; and, Attorney General Herbert Brownell.

He further stated that the membership of the Southern Leaders Conference, although leadership has come from the clergy, is not restricted to ministers of the gospel. "Persons and organizations interested in freedom for all, regardless of race or color, and willing to abide by the purpose and methods proposed by the Conference may become members," stated Dr. Jemison.

The next meeting of SLC has been set for Montgomery, Ala., the "Cradle of the Confederacy" of yesteryears and the "Birthplace of Freedom Lovers" of the present. The actual date will be announced.

New 'March On Washington'

The mass pilgrimage to Washington planned by southern Negro leaders unless President Eisenhower breaks his silence and speaks out against violence over segregation in the South is reminiscent of another "March on Washington" planned and almost carried out by Negroes back in 1941—15 years ago.

Then the issue was jobs in national defense industries. The leader of the movement was A. Phillip Randolph, brilliant leader of the Pullman porters. Today, the threatened march is on the issue of continued violence and intimidation against Negro citizens by white southerners who resent the U. S. Supreme Court decisions against segregation. The leader today is the dynamic and forceful Martin Luther King Jr.

The 1941 March on Washington was planned by a committee made up of Randolph, the late Walter White, Lester B. Granger, the Rev. William Lloyd Imes, Frank R. Crosswaith, Layle Lane, Richard Parrish, Dr. Rayford Logan, the late J. Finley Wilson, the Rev. Adam C. Powell Jr., Noah A. Walters and E. E. Williams. Some of these names are no longer familiar. Others are still in the news and on the firing line.

Under Randolph's leadership, it was planned that 100,000 Negroes would be mobilized and would march on Washington on July 1, 1941, to protest discrimination in defense industries. Just as Negroes today are weary, resentful and depressed over the continued defiance of the Supreme Court by their white southern neighbors, Negro citizens in the early '40's were bitter and desperate over being refused jobs in defense plants all over the country, regardless of their qualifications. America was preparing to go out again to defend democracy while at the sime time it was practicing undemocratic principles at home.

When Randolph proposed a march on Washington, the idea caught fire and thousands of Negroes were making plans to make the trip to the nation's capital. But the "march" was not made. It became unnecessary when on the very eve of the great mobilization of resentful citizens, President Roosevelt issued his now famous "Executive Order 8802" which called upon defense employers and labor organizations "to provide for the full and equitable participation of all workers in defense industries without discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin."

FDR ordered that all contracting agencies of the government include in all defense contracts a provision obligating the contractor not to discriminate against any worker because of race, creed or color. To carry out his order, he set up in the Office of Production Management a committee on fair employment practice which throughout the war years enforced the executive order. From that moment, Negroes began to get employment in defense plants commensurate with their skills and abilities.

Today, President Eisenhower is not called upon to issue an executive order. The order has already been handed down by the Supreme Court. All the President is asked to do is to use the moral powers of his high office to influence the dissendent elements in the South to obey the law as established by the court. "Just a word" is all that is asked of the President today. His response so far to numerous requests that he speak out has been silence. His aides have said that he is "too busy." The President of this great land of ours has many perplexing problems facing him. None, however, not even the critical Middle East situation, is more important, nor more far-reaching, at this moment than that of safeguarding the lives and the freedom of law-abiding citizens in the South. The President should speak out against lawlessness and defiance of the Supreme Court. Such a statement on this vital domestic issue would help his negotiations with foreign countries. He has kept silent too long.

Pilgrimage Unless Ike Speaks Out

Southern Leaders Want Eisenhower To Hit Violence

NEW ORLEANS. — (INS) — A mass pilgrimage to Washington is planned if President Eisenhower does not agree to a second request of Negro leaders that he personally urge the South to accept integration.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader of the Montgomery, Ala., movement to end racial segregation, said a group of Negro leaders from ten Southern states have joined in another appeal for the President to speak out against continued segregation, and violence in the South.

The group originally asked the President to make a major address on civil rights in the South. Last Thursday in another two-day meeting, the southern Negro leaders conference said the President is now being urged to speak on the topic, even though he cannot arrange a speech in the South.

The alternative, King said, would likely be a pilgrimage to Washington of thousands of Negroes from the South, to be joined by other thousands of Negroes and whites from other parts of the country.

The conference leaders called on the President "to enunciate, whether in the North or South, an "Eisenhower doctrine for Democracy at Home."

The President was also urged to call a White House conference on preservation of law and order, to "help develop in the South and in the nation an orderly growth toward civil rights," the Rev. King said.

Desegregate Buses in 21 Dixie Cities Peacefully

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-12-57

ATLANTA, Ga.—A spot survey by the Southern Regional Council disclosed that 21 Southern cities have ended compulsory segregation on local buses without difficulty.

• The cities are: Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith, and Hot Springs, Ark.; Charlotte, Greensboro, Durham and Winston-Salem, N. C.; Knoxville, Tenn.; San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Dallas, Tex.; and Richmond, Norfolk, Portmouth, Newport News, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg and Roanoke, Va.

In every case the desegregation took place without court action . . . usually by a change of policy on the part of the transit company involved. The changes caused no incidents of violence or organized protest.

The experience of these 21 cities contrasted sharply with recent developments in Montgomery, Birmingham and Tallahassee. There, non-segregated seating on local buses has been met by both official resistance and sporadic violence by lawless elements.

IN MOST of the cities checked the SRC found that many passengers continued to follow the customary pattern of separate seating. But passengers are free to sit where they wish, and some degre of mixed seating is found in each of the cities reported.

In most cases, desegregation of local buses dates back to April, 1956, when the Supreme Court dismissed an appeal from the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, which held the Columbia (S. C.) bus segregation ordinance unconstitutional (S. C. Electric and Gas Co. vs. Sarah Mae Flemming). Although the ruling directly applied only to Columbia, a number of transit companies' operating elsewhere voluntarily revised their regulations.

Following is a brief city-by-city account of present bus practices.

Little Rock, Ark.: The bus system has been desegregated, with Negroes frequently sitting at the front of the buses.

Pine Bluff, Ark.; Negroes sit in all sections of the buses.

Fort Smith, Ark.: Segregation signs are no longer on the buses, but generally Negroes seat from the rear.

Hot Springs, Ark.: Although segregation is not enforced, Negroes tend to sit together at the rear of the buses. The situation is similar to that in Fort Smith.

Charlotte, N. C.: Integrated seating has been more in evidence since the ruling in the Flemming case, but separate seating was not strictly enforced prior to that time. Mixed seating is found on all routes.

Greensboro, N. C.: Mixed seating is in evidence on all routes, though many Negroes continue to sit toward the rear of the buses.

Durham, N. C.: Similar to the situation in Greensboro.

Winston-Salem, N. C.: All bus routes have been desegregated in practice as well as in policy.

Knoxville, Tenn.: Segregation was ended by the bus company following the Flemming decision. All bus routes now have mixed seating.

San Antonio, Tex.: The transit system has been desegregated for more than a year.

Corpus Christi, Tex.: The same as San Antonio.

Dallas, Tex.: Bus drivers do not enforce segregation though most Negroes sit toward the rear of the buses.

Richmond, Va.: On April 24, 1956, the Virginia Transit Co. announced it would no longer enforce bus segregation laws. Most Negroes continue in the customary segregated seating pattern.

Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News, Va.: Bus desegregation became effective shortly after the Flemming decision was announced. Some customary segregation remains.

Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg and Roanoke, Va.: Desegregation is now in effect on the buses of these cities. Mixed seating is regarded as normal, though some Negroes continue to sit at the rear of buses.

NAACP Spurs Drive, Aided by Gifts of Million

By the Associated Press

Plans for a stepped up campaign to integrate buses in the South will be discussed in Atlanta this week by Negro leaders encouraged by a report the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People received more than $1 million in receipts in 1956.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., of Montgomery, Ala., last night called on Southern Negro leaders to attend a strategy meeting in Atlanta Thursday and Friday "in an effort to coordinate and spur the campaign for integrated transportation in the South."

"We have no moral choice, before God, but to delve deeper into the struggle," said Mr. King, leader of the 381-day Negro bus boycott which ended peacefully in Montgomery December 21 with federally ordered bus integration.

Hits "Wilful Minority"

"We are convinced that most white Southerners are prepared to accept integration as the law of the land," he said. "On the other hand, a small but willful minority, dedicated to violence, is resorting to threats, shootings, cross burnings and bombings."

The Rev. C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, Fla., and the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, Ala., joined Mr. King in urging Negro leaders "from troubled areas all over the South" to attend. Both Mr. Steele and Mr. Shuttlesworth have been active in campaigns for integrated buses in their respective cities.

Mr. King said the meeting would be closed to the public, but that a statement will be issued after it is over.

Strong Support Noted

In New York, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, said yesterday that court prosecution of the NAACP in some Southern cities and defiance of desegregation rulings stirred a record wave of "financial and moral support."

He told the organization's annual meeting that NAACP receipts hit a 1956 peak of mare than $1 million. The income came mostup in smalll contributions from thousands of individua[illegible] he said.

Thur[illegible]ood Marshall, special counsel for the NAACP, said that t[illegible] organization was going to [illegible]ontinue to support legal effort[illegible] n the South and at the same [illegible]me concentrate "on break[illegible] down segregation in the N[illegible]h."

Appeal for Funds

Your Help Needed in Bus Fights

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-12-57

Appeals for funds have been issued by supporters of bus protest movements in both Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla.

In Montgomery a committee of ministers has been organized to plan a national campaign to raise funds which will be used to rebuild churches and homes that were damaged in the mass bombings of last Jan. 10.

Spokesmen for the group say that all contributions are being acknowledged and noted that all checks should be mailed payable to the Montgomery Improvement Association, 530 S. Union St., Montgomery 8, Ala., and earmarked for the "Reconstruction Fund."

In Tallahassee the tremendous cost of continued litigation and fines has caused supporters of the bus boycott there to app[illegible] to the nation for more funds.

The Tallahassee group [illegible]nounces that all don[illegible]ons should be sent to the Inter-Civic Council, 803 Floral St., Tallahasse, Fla.

Nesbitt said he told Post, "As far as I know, you could be a Negro, yourself." Then it was, he said, that Post struck him.

Although the U.S. Supreme Court has held bus segregation in Montgomery illegal, litigation being carried on by the NAACP in Florida has not reached the Federal court stage and the state's segregation statutes are still being enforced.

REV. MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., president of the Montgomery Improvement association (wearing hat, 2nd from left) and Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy (in dark suit) first vice president of the association, make a trip on a city bus in Montgomery, Ala. after U. S. Supreme Court upheld a Federal court ruling that bus segregation was unconstitutional.

Integration

(From The New York Daily News)

The meaning of the bus disorders in various Southern cities—Birmingham, Montgomery, Tallahassee—is that Negro foes of race segregation on public vehicles are struggling in various ways to extend throughout the South the principle of the U. S. Supreme Court decision holding such segregation in Alabama unconstitutional.

Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., says this decision has made dead letters of all bus segregation laws anywhere in the country, but more than a few white Southerners refuse to buy Brownell's interpretation of the decision.

It looks like a fair bet that desegregation—integration—will eventually win out down South, but it may take a long time. Meanwhile, we can expect more or less violent disturbances now and then in Southern cities.

Meanwhile, too, it's awfully nice to live up North, where virtually nobody gives a hoot who sits next to whom on any public conveyance.

Segregationists Now Try To Avoid Federal Courts

By J. RUSSELL BONER

ATLANTA — (INS) — Colored leaders in the South moved this week to break down bus segregation in previously calm spots and pro-segregationists endeavored to keep racial disputes from reaching federal courts.

Birmingham city officials, Thursday, admitted switching charges against 22 colored citizens arrested for riding buses in an integrated manner, as both sides of the racial segregation clash altered strategy throughout the South.

Authorities in Birmingham said that charges against 22 Negroes arrested last week have been changed from violating a segregated seating ordinance to disorderly conduct and breach of peace, and planned to ask for a trial delay.

CITY ATTORNEY J. H. Willis said he would ask for a delay of the trial, which was set for Friday, in order to interview witnesses.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth leader against discrimination in Birmingham, urged colored citizens to obey existing laws until the 22 had been tried. However, he recently said, "If they change or drop the charges against the 22 Negroes, they may have to do the same for thousands."

TWO BIRMINGHAM men, one white and one colored, reported they have been threatened with bombing. The white man, Dave Campbell, a radio announcer who frequently discusses the integration problem, said he was told his name was "next on the list."

Two Birmingham homes were dynamited during the holiday season.

IN MONTGOMERY, Ala., the City Commission extended its emergency cancellation of night bus service through Tuesday, Jan. 8.

In Baton Rouge, the Rev. T. J. Jemison, minister who led the boycott in the Louisiana capital, indicated a change in tactics. Earlier Rev. Mr. Jemison said he would seek a test case against city bus segregation ordinances by having a Negro board a bus in the presence of a law officer. Thursday he said he may seek

WHEN THIS happened, it was said, the driver simply stopped the bus, left and brought another in which he carried the white passengers, leaving the colored passengers sitting in the unattended vehicle.

The Florida governor said he was halting operation of buses "until further notice" because of what he termed "irresponsible Negro leadership" and headline-hunting press radio and television media. The last session of the Florida legislature gave the governor "emergency powers."

COLLINS ADVISED Tallahassee Negroes to move less quickly in breaking down traditional segregation. A Federal District Court order bans interference with bus integration in the Florida capital.

With Negroes now integrated buses in Montgomery, 27-year-old Rev. Mr. Steele moved to get the same results in Atlanta. Speaking before some 5,000 persons at a fund-raising dinner for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, he called on Atlanta Negroes to integrate, adding:

"IT MIGHT mean going to jail, and it might mean filling up the jail houses and it might mean physical death for some, but it is a small price to pay for the freedom of future generations."

In Birmingham, the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Movement for Christian Rights said, "There has been some talk that the 22 Negroes charged with violation of city segregation laws will be dropped or changed."

HE ADDED to the cheering crowd:

"If they drop the charges for the 22, they may have to drop the same charges for thousands."

Negro Leaders Of 4 Cities Meet Here Thursday

Negro leaders from Montgomery, Birmingham, Tallahassee and Atlanta will meet Thursday at 2 p.m. in the Christian Education building of the Ebenezer Baptist Church to discuss integration of bus transportation.

The Rev. M. L. King Sr., pastor of the church, whose son, the Rev. M. L. King Jr., is a leader of the bus integration movement in Montgomery, said Monday the meeting would assemble a limited group, and that the problem would be discussed in workshop fashion.

Besides the Kings, those scheduled to attend include the Rev. C. K. Steel of Tallahassee, the Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth of Birmingham, and A. Philip Randolph, a vice president of the AFL-CIO. The meeting will continue through Friday.

Montgomery Buses To Roll Again; Tallahassee Negro Stores Stoned

Courier-Journal Wed. 1-12-57 P. 8

Louisville, Ky.

Vehicles To Get Police Escort

From Wire Dispatches

The South's fires of racial unrest flickered up in one spot yesterday as quickly as they were stamped out in another.

The City of Montgomery, Ala., decided to resume daytime runs of integrated buses, with police cruisers escorting the final twilight runs.

But a shower of bricks on Negro establishments broke the calm at Tallahassee, Fla.

In Atlanta, a grand jury indicted six Negro preachers for violating the Georgia Jim Crow law by riding in the white section of a bus.

Brick Hurlers Unidentified

Montgomery buses will start running again this morning after a six-day suspension prompted by a wave of dynamitings of Negro churches.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said a police car would accompany each bus on its 5:15 p.m. run, the last one of the day under the continuing sundown curfew. The night runs were suspended originally during the holidays when six buses were fired on and one Negro rider was wounded.

Unidentified persons riding in a jalopy hurled bricks through the windows of two Negro groceries in Tallahassee, where bus service has just been resumed.

State Law Held Violated

Negroes have not attempted to mingle with whites on Tallahassee buses since service was resumed under a new ordinance authorizing drivers to assign seats and, in effect, continue segregation.

These other developments occurred:

1. Judge John J. Parker of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals stayed for 30 days his order for integration of schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County, Virginia, which had been scheduled to take effect January 31. The stay was granted to permit an appeal by the state of Virginia to the Supreme Court.

2. Bills were introduced in the Georgia Legislature to abolish compulsory school attendance and give the governor broad powers to act in the event of integration attempts. Governor Marvin Griffin pointed out that a compulsory-attendance law was used to carry out integration in Clinton, Tenn.

Miami Asks Suit Be Dropped

3. A bill was put before the South Carolina House to close any integrated public school and invoke State police powers to give the governor direct control.

4. The City of Miami asked that a Federal Court suit against the City's bus-segregation laws be dropped since the ordinances never have been enforced.

As a result, Miami leaders of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People told Negroes to take seats anywhere they like on city buses since segregation laws are not enforced.

U. S. District Judge Emett Choate has ruled that the Miami bus-segregation laws are unconstitutional.

5. In Arlington, Va., Circuit Judge Emory Hosmer denied the appeal of a white woman who was fined $15 for refusing to take a seat apart from Negroes at a political rally. Miss Faith Bissell, 43, had refused to move to the white section.

6. At Americus, Ga., a roadside market of a biracial communal farm group was blasted for the second time. Investigators said apparently dynamite was thrown from a passing car and blew parts of the building 100 feet or more, causing $5,000 damage. The stand was dynamited July 23 and damage was estimated at $3,000.

GOVERNOR GRIFFIN
Urges school-law change

The Bus Issue Is Legally Settled

World Sat. 1-12-57 P. 8

When the Supreme Court of the United States first issued its decree on the un-constitutionality of school segregation at the public school level, even the die-hard could see that segregation was on thin ice everywhere and in everything public. Reason would suggest that once the practice started disentegrating, it was only a question of time when it would frazzle around the edges and cave through in the center.

B'ham, Ala.

There were those on the segregation side who admitted this in their posing of circumventive measures; they even said here in Georgia that it could last "a long time" because the question faced law-suits in as high as 159 separate counties!

Some had the inconsistency to say when the question blew up in South Carolina that it would "have no bearing in Georgia." Many said the same thing in other states when the Primus King decision outlawed white primaries.

They did not say that they were right, they did not say that they were un-constitutional; but satisfied their clientele by saying — like the lark told her young when they told her the farmer came and said he would get his friends to come and help "cut his wheat." The elder lark who knew something about human nature and the fallacy in depending upon friends, kept telling her young (until the farmer said he was going to do it himself) — "we still can stay a little longer."

Now, how long is a "little longer?"

Judge Choate, down in Miami, Florida the other day, when four Negro women came in with another bus segregation case took only fifteen minutes to settle it with — "this thing has already been settled in the Montgomery bus situation." The able judge added — "no use in further wasting valuable time on something that is past."

So, somebody at last had the courage to crack down in a death-blow in what has been capitalized on every political front in the South.

Politicians readily seized the question right after the court outlawed segregation in the public schools. They took to the stump in full blown proportions every manner of race bait — to tell the white people that their salvation would depend upon how well they supported those candidates who would see to it that circumventive measures would prolong the implementation of the court's order.

Judge Choate simply said in what took off to be one of those "little longer" durations, "no use in wasting time on something already settled."

Sooner or later this will go also for the much talked debates around cloture in the United States Senate. The filibuster will claim to be the saviour of the South through the balking of what is termed the President's Civil Rights legislation.

From here what is to be filibustered? The court has interpreted from the already written and enacted legislation such commitments as are necessary for the free and unlimited circulation and enjoyment of all people in a civil society. Filibuster what?

Those who claim that the President's Civil Rights legislation is to further the cause of integration and the Republican party, might look on the other side of the picture and see political fruit also for those who wish their constituencies to see that they are filibustering to further same them from something already decreed by the courts.

Just how long the people would be fooled, was our greatest concern. Somebody was bound to crack down on this political toying.

Judge Choate has pointed the way; the tree has been cut down, and the limbs have fallen with the tree, — according to Judge Choate.

Integrated Buses Make Headway on 2 Fronts

Herald Tribune

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 8 (AP).—The City of Montgomery decided today to lift the sundown curfew on buses because of "good co-operation" from the public. In Florida, Gov. LeRoy Collins said in his inaugural address the state is ready for bus integration if it is not made compulsory.

While tension appeared to be easing in the South's bus-seating crisis, Negro leaders were marshaling their forces against a "small but willful minority" of whites "dedicated to violence" to prevent integration.

Negro spokesmen will hold a two-day meeting in Atlanta starting Thursday to "spur the campaign" and discuss "violence directed toward the Negro communities."

A series of sniper shots from the dark prompted Montgomery to put a curfew on bus runs after 5 p. m. during the Christmas holidays and the curtailed service later was extended through tonight.

Florida's Gov. Collins, inaugurated for a second term, said schools can not be integrated in his state in "the foreseeable future." But he said Florida appears ready for some forms of racial integration, such as on the buses, and can gain nothing by defying the courts.

He said Federal Court decisions thus far do not make integration of the schools compulsory but recognize local conditions. Florida, he said, has laws that will maintain segregated schools "so long as such is wise in the light of social, economic and health facts of life."

He also said: "Boycotts, ultimatums and peremptory demands can never achieve what persuasion, peaceful petition and normal judicial procedures can do for the Negro race."

While praising Gov. Collins, Negro leaders in Tallahassee attacked the new city plan to make bus drivers responsible for assigning seats so as to preserve order, without regard to race as such.

Negroes in New Orleans Sue for Bus Integration

Journal + Constitution P.8-a

Sun. 2-3-57

By United Press

Negro leaders in New Orleans Saturday pressed for an end to segregation on city buses, while in Montgomery, Ala., where court-ordered bus integration was first tried, police arrested a seventh white man in connection with racial violence.

Atlanta Ga.

Negroes in New Orleans filed a Federal Court suit challenging a state law which bans mixing the races on city buses, and then met Friday night for a speech by the man who led Montgomery's fight to pull down the color barriers.

The suit, filed by A. P. Tureaud, an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, asked the court to issue a temporary order restraining the city from enforcing such segregation laws.

THE SUIT charges that the laws cannot be enforced because they are unconstitutional and opposed to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. appeared before New Orleans Negro leaders and warned that the Ku Klux Klan is being reborn in the form of "supposedly respectable white citizens councils."

King, who led the successful fight to break down Montgomery's bus segregation laws, said, however, "old man segregation is on his death bed, but the guardians of the status-quo are on hand with oxygen tents to keep him alive."

King, whose appearance was sponsored by the Negro groups behind the Federal Court suit, urged the city's Negroes to get behind the integration movement and work hard. However, he advised them to avoid violence.

MEANWHILE, police in Montgomery announced that they had arrested a seventh white man in connection with recent bombings of Negro homes and racial violence.

Officers said that Kyle Livingston, 19, was charged with dynamiting the Hutchinson Street Baptist Church and released on $2,500 bond.

The Rev. H. H. Johnson, pastor of the Hutchinson Street Church, signed the warrant for Livingston's arrest, officers said.

Johnson will be tried Feb. 8 with six other white men arrested for bombing Negro homes and churches following the U.S. Supreme Court order that ended bus segregation in Montgomery. King's home was among those bombed.

IN BIRMINGHAM, Ala., the city asked a U.S. District Court to throw out a suit by 21 Negroes asking that local bus segregation be declared unconstitutional.

The motion, filed four days after a similar motion by the Birmingham Transit Co., contends that the 21 Negroes who face trial later this month in a city recorder's court have appealed to the Federal Court prematurely.

Barricades Are Obsolete

Nation Sat. 3-2-57

Machine guns, tanks and tear gas were supposed to have made it impossible for unarmed citizens to successfully defy, much less overthrow, a modern police state. But in Barcelona nearly a million and a half people have discovered a means of resistance that has Franco & Company thoroughly baffled. On January 14 a boycott of buses began when fares were increased from sixty to eighty centimos. The boycotters have carefully avoided violence. Large police details stand idly at major intersections as heavily guarded but conspicuously empty buses roll down the streets. In South Africa, 60,000 Africans have launched a bus boycott in Johannesburg and Pretoria in protest against an increase of twopence a day in fares. The South African authorities are making the capital mistake of invoking violence to crush a non-violent protest movement, thereby converting an economic issue into a major political struggle. Thus non-violence, which Gandhi first used as a technique while working for Indian immigration in South Africa and later carried with him to India, has now returned to Africa by way of Montgomery, Alabama, and Tallahassee, Florida, and is proving its effectiveness in Spain.

The bus boycott has obvious advantages as a non-violent tactic. It can be quickly organized by word-of-mouth; mass meetings, leaflets and organization are not necessary. It imposes hardships but minimizes risk. The leadership is not conspicuous. It challenges authority obliquely on a specific issue—segregated seating, a rise in fare or the like—which usually has a strong appeal in itself. It can paralyze a city. It is dramatic. It gives people a sense of power and, at the same time, builds unity and discipline. And it cannot be crushed by force. The tyranny of the modern police state may be invulnerable to direct attack, but the bus boycotts are demonstrating that it can be circumvented by the inventive application of non-violent tactics.

NEGRO PASTORS OPEN 'LOVE AND LAW' CRUSADE

Daily Herald Chicago Ill. Thurs. 1-10-57

Sing, Pray on Atlanta Bus in Whites' Seats

Atlanta, Jan. 9 (AP)—Negro ministers today began a "love, law, and liberation movement" to end racial seating barriers on buses at this Georgia capital, a stronghold of segregation.

The plan was given its name last night at a mass heeting at the large Wheat street Baptist church, where it was perfected. The first step was delegated to 100 Negro pastors and the wife of one of the leaders said it began as scheduled at 10 a. m. today.

The first effort to change seating customs caused several white passengers to leave a bus and the vehicle was returned to the trolley barn.

20 Negroes Board Bus

About 20 Negro clergymen boarded a partly filled bus at Whitehall and Mitchell sts., in the downtown section shortly before 11 a. m. Six took empty seats at the front and midway of the bus. Several others sat in forward seats.

Three white women left the bus. Several other white women sitting in forward seats remained. No Negroes sat beside white persons but in seats in front of and behind them.

The bus driver let the bus stand. R. L. Wages, a transit company supervisor, walked from his station a few feet away. He looked inside the bus and ordered the driver:

"Let it sit here."

Some one outside shouted "it's not going anywhere" and the remaining whites aboard left the bus.

Sing, Pray, and Read Bible

Wages called a crew of mechanics to look at the bus, indicating that it was out of order. He said he would send it to the barn. The mechanics tinkered with its mechanism and the bus took off with the Negroes aboard, singing, praying, and reading the Bible.

They rang the exit bell at Boulevard st. and attempted to leave by the front door. The driver asked them to leave by the rear.

"We want to go out this way," said the Rev. William Holmes Borders, chairman of the desegregation move. The driver let them leave thru the front door.

Enforcement of regulations that Negro passengers seat from the rear and white from the front of the buses presumably rested with city police. Chief Herbert C. Jenkins declined to say what steps he might take to prevent further moves by the Negroes.

Governor Hears of Move

The Atlanta city attorney, Jack Savage, explained that bus segregation is decreed by Georgia state law which requires municipal authorities to enforce it. The law, he said, also gives bus operators police powers of enforcement.

Gov. Marvin Griffin said he had received word of the bus desegregation move and had conferred with Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook on the matter.

Griffin said he was told a bus load of Negroes would come to Atlanta from Montgomery and Birmingham to make the bus integration effort. He said if he caught anyone trying to incite people to riot or violence he would try to "nip it in the bud."

The Georgia governor, he said, is charged with the responsibility of preventing trouble and that that doesn't mean "waiting until it starts."

The Bus Issue Here Is Now In The Court

Daily World Fri. 1-11-57

With the arrest of five ministers and the surrender by a sixth one yesterday after they made attempts to ride the local bus Wednesday without observing the state segregation law puts the issue in the courts. All six ministers were required to post a bond of $1,000 each on the charge of violating the state law which requires separation of the races on the buses.

Atlanta, Ga. P. 4

The ministers accepted arrest good naturedly and this action will provide the basis for legal settlement of this question which has reportedly been under discussion with various parties concerned, including city officials, at various times during the past several months.

Of course, as we have stated before in these columns, in the light of the Montgomery decision and two other decisions on the bus issue in three other states, we had hoped that Atlanta could have met her bus question without the need for further litigation. But since the city took the position it did in the matter, there is no alternative except the court.

The decisions referred to above have all clearly stated bus segregation was unconstitutional.

In the meantime, Rev. William H. Borders, one of the leaders of the ministers who launched the desegregation effort, has stated there will be no further action at desegregation of the buses by his group. This we think is a wise and logical decision because where there is a contest over a legal question, it can only be finally settled through the court.

Georgia Readies Law For Bus Halt Powers

Montgomery, Ala.

ATLANTA, Jan. 2[illegible] — Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said today he will draft a law giving Gov. Marvin Griffin police power to close down a public transit system in case of an emergency.

Cook said the law would be similar to the one used by Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins in shutting down the Tallahassee bus system. He added that he contacted Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin for a copy of the Florida statute.

The bill will be submitted to Griffin for final approval and will be ready for the Jan. 14 opening of the General Assembly.

ATLANTA — Atlanta's "Love, Law and Liberation" movement has struck a responsive chord in the hearts of leading American citizens in the wake of the arrest of six prominent clergymen who defied the city's 1890 segregation law governing public transportation.

Free on $1,000 bonds are Revs. William Holmes Borders, R. B. Shorts, A. Franklin Fisher, R. W. Williams, B. Joseph Johnson and Howard Bussey.

Defender Sat. 1-26-57 P. 1

Chicago, Ill.

ATLANTA — An indictment was returned here last week by a Fulton Superior court grand jury charging six ministers with deliberately violating Georgia's bus segregation law, as a test of its validity against the recent U.S. Supreme court ruling on transportation on public conveyance.

At the same time, Gov. Marvin Griffin, in his annual state of the state message before a joint session of the general assembly, pledged that "as long as I occupy the governor's chair, there will be no breakdown in the pattern of segregation in this state."

The governor's message declared that, in the two and a half years since the U. S. Supreme court banned racial segregation in public schools, "the effect of this unconstitutional and unlawful decree has not been felt in Georgia yet. The fact is no mere accident.

PROTECT ALL

"We are going to protect our white and colored citizens in Georgia from mob violence, abuse and unbridled intimidation . . . by maintaining Georgia's sacred heritages and traditions."

He held that the state's "unprecedented" prosperity is "unfortunately being threatened ruthlessly through unwarranted and unauthorized interference by the federal judiciary in the purely internal affairs of the states."

He added, "In this crisis, Georgia stands firm . . . our precious institutions stand free and unsullied in this perilous hour."

INDICT SIX

In the bus segregation incident, the grand jury returned its true bills against the six ministers — Revs. William H. Borders, R. B. Shorts, Joseph Johnson, A. Franklin Fisher, Howard Bussey and R. W. Williams — after calling only one witness, Ganis V. Daniel, conductor of a City Transit line bus.

Daniel was operator of the bus which the ministers boarded recently and refused to take back seats when he ordered them to do so. They rode for six blocks on the bus, before Daniel stopped the vehicle and declared it was "out of service."

Freed on bail of $1,000 each, the six ministers declared, "this is what we wanted."

In Montgomery, Ala., resumption of the city's newly integrated bus service and the organization of a new-all-white bus system to operate on a "club" plan, are the latest developments in the city's transportation picture.

SERVICE RESUMED

Bus service was resumed again after a six-day stoppage, ordered after shots were fired at six buses and some Negro churches had been bombed.

The buses operated on a limited, daylight schedule, with the last trips starting at 5:15 p. m. Police guards are assigned to buses finishing their last runs.

Some buses carried Negro passengers only. Others carried a few whites and no Negroes. When Negroes and whites rode the same buses, Negroes could be found in the middle and onto the rear, while the whites occupied the front section.

Defender P. 4

While this seems as if the citizens were working out their own methods of integration, there was still another group of whites, headed by a local attorney and state representative, which is seeking to organize an all-white bus system to operate on a "club" plan.

CLUB PLAN

O. J. Goodwyn, who declined to reveal names of persons who retained him, conferred with city officials and later with U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson, jr., one of two jurists who ruled bus segregation unconstitutional here last June.

The proposed bus line would operate as a "private" line with only members of a club allowed to ride — such membership being limited to white persons.

During the height of the boycott some Negroes had petitioned the city to operate their own bus service, but the request was denied.

FLORIDA WARNING

The racial fued over segregated bus seating in Florida simmered down in face of a warning by Gov. Leroy Collins that violence must stop.

Police in Miami and Tallahassee, where Negroes are concentrating their efforts to break down Florida racial barriers, reported there had been no new incidents in the past 12 hours.

Wednesday night a window in the home of the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the integrated seating movement in Tallahassee, was shattered by shotgun fire. Previously, a cross was burned in front of the Negro minister's church and his home stoned.

Gov. Collins, who suspended bus service in Tallahassee New Year's Day, called for immediate action by city and county authorities.

"This kind of lawlessness is inexcusable and it must be stopped," the governor declared.

Collins restored bus service last Friday as a "test of good will."

Tallahassee Police Chief Frank Stoutamire echoed the governor's words. The chief met each shift of officers as they came on duty and told them: "I don't care who's doing it — whether it's my boy or your boy, it has to stop."

ISSUES WARNING

In Miami, Police Chief Walter A. Headley said his men are prepared to make arrests if Negroes attempt integrated seating, but stressed each case would be treated "individually."

Two Miami Negro youths, Joseph Sands, 17, and Vernon Clark, 18, were put off a bus, but not arrested, when they took seats directly behind the driver Wednesday night. It was the first attempt at integrated seating in Miami.

ARRESTED IN TEST CASE —

As the legal fight to break the grip of segregation shifted to Georgia, a group of Negro ministers found themselves in jail according to their own plan. Challenging a Georgia statute, they were arrested and imprisoned for riding in the front of an Atlanta bus. Later, they were released on $1,000 bail apiece pending a court decision on the validity of the statute.

Bus Official May Probe Complaint By Student

BY SAMUEL L. ADAMS

The head of the Atlanta Transit System said Saturday he "will look into" complaints by a foreign student at Morris Brown College who said she was impolitely treated by a conductor as he sought to maintain segregation on the West Hunter line.

Robert Sommerville top official of the transit firm voiced the company's policy for bus conductors to avoid racial entanglements and concentrate on giving service to all passengers.

Sommerville's decision to investigate drives courtesy was revealed after a Morris Brown College student from Trinadad, Mrs. Elaine George, told of "a tactless manner" in which she was ordered up from the only remaining seat in a West Hunter-Irvin trolley. The incident occurred about 245 p. m. Friday as she was enroute from the college to the downtown area.

Mrs. George is the wife of the A. M. E. minister and baritone soloist, Ulrich George.

Recalling her reaction to being ordered up from the only empty seat on the bus, the foreign student said:

"I really felt bad. He (the conductor) was so crude about it, and I thought if any of them (white American) came to our country, they would not be treated that way."

Mrs. George related how she boarded a bus crowded with Washington High School students. She said one of the two long seats up front was vacant except for one white man who sat next to the front entrance of the bus.

When she sat on the vacant seat leaving a space between her and the white passnger, the conductor ordered her to move without waiting for a reaction from the white passenger, she said.

"He turned and ordered me to stand up, but a young man got up and gave me his seat," she added.

Sommerville, indicated that drivers are encouraged to ignore integrated seating when there is no conflict between or among passengers.

Concern over bus seating was heightened by the Feb. 21st dissmissal of charges against a conductor who fired his pistol after being accused of not knowing a Negro from a white man. The shooting occurred Feb. 9 after the victim who escaped injury, got off a bus in front of Paschal Brothers Co. on West Hunter Street at Mayson-Turner.

RIDE UNSEGREGATED ON GA. BUS —The Rev. William Borders, Baptist minister and leader of the integration campaign in Atlanta, begins a cautious drive to end bus segregation there as he rides in the "white" section of a normally segregated city bus. The Rev. Mr. Borders, who was one of 12 hymn-chanting ministers to ride unsegregated on the bus, said the peaceful six block ride through downtown Atlanta was intended to set an example for other colored bus riders to follow. Later he was arrested.

The next day all six were arrested and released on bond. A Grand Jury subsequently indicted them after an hour-long consideration. The prosecutor said he will bring them to trial in the regular course of procedure.

ATLANTA police officials reported a complete lack of reaction or incidents in connection with the case.

The Atlanta Journal reported the bus incident has resulted in about five letters a day to its "Letters to the Editor" department. About one in 10 is in favor of the integration move, the others for segregated buses.

The morning Atlanta Constitution, has received "about a dozen" letters on the subject since the incident, with sentiment "about half and half."

Six pastors kneeling in prayer are jailed

Afro-American Sat. 1-19-57 Baltimore, Md. p. 1

By S. F. YETTE

ATLANTA, GA.—The arrest of six ministers by local police officers, Thursday, halted a devotional meeting and altered the ministers' plan for a second day of violation of the state's bus segregation laws requiring colored riders to sit at the rear of the transit buses.

The arrests, made while the ministers prayed and sang at the Wheat Street Baptist Church at 1:35 p.m., preceded by one hour a Southwide Conference of Integration Leaders which met at the Ebenezer Baptist Church—one block from the arrest site.

ARRESTED WERE:

The Rev. William H. Borders, chairman of the Love, Law and Liberation Movement, and pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist Church; B. Joseph Johnson, pastor, Mt. Calvary Baptist Church; Roz Williams, pastor, Smith Chapel Baptist Church; Albert F. Fisher, West Hunter Baptist Church; R. B. Shorts, presiding elder, Atlanta CME Church; and Howard Busse, pastor, Rockdale Baptist Church.

THEY WERE taken to Fulton County jail here, booked on charges of violating state segregation laws, fingerprinted, and released after making $1,000 bond each. They were in their cells only 45 minutes before their release.

The six arrested, except the Rev. Mr. Johnson, were holding devotionals along with dozens of other ministers of the movement when warrants for their arrests were served on their attorney, Austin T. Walden. p. 2

WALDEN CAME to the church and notified the five, who left the church and boarded police wagons stationed outside the church.

The Rev. Mr. Johnson, who was visiting his wife who is ill at a local hispital when the warrents were served, received notice of them later, and surrendered voluntarily at the Fulton County Jail.

The serving of the warrants by Atlanta Police Chief Herbert T. Jenkins relieved speculation as to whether local officials would take steps to enforce the state law.

THE CITY of Atlanta does not have a law requiring bus segregation.

The arrests were seen as the desired answer to the movement's hope to get a judicial review of the Georgia bus segregation law.

Mr. Walden was not available for comment, but spokesmen for the group said that they were pleased that those arrested were charged with violation of the segregation statute rather than "The usual disorderly conduct" charge.

Broad survey shows—

Atlanta calmly faces bus integration move

News p. 8-A B'ham, Ala. Sun. 1-20-57

BY JIM LAXSON

ATLANTA, Jan. 19—(AP)—Atlanta is taking calmly the bus integration attempt begun 10 days ago by the city's Negro leaders.

A survey by The Associated Press shows an evident lack of reaction to the court test precipitated Jan. 9, when six singing, Scripture-quoting Negro ministers took seats in the white section of an Atlanta Transit Co. bus.

THEY HAVE BEEN indicted for violating Georgia's segregation laws.

Transit President R. L. Sommerville, who admits he is in the middle on the challenge to tradition, summed up his company's feelings to the absence of reaction:

"The first organized attack on Georgia's bus segregation law caused hardly a ripple among the state's legislators who have just completed the opening week of the 1957 session.

One unidentified legislator, on a trolley ride from the Capitol to the downtown area, was overheard suggesting in a lighter vein, "Why don't we just go ahead and let the Negroes sit in the front of the buses and the white people in the back?"

MEANWHILE, four bills were introduced in the opening days of the general assembly strengthening the governor's hand in dealing with school integration attempts.

Gov. Marvin Griffin, who put the National Guard on a standby basis after the Atlanta bus incident to put down "any riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace," said a week later that he had no specific plan to counter the desegregation effort.

"I'm going to maintain order in Georgia. Whoever is responsible for the disorder is going to answer for it," he declared. He added that "race relations are excellent" in the state.

ATLANTA'S segregated seating came under fire when a team of ministers led by the Rev. William Holmes Borders boarded a trolley bus in the downtown area and took seats in the front section normally reserved for white patrons under the state's laws.

They refused to take back seats when ordered to do so.

A supervisor immediately pulled the bus out of service as mechanically defective and sent it to a garage with the Negroes riding it part of the way.

Atlanta Faces Bus Intergration Move Calmly

Advocate 1-8-6

ATLANTA, Jan. 19 (AP)—Atlanta is taking calmly the bus integration attempt begun 10 days ago by the city's Negro leaders.

A survey by the Associated Press shows an evident lack of reaction to the court test precipitated Jan. 9 when six singing, scripture-quoting Negro ministers took seats in the white section of an Atlanta Transit Co. bus.

They have been indicted for violating Georgia's segregation laws.

Transit President R. L. Sommerville, who admits he is in the middle on the challenge to tradition, summed up his company's feelings to the absence of reaction:

"It's wonderful."

'HOPEFUL, HELPFUL THING'

"The lack of reaction is the most hopeful and helpful thing in this whole situation," he said. "Atlanta is maintaining its wonderful tradition in race relations.

"We are thankful that there has been no inflammatory action by extremists on either side," he added. "It is our great hope to keep tempers on a level keel."

The first organized attack on Georgia's bus segregation laws caused hardly a ripple among the state's legislators who have just completed the opening week of the 1957 session.

There has been no official comment from the lawmakers and very little recognition of the problem.

One unidentified solon, on a trolley ride from the capitol to the downtown area, was overheard suggesting in a lighter vein, "Why don't we just go ahead and let the Negroes sit in the front of the buses and the white people in the back?"

Meanwhile, four bills were introduced in the opening days of the general assembly strengthening the governor's hand in dealing with school integration attempts.

GUARD ON STANDBY

Gov. Marvin Griffin, who put the National Guard on a standby basis after the Atlanta bus incident to put down "any riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace," said a week later that he had no specific plan to counter the desegregation effort.

"I'm going to maintain order in Georgia. Whoever is responsible for the disorder is going to answer for it," he declared. He added that "race relations are excellent" in the state.

Atlanta's segregated seating came under fire when a team of ministers led by the Rev. William Holmes Borders boarded a trolley bus in the downtown area and took seats in the front section normally reserved for white patrons under the state's laws.

They refused to take back seats when ordered to do so.

A supervisor immediately pulled the bus out of service as mechanically defective and sent it to a garage with the Negroes riding it part of the way.

The next day all six were arrested and released on bond. A grand jury subsequently indicted them after an hour-long consideration. The prosecutor said he will bring them to trial in the regular course of procedure.

LOVE, LAW, LIBERATION

Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist Church, one of the largest Negro churches in the city, called the campaign the "love, law and liberation movement."

The campaign, except for community prayer meetings every Tuesday night, has been halted pending legal moves.

"The case is in the hands of the lawyers and the courts and we are awaiting the outcome," Borders said. In the meantime, the Negroes have continued to ride on a segregated basis without incident.

A. T. Walden, Negro attorney for the movement, said information from their sources indicates the rank and file of whites are unconcerned "or at least not upset" by the effort.

"Our feeling is that the whites, at least the better informed whites, feel that bus integration is inevitable," he said.

Atlanta police officials reported a complete lack of reaction or incidents in connection with the case

GET FEW LETTERS

The Atlanta Journal reported the bus incident has resulted in about five letters a day to its "letters to the editor" department. About one in ten is in favor of the integration move, the others for segregated buses.

The morning Atlanta Constitution, has received "about a dozen" letters on the subject since the incident, with sentiment "about half and half."

John Pennington, a Journal reporter assigned to the story, observed that people are interested in it "But I've found no particular optimism on the part of the Negroes and no fear or hysteria on the part of the whites."

"A few of the 'old heads' premost people I've talked to have dicted there'll be trouble but shown little or no reaction," he declared.

Samuel Adams, reporter for the Atlanta Daily World, a Negro newspaper, said he found no bitterness among the Negro people.

"There is strong feeling to abide by the law and to keep as much peace as possible," he said, "But at the same time to push ahead for their goal."

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

He said white people he interviewed generally were indifferent to the situation, many regarding it as "much ado about nothing."

Twenty-one Southern cities have desegregated their buses without difficulty, according to a survey by the Southern Regional Council. The Council, an interracial group devoted to "equal opportunity for all," said the end of compulsory segregation came in each case without court action, usually by a policy change of the transit company. The changes evoked no incidents or organized protests, it said.

Cities listed were Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith and Hot Springs, Ark.; Charlotte, Greensboro, Durham and Winston Salem, N.C.; Knoxville, Tenn.; San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Dallas, Tex.; and Newport News, Richmond, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg and Roanoke, Va.

The council said it learned that in most cities checked passengers continued to follow the customary pattern of separate seating.

In contrast, the council said, in Montgomery, Birmingham and Tallahassee "segregated seating has been met by both official resistance and sporadic violence by lawless elements."

Funds needed for Atlanta bus fight

Afro-American Baltimore Md. 1-19-57

ATLANTA — Contributions are beginning to trickle into Atlanta where the "Love, Law, Liberation Movement" has launched the non-violence drive to desegregate buses.

The Revs. William Holmes Borders, B. J. Johnson, R. B. Shorts, Roy Williams, A. Franklin Fisher and Howard Bussey have been arrested and indicted for violating Georgia segregation laws.

Their arrest has led to inquiries from over the nation as to how they may be helped in Atlanta's portion of the Southwide fight to break down jim crow in all forms.

Contributions may be sent to: "Love, Law, Liberation Movement," William Holmes Borders, president; Wheat St. Baptist Church, 18 Yonge St., NE, Atlanta, Ga.

Date of the ministers' trials in Fulton Superior Court has not been set, but a corps of lawyers is prepared for the defense.

6 Ministers Indicted in Ga. Bus Test

Herald Tribune New York Wed. 1-16-57

Negroes Rode In White Section

ATLANTA, Jan. 15 (AP).—Six Negro ministers were indicted today on charges of violating the Georgia segregation law by riding in the white section of a bus.

Meanwhile, at Montgomery, Ala., the city decided to resume daytime runs of integrated buses with police cruiser escorts. Elsewhere in the racial-troubled South vandals hurled bricks through the windows of two Negro groceries at Tallahassee, Fla.

The Negro ministers who boarded an Atlanta trolley bus last week and rode six blocks in front seats traditionally occupied by whites were indicted on misdemeanor charges of violating state segregation laws. The six men who are free in $1,000 bail each, said at the time of their arrest "this is just what we wanted"—an opportunity to make a quick court test of the statute which has not been passed on directly.

Montgomery buses will start running again tomorrow morning after a six-day suspension. It was in that city that the first Deep South bus integration began three weeks ago by order of the United States Supreme Court.

Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers said a police car would accompany each bus on its 5:15 p. m. run, the last one of the day under the continuing sundown curfew. The night runs were suspended originally during the holidays when six buses were fired on and one Negro rider was wounded. During that period there was a wave of dynamitings of Negro churches.

In Tallahassee, bus service has been resumed by permission of Gov. LeRoy Collins. The Governor had used his emergency powers to stop the buses after violence in the Florida capital where Negroes last year conducted a boycott of segregated buses similar to one in Montgomery.

Negroes have not attempted to mingle with whites on Tallahassee buses since service was resumed under a new ordinance authorizing drivers to assign seats and, in effect, continue segregation.

One brick volley smashed three windows at the grocery operated by Dan Speed, transportation chief of Tallahassee's Negro integration group. Another broke the plate glass at a market operated by George DuPont, another Negro leader. Vandals also smashed windows of two cars parked near Florida A. & M. University for Negroes.

Trolley Driver 'Embarrassed Me' Youth Reveals

Daily World Atlanta Ga. Tues. 2-19-57

BY SAMUEL ADAMS

"It embarrassed me...."

This was the simple explanation given Monday by a Turner High School youth reportedly mistaken for a white youth by a West Hunter-Irwin trolley operator.

The 18-year-old youth Bennie Williams, superintendent of Wilkes Chapel AME Sunday School, said he was so embarrassed late Saturday that he did not protest an order by a white bus driver who forced his darker companion to move to another seat.

His companion, Williams said, was his school mate, William Walker, 16. They boarded the bus opposite Kay's Jewelry and were immediately separated by the bus conductor who told Walker he could not sit on the front seat, he said.

Daily World

The seating incident led to a shooting and subsequent arrest of the bus operator on charges of discharging firearms in the city and pointing a pistol at another.

Williams said the white conductor told Walker, "Hey Buddy, you can't sit there. You better move back."

He said: "We were sitting on that long seat up front because the bus was full."

Walker said he complied with the order to change seats.

A short time later, another passenger approached me and asked if his fifteen cents was as good as mine, and when I answered yes, he asked if he might sit next to me, Williams said. Again the answer was "Yes."

When this happened, the conductor pulled his pistol out of his bag and put it within easy reach, the youth continued.

Both of the teenage boys said they left the bus at the Mason-Turner stop. The man who was shot at also got off at this stop, witnesses said.

Judge Webb Rules Bus Driver Clear In Firing Pistol At Man

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 2-22-57

BY SAMUEL ADAMS

A Municipal Court Judge Thursday dismissed charges against a white bus operator who admitted shooting his pistol after a passenger said he did not know a Negro from a white man.

The defendant, Roy E. Walker, 26, of 325 Glenn St., was arraigned before Municipal Court Judge James Webb on two counts of disorderly conduct. He was accused of discharging firearms in the city street and pointing a pistol at another.

Appearing in court to testify against the trolley driver was the victim of the shooting, Ishmel Albert, 34. He accused the driver of threatening to kill him before shooting.

Albert and a surprise prosecution witness, identified as Jimmy Chatman, 32, of a Simmons St. address, testified that Walker stood at the door of his bus and fired at Albert as the victim stood near the entrance of Paschal Brothers Cafe. The shooting occurred around 7 p. m., Feb. 9 at a bus stop directly in front of the cafe, located at the corner of Hunter St. and Mayson-Turner.

"PROVOKED THE THING"

On the motion of defense counsel, Judge Webb dismissed the charge and said the evidence showed a "lack of good sense on the part of both", the defendant and Albert. The Judge said Albert "provoked the thing."

Prosecuting the case on behalf of Albert, Atty. Donald L. Hollowell said the bus driver's action was such that it could have jeopardized his life in mass reprisal. He also jeopardized the lives of others by shooting because the bullet could have riccocheted and injured someone inside or out in front of the crowded cafe, he argued.

"In times like these, such action could put the (racial) harmony we have, though it is sometimes strained, put it assunder," Atty. Hollowell said.

SHOOTING TOLD

In his account of the shooting, Albert said he boarded the West Hunter-Irwin St. bus at Butler St., and Auburn Ave., and sat about two seats from the rear door. At Whitehall and Hunter Streets, he said, "a fair skinned Negro and his brown skinned" companion got on the bus and the bus conductor asked the darker youth to move.

"They were sitting on the first long seat and one was made to get up," he added.

"The conductor kept glaring through the rear view mirror until we reached Paschal Brothers," Albert testified. After getting off the bus at this stop, "I made a statement," he continued, quoting himself: "I said these guys are so stupid that they don't know a Negro when they see one."

PISTOL IN HIS FACE

Albert said he went far enough into Paschal's to lay a package on the end of the counter. He said he heard the voice of the conductor and turned around to see a revolver pointed in his face.

Albert recalled:

"I kept my hands clear of my pockets so he wouldn't have an excuse to shoot me between the eyes ...and he said: "Well don't call me stupid.' He became enraged and I said 'if you put the gun down, I'll stomp h---l out of you."

Under cross-examination, he accused the conductor of saying: "I'll kill you."

Daily World

NOT ON BUS

Chatman said he was not on the bus, but he heard the conversation and saw the conductor fire as Albert stood near the cafe entrance.

He said:

Atlanta, Ga.

"As I started to go into Paschal's, the bus was pulling up.... This fellow (Albert) was walking by the bus and the drive stood up and said, 'Who are you caling dumo?'

He said Albert told the conductor he was not talking to anyone in particular, adding: "You got your pistol...I don't have anything, but go on and shoot. You got your pistol."

Chatman said that after the bus driver fired, Albert calmly "picked up his foot and looked to see if he had been shot, and then he (Albert) said 'You shot your pistol...I guess you feel big."

Testifying in his own defense, Walker said a white man and a Negro boarded his bus at Ivy and Edgewood Sts. Walker said when the vehicle arrived at Broad and Alabama Sts., the white man clared his throat and said: "Operator."

The conductor said "I looked back and there was a dark skinned colored man sitting there," and he asked the Negro to move.

The white man asked him what time it was, and then got off the bus at the terminal station, added the bus driver.

Atlanta, Ga. 2-22-57

He said:

"I had even forgot I had told the Negro to move back...but when we got to Paschal, someone said: 'You are a stupid SOB aint you.'"

He said he looked up and saw Albert standing on the ground at the bus entrance threatening to stomp him if he got off the bus. Albert, he continued, pushed another man out of the way and put his hands into his pockets and "I shot.'

38b

Then he added, "Your Honor, there is not a doubt in my mind if I hadn't did that (fired the pistol), I would not be living today."

The defense called two character witnesses, both of whom work for Atlanta Transit Co. along with Walker. They were identified as D. R. Russell and Merre Peet. Peet said he has known Walker since he began working for the transit company a year ago. He and Walker are members of the company's "extra board" and have not accumulated enough seniority to be considered as regular drivers or have regular routes.

Under cross examination, Russell (a conductor and one of the character witnesses) said he does not now carry a weapon but thinks he will begin to do so.

Prior to the Trial, Robert Sommerville, head of Atlanta Transit System, said when he came to the company, 80 percent of the drivers carried guns, but now the number has dropped to 20 percent.

At that time, he said, "If this West Hunter situation (shooting) is proven, we will have to very seriously consider that thing. It is a situation which we greatly deplore ...I don't want our passengers to be frightened off."

On the question of whether Walker would be assigned again to the West Hunter line should the company fail to fire him, Sommerville said the transit system does not assign routes. They are selected by drivers on the basis of seniority and in accordance with union rules, he indicated.

If Negro drivers are hired, they too, will not be assigned to any particular route, Sommerville explained. This would be in conflict with union rules, it was learned.

Two Ministers File Bus "Mixing" Suits

Journal Sat. 6-15-57 P.4

Wilmington, N.C.

ATLANTA — Two Atlanta ministers Monday filed suits in Federal court to test the legality of Georgia and Atlanta laws requiring segregation on city buses.

Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, filed the suit in behalf of the Reverends Samuel W. Williams and John T. Porter.

The suit asks a three-judge court to issue an injunction halting segregation on buses and trolleys and then declared state and city laws calling for such segregation in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Defendants in the suit were named as the Georgia Public Service Commission, Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield, Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and the Atlanta Transit Systems, Inc.

Williams charged in the suit that he was jailed with six other Negroes in January of this year when a number of Negro bus riders tested local bus segregation laws. He said he was treated "as an ordinary criminal," when he refused to take a seat in the rear of the bus.

Porter said he was abused once because he refused to move to the rear of a bus, and that an Atlanta bus driver closed the door on him when he tried to leave through the front rather than the rear door of the bus.

Motion To Dismiss Bus Bias Case Is Overruled

Daily World Fri. 5-31-57

Atlanta, Ga.

COLUMBUS, (Ga.) — (INS) — A motion to dismiss charges against a Brooklyn, N. Y., Negro soldier, arrested for setting in the white section of a local bus, was overruled Thursday by Columbus City Recorder Frank U. Garrard, Jr.

P.1

PUBLIC BUSES

The soldier, Pfc Montford I. Cardwell, 24, stationed at nearby Ft. Benning, was bound over to Muscogee Superior Court, charged with violation of Georgia segregation law on public buses. The ruling may serve as a test case of the state law.

Columbus Negro defense attorney Albert W. Thompson asked Garrard Thursday to dismiss the charges. He based the request on a U. S. District Court ruling against segregation on intra-state buses in Montgomery, Ala., which was upheld by the Supreme Court.

Garrard said the case involved only Georgia law ,and ordered Cardwell bound over under $100 bond.

JUNE GRAND JURY

Solicitor general John Land, who will prepare the case against Cardwell, said he will not present the indictment to the June Grand Jury which meets Monday, since he has not had sufficient time.

Police said Cardwell boarded the bus ,and took a seat directly behind the lriver. They said he refused, when asked to move to the rear.

Gets Case To Half Bus Segregation

Daily World

A complaint filed in Federal Court Monday by two ministers who are seeking to halt segregation on Atlanta public buses was sent to the Hon. Boyd Sloan United States district judge, Gainesville, Ga.

"This case falls to you," Federal Court Clerk C. B. Meadows said in a cover letter.

The Revs. Samuel W. Williams and John T. Porter filed the suit, charging that segregation on Atlanta buses had caused them "great injury, inconvenience and humiliation as a result of the denial to them of their constitutional rights to use said facilities on the segregated basis without fear or intimidation."

They were among several ministers who on several occasions tested the state bus segregation law by sitting in front of white passengers. In some instances they were told to move to the rear, and others the bus was designated "special" and dispatched to the barn.

Judge Sloan has figured in several recent federal cases concerning segregation. Last Monday he denied the dismissal of a suit field by four Negroes who are seeking admittance to the University of Ga., State College of Business Administration.

He said the motion filed by the State Board of Regents showed "no substantial merit in any of the grounds."

Court Airs Suit for Bus Integration

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sat 8-7-57

By GENE BRITTON

A federal judge Friday took under advisement arguments that a suit for an injunction against city bus segregation should be thrown out of court.

U.S. District Judge Frank A. Hooper heard both sides argue over a motion filed by Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook asking that the suit, brought by two Negro clergymen, be dismissed.

The suit names as defendants the Georgia Public Service Commission, Mayor William B. Hartsfield, Police Chief Herbert Jenkins, and the Atlanta Transit System.

CHARGE RIGHTS DENIED

Judge Hooper said he would study the attorney's arguments and give his decision later on whether or not the suit will stay in court for a trial.

The suit was brought by the Rev. Samuel W. Williams and the Rev. John T. Porter, both of whom allege they were denied their constitutional rights by being segregated from white passengers on Atlanta buses and trolleys.

Asst. Atty. Gen. E. Freeman Leverett told Judge Hooper at Friday's hearing that a federal court trial of the suit would have a "necessary effect" in criminal proceedings against the ministers pending in Fulton Superior Court. He asked that the federal proceedings be postponed until after the ministers are brought to trial in Superior Court.

"NO LEGAL BASIS"

S. S. Robinson of Atlanta, chief counsel for the plaintiffs, argued that there is no legal basis to warrant his clients' suit being dismissed.

The defendants were represented by Leverett and Robert H. Hall, from the attorney general's office; Jack Savage and Newell Edenfield, representing the city officials, and Robert L. Marchman III, representing the transit company.

Buses Fired On Here As Segregation Test Looms

World Wed. 1-2-58 B'ham, Ala.

Two transit buses on successive nights have been fired upon in this city as the bus segregation test moves toward a legal show down in the courts.

Nobody was injured in the separate Saturday and Sunday night shootings.

Bus segregation arrests had climbed to 22 as one rider has been arrested twice.

No arrests have been in either the outbreak of shootings or the week-old bombing of the five-room parsonage of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, pastor of Bethel Baptist Church and president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

Leaders of the open-seat campaign have complained of repeated and increased threats made upon them. It was learned that some have asked for police protection.

About 5:35 Sunday evening, Dec. 30, a Tarrant City bus was reportedly fired on. But few Negro riders were on the bus, all seated in the rear section.

Two white youths reportedly shot into an Avenue F bus at the end of its run around 11:04 Saturday night, Dec. 29. The three Negro passengers were unharmed.

Public Safety Commissioner Robert Lindbergh attributed the Saturday night shooting to vandalism. He added that the incident was not being dismissed lightly.

He made it clear Dec. 26 that "if there are violations of our city ordinances on segregation, arrests will be made, just like any other ordinances."

Mr. Lindbergh added: "We will not voluntarily abandon the tradition-honored Southern custom of segregation on buses."

Here were other developments:

1. The Rev. Theodore Nelson 60-year-old insurance underwriter and minister, one of the originally 21 test case arrests Dec. 21, was rearrested Dec. 29. He was charged with violating the bus segregation law and released on $100 bond.

2. Douglass Jackson, 47, was arrested Dec. 27 on charges of violating the riding segregation law. He was released on $100 bond. He brought to 22 the number of persons charged with bus seating violations. (The total arrests is 23.)

3. Hiram Gray, Jr., 26, charged with having a pistol on his person while on the scene Christmas night after the bombing of the home of the Rev. Shuttlesworth, was fined $100 and costs and given a six-months suspended jail sentence Dec. 28.

4. 3-C Monroe Flenor Jr., stationed at Ardmore Air Force Base (Oklahoma), charged with disorderly conduct in connection with moving the segregation board on the bus Dec. 26, was fined $50 and given a 180-day suspended sentence Dec. 28.

5. Two different White Citizen Council factions entered the bus controversy. The North Alabama White Citizens Council of which Asa Carter is the leader said it worked out a plan to place "minute men" on buses to enforce segregated seating. The White Citizens Council of Alabama, headed by State Senator Sam M. Englehardt, Jr., of Shelby, Ala., suggested seeking indictment of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. president of the Montgomery Improvement Association for "inciting to riot" because of a wire the Montgomery protest leader sent to Rev. Shuttlesworth in which mention was made of "filling the jail" to achieve your objective.

Trial for the 22 open-seat riders was set for Thursday, Jan. 3 before Recorder's Court Judge Ralph E. Parker. However, it appears likely that the cases will be reset for trial at a later date because of an expected heavy docket.

Bus segregation fighters appeared undisturbed by rumors that the segregation charges against the 22 arrested bus riders might be changed to "disorderly contest" to avoid a clear-cut ruling.

Legal counsel has been secured for the 22 bus-riding defendants, it was learned.

When asked for comment on the recently reported outbreak of shooting, the Rev. Shuttlesworth said: "I hope our citizens won't resort to violence."

He added: "I am fairly confident no Negro will engage in violence and I certainly hope the good-thinking white people will restrain those elements who would resort to violence."

Negroes call session to push bus integration

News Jan. 1-8-57 B'ham, Ala.

By The Associated Press

Plans for a stepped up campaign to integrate buses in the South will be discussed in Atlanta this week by Negro leaders encouraged by a report the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People received more than a million dollars in receipts in 1956.

Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Montgomery last night called on Southern Negro leaders to attend a strategy meeting in Atlanta Thursday and Friday "in an effort to coordinate and spur the campaign for integrated transportation in the South."

"We have no moral choice but to delve deeper into the struggle," said King.

"WE ARE CONVINCED that most white Southerners are prepared to accept integration as the law of the land," he said in a statement. "On the other hand, a small but willful minority, dedicated to violence, is resorting to threats, shootings, cross burnings and bombings."

Rev. C. K. Steele of Tallahassee, Fla., and Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, joined King in urging Negro leaders "from troubled areas all over the South" to attend.

King said the meeting will be closed to the public.

IN NEW YORK, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, said court prosecution of the NAACP in some Southern cities and defiance of desegregation rulings stirred a record wave of "financial and moral support."

He told the organization's annual meeting that NAACP receipts hit a 1956 peak of more than a million dollars. He said the income came mostly in small contributions.

IN FLORIDA, where bus integration difficulties brought temporary suspension of service, Gov. Leroy Collins said it is "folly for anyone to expect judicial dictation to compel social adjustment."

Collins, delivering his inaugural address, added however that U. S. Supreme Court rulings in the segregation field are the law of the land and defiance of the court could bring no good. The governor added that both races must change their attitudes on the subject of bus integration. He said white citizens must face the fact that the Negro "does not now have equal opportunities" and that the Negro should realize "that he must merit and deserve whatever place he achieves in a community."

Bus Segregation Trials Her Ordered for Superior Court

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 1-17-57 p. 6

Judge E. E. Andrews Wednesday ordered trials in Fulton Superior Court for six Negro ministers charged with flouting the state's bus segregation laws. The trials were ordered at the request of Sol. Gen. Paul Webb.

Meanwhile a lawyer for the six ministers said they would not press for an early trial. Attorney A. T. Walden said the defendants would wait and let the cases come up through the regular channels.

Webb said he requested that the cases be tried in Superior Court rather than in Fulton County Criminal Court in order that his staff would have the necessary background in the event of appeal if convictions are attained.

The six, the Revs. W. H. Borders, H. Bussey, A. Franklin Fisher, B. Joseph Johnson, R. B. Shorts and R. H. Williams, are charged with refusing to occupy trolley seats assigned them by the driver.

The six are free under $1,000 bond posted after they were arrested on warrants Jan. 9.

Georgia Alerts Militia; Negroes Go to Bus Front

Inquirer Philadelphia Pa. 1-10-57 p. 6 p. 38b

ATLANTA, Jan. 9 (UP).—Twelve Negro preachers defied Gov. Marvin Griffin in his own capital today by riding in the white section of a bus.

The governor ordered his militia to stand by to guard against "riots, insurrection and breaches of the peace."

Summoning 13 aides from the State Adjutant General and legal offices, the governor announced that any breaches of the peace "will not be tolerated in any part of Georgia."

Despite the Governor's order there were no incidents here. But a sniper fired on a bus at Montgomery, Ala., shortly after a curfew on night transit operations was lifted there.

MAYOR RESTORES BAN

Montgomery police said the bus immediately reinstated the ban on night bus operations.

Mont gomery police said the bus was hit by a single blast from a shotgun in the Negro section of the city. There were no passengers and the driver was unhurt, although buckshot peppered the third window behind him.

Negro leaders called today's peaceful six-block bus ride an example for members of their race in Atlanta to follow. The Atlanta Daily World, Negro newspaper, published an eight-point guidance program for integrators. It included a commitment to "complete non-violence in word and action" and the use of "moral and spiritual force" to defend any Negroes molested for riding unsegregated.

LEADERS GATHER

The Negroes boarded the Atlanta bus at a busy downtown stop as leaders of integration movements in other southern cities gathered here to discuss their common problems at a meeting starting tomorrow.

Carrying their Bibles, they assembled at the bus stop and waited for about 30 minutes until a bus came along with sufficient room for them to take front seats without crowding white passengers.

As the Atlanta move got under way, Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee recommended what he termed a "moderate approach to the problem of segregation, but he asked the legislature for new laws to prevent integration of the state's public schools.

Other Negro groups in Memphis and New Orleans also made preliminary plans to start riding buses and trolleys on a mixed basis, thus bringing virtually every southern metropolis into the issue.

New Orleans Mayor deLesseps Morrison refused a formal request to integrate the transit line, but Negro leaders said "the only recourse we have left is the Federal court."

Unique Tolerance

Atlanta Maintains Its Calm In Arrest of 6 Negro Clerics

World-Telegram & Sun Mon. 1-14-57
New York

Last March, when desegregation tensions reached a peak in the South, Andrew Tully, an Ernie Pyle Award winner for reporting, visited the troubled areas. He wrote a series of articles with unusual perception and objectivity. He is now back in the South. This is the first of two articles from Atlanta.

P. 2

By ANDREW TULLY.

Scripps-Howard Staff Writer.

ATLANTA, Jan. 14.—It made sensational headlines the other day when six Negro ministers were arrested for trying to ride up front in a bus, but the implication was unfair to this bustling, strictly business city of more than 500,000.

Nobody was really mad at anybody. The Negro preachers sat down in the white section of the bus because they wanted to be arrested and put Georgia's bus segregation law to a test.

Atlanta had no choice. The law which keeps Negroes in the rear of buses is a state law, not a city ordinance, and city authorities enforce that law.

Everybody Amused.

Today, both Negroes and whites josh good-naturedly about what they call the "stunt." It amuses practically everybody. As the Atlanta Constitution pointed out editorially: "The only near-hysteria in evidence was confined to the state administration. . . ."

This curiously tolerant situation exists because Atlanta is unique among Southern cities. The whites here may not want complete "social integration," but they want the Negro to live well and to get his share of economic privileges, mostly because Atlanta needs the Negro. Of a total population of some 503,000 persons, 130,000 are Negroes, and businessmen would have tough sledding without that Negro dollar.

Casual Enforcement.

Northerners may scoff at a society which for all its tolerance, forbids the Negro his right to attend white schools and to mingle in restaurants and theaters with his white neighbors. But conditions in the South these days are relative. And, in comparison, Atlanta looks very good.

For instance, Atlanta's enforcement of segregation on buses is most casual. The signs on the buses say merely that Negroes shall "start seating" from the rear and whites from the front—not that Negroes must "sit" in the rear. Thus, when the rear seats are filled, Negroes take seats up front. The result is that often a white not only fails to get a seat up front, he cannot even get on the bus.

A little thing, perhaps, but big down here.

Mostly, Atlanta's pride is centered on the Negro's economic situation. White Atlantans like to point out their city has the only two Negro millionaires in the South and the only Negro bank belonging to the Federal Reserve System. They call attention to the Negro Atlanta Life Insurance Co., with assets of $40 million, the largest Negro stock company in the South, and the $10 million Negro Mutual Federal Building and Loan Co.

Negroes work side by side with whites in most of the city's industries, including the well-paying departments of the Lockheed Aircraft Plant. They play golf with their white neighbors on the municipal courses. There is no segregation in the stores.

Reports Are True.

This reporter checked on these claims and found them to be true. He also rode through the comparatively new Negro residential districts and found them just as attractive as sections in the middle-income neighborhoods of Chevy Chase and Bethesda, outside Washington.

That is because the pattern here, for the past 20 years, has been to build new homes for the Negro rather than have him move into old houses vacated by whites.

For years, a biracial commission has worked out agreements on suburban sections for allocation to Negro developers. The result is that some beautiful, high, wooded rolling land on Atlanta's west side is now occupied by hundreds of attractive rambler, split-level and two-story homes for Negro families. They sell for from $7500 to $25,000, with a few in higher brackets, and they are occupied by such people as mail carriers, schoolteachers, government workers, aircraft workers and cab drivers.

Negroes themselves will admit they are better off in Atlanta than in any other Southern city. But they are determined to do better to get all the rights the law of the land grants them. That will be most difficult.

SUIT ASKS $10,000 OF TRANSIT CO.

Daily World Wed. 8-21-57
Atlanta, Ga.

An Atlanta woman filed a 10,000 damage suit in the Civil Court Clerks Office Tuesday against the Atlanta Transit System, Inc.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Mattie C. Bell, of 638 Ira St., N. W., asked the Fulton County Superior Court to order the Transit System to award her $10,000 for "damage and injuries she allegedly received while boarding a bus on August 24, 1955. She also requested the defendant to pay the cost for legal actions.

P. 1

FOOT ON GROUND

Mrs. Bell charged in her petition, filed by Atty. D. L. Hollowell, that she was attempting to board a bus at McDaniel Street and Glenn Street to go toward town when she was injured. Being one of three passengers boarding the bus "the plaintiff had her right foot resting on the ground and her left foot resting on the bottom-most step of the said trolley, the petition said.

The petition charged that the driver "so operated the trolley as to put (it) into forward motion while at the same time closing the front door: that with the movement of the trolley forward and closing of the door, the plaintiffs left foot was thereby forced from the step of said trolley causing her to become physically unbalanced and to fall against the side of the trolley and then to the ground."

DRIVER CAME BACK

Mrs. Bell also claimed that after the bus "had proceeded forward a short distance the (driver) brought (it) to a halt, dismounted, and came back to where (she) was lying prostrate on the ground," but "made no attempt to help her up or to comfort her in anyway."

According to the petition, "she sustained multiple bruises and contusions of the body, and a severely wrenched back" and the injuries "caused (her) great pain and suffering and shall continue to cause her to under go much physical discomfort for the remainder of her life."

The Atlanta Transit System had not been served with the petition late Tuesday.

Soldier tests Ga. bus law

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. 7-13-57

Another Georgia city faces a test case on the bus segregation issue this week after a soldier was released on bond of $100 for refusing to move to a rear seat.

Pfc. Montford I. Cardwell, 24, of 44 Decatur St. Brooklyn, N.Y., was back at ort Benning after being bound over to Superior Court in Columbus, Ga.

He was charged with sitting in the "white" section of a city bus. In Recorders Court last week the bus driver testified Cardwell got on his bus and sat behind him.

CARDWELL was quoted as saying "I do not have to move and I am not going to move" when the driver ordered him to the Jim Crow seats. The driver stopped the bus and called police.

Attorney for the soldier sought dismissal of the case on the basis of the U.S. District Court ruling against segregation on interstate buses in Montgomery, Ala., which was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Girard denied the petition. The case is expected to be heard before the grand jury in October.

IN LITTLE ROCK, Ark., a jury returned a judgement of $1,500 against Mrs. Dorothy Mae Payne in favor of Mrs. Freeda Wright, white, for an alleged attack on Mrs. Wright while the two were passengers on a bus last September.

At the same time, the jury awarded Mrs. Wright $5,000 against the Citizens Transit Company.

Atorneys for the bus firm filed a motion for a new trial, charging the company had been penalized because it abandoned racial segregation on its buses.

Circuit Judge Guy Amsler overruled the motion.

Cook Charts Bus Strategy

Atlanta, Ga. Constitution 7-20-57

Defense attorneys conferred Wednesday on the suit filed in federal district court attacking Atlanta's city bus segregation laws.

Atty. Gen. Cook said it was a conference to "discuss the law and the facts." He added that "we reached no definite conclusions" at the two-hour conference.

An answer to the pleadings must be filed by June 30.

At the session were Cook and two of his assistants, Freeman Leverett and Robert Hall, for the state; City Atty. Jack Savage, Assistant City Atty. J. M. B. Bloodworth and Newell Edenfield, all representing the City of Atlanta; and Robert Marshman, representing the Atlanta Transit Co.

Georgia Holds Man For Sitting In 'White' Depot

Call P. Kansas City, Mo. Fri. 6-7-57

COLUMBUS, Ga. — (INS) — A Brooklyn, N. Y., Negro soldier, arrested for sitting in the white section of a Columbus, Ga., bus, has been bound over to the Muscogee Superior court under $100 bond.

A motion to dismiss charges against Pfc. Montford I. Cardwell, 24, stationed at nearby Ft. Benning, was overruled May 30 by Columbus City Recorder Frank U. Garrard, Jr. Cardwell was charged with violation of a Georgia segregation law on public buses.

The ruling could serve as a test case of the state law. The U. S. Supreme court had already ruled that all intra-state bus segregation is unconstitutional.

A plea was made to dismiss the case on the basis of the Supreme Court ruling, but the city recorder said the case only involved the Georgia law and ordered Cardwell bound over under $100 bond.

Sol. Gen. John Land, preparing the case against the soldier, said because of insufficient time, he will not present the indictment to the June grand jury which was convened Monday.

Police said Cardwell defiantly took a seat behind the bus driver. They said when he refused to move to the rear, as requested, the driver stopped his vehicle and called for the law.

Atlanta clerics file bus suit

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. 7-22-57

ATLANTA (ANP) — The first legal action against segregation on city buses here was brought about last week as two ministers filed suit in Federal Court seeking an end to bias on public conveyances.

The court action was brought against the Atlanta Transit System, Georgia Public Servvice Commission, Mayor William B. Hartsfield and Police Chief Herbert T. Jenkins by two ministers, the Revs. Samuel W. Williams and John T. Porter.

The clerics complained that last January they were ordered by bus drivers to take seats in the rear of the bus. They contend this was a violation of their civil rights.

Va. blond beats bus employee

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 7-13-57

By JOHN McCRAY
AFRO Staff Correspondent

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Residents here are enraged over the senseless and brutal beating on July 4 of Ed Thrash, an employee of the Trailways Bus station.

Thrash was attacked Thursday evening by a white passenger who had just stepped off a bus en route to Montgomery from Richmond, Va.

He is now in Medical Center Hospital in a critical condition.

Police charged Joseph R. Gaulin, of Richmond, Va., with assault and battery. A hearing was delayed pending the outcome of Thrash's condition.

Gaulin, according to police, set upon Thrash, in the mistaken belief he was one of a group of colored passengers, who refused to move to the rear of the bus and heckled him for making the suggestion.

Alanta Minister Goes To Jail In Segregaion Test

Journal + Guide P. 11

Sat. 1-19-57

Rev. William Holmes Borders Freed On Bond, Cheerfully Awaits Court Ruling

Norfolk, Va.

By ROBERT SCHOENHOLT

ATLANTA, — (INS) — The stocky 51 year old minister — who took his trip to jail in a jovial manner — was content this week to sit back now and let the courts handle a situation which he had thought only a few hours before was fraught with personal danger.

William Holmes Borders, pastor of Wheat Street Baptist Church, the largest Negro Church in the South, described his move to purposely violate the law — the Georgia segregation law — as an "open and above board" attempt to get a court test of the 67-year-old statute.

HE WAS CALM and triumphant through the routine of fingerprinting after his arrest and release on $1,000 bond. He insisted the Atlanta movement was "entirely independent" of similar actions in other cities across the South.

"We had things planned for six weeks," Rev. Mr. Borders said, "before I ever heard of a south wide meeting of leaders to plan an end to segregation on buses.''

• • •

REV. MR. BORDERS, first of five ministers to board the police department paddy wagon Thursday, never for a moment lost his smile, or his sense of humor.

He seemed relieved that he had been arrested. The night before he had said he would either "ride the buses, or ride a chariot in Heaven, or push a wheelbarrow in hell."

THE MINISTER, a former philosophy teacher born in Macon, Ga., who attended Morehouse College in Atlanta before moving to Evanston, Ill., said he felt the Atlanta segregation law test would not result in violence, such as marked de-segregation efforts at Montgomery, Ala.

"Atlanta people are just not that kind of people," he said.

REV. MR. BORDERS, who attended Garrett Biblical Institute in Evanston, and later obtained his masters degree from Northwestern University, had prepared his test-case carefully. He said he was confident the resulting court proceedings would bring a ruling outlawing bus segregation in the largest city in the southeast.

And, he said, he believes the transition would be accomplished peacefully. He was sure Atlanta colored citizens would provide no incidents.

• • •

REV. MR. BORDERS, who returned to his native Georgia 19 years ago after seven years as pastor of the Second Baptist Church in Evanston, had urged his followers to "take anything and be ready not to give it back."

The minister, still smiling cheerfully, concluded:

"The things we can do? We can be kind, and even humorous."

Bus Segregation In Georgia May Get New Testing

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 5-30-57

COLUMBUS, Ga., — (INS) — The ruling in a case of a Brooklyn soldier arrested for sitting in the white section of a Columbus bus may serve today as a test of Georgia's bus segregation law.

Pvt. Montford T. Caldwell, 24, stationed at nearby Ft. Benning, is charged with boarding a local bus and refusing to sit in the rear, in violation of section 18-208 of the Georgia Criminal Code.

Columbus Negro defense attorney Albert W. Thompson has asked city recorder Frank U. Garrard to dismiss the case on the basis of the U. S. District Court ruling against segregation on intrastate buses in Montgomery, Ala., which was upheld by the Supreme Court.

Bus driver D. P. Hawthrone told the court that Caldwell got on the bus and took a seat directly behind him. When Caldwell refused to move, and claimed he did not have to move, the driver said he stopped the bus and called the police.

Caldwell, who is from Brooklyn, N. Y., remained silent during the reorder court hearing.

Seek Injunction In Federal Court Banning Local Law

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. June 11-57

Two Atlanta ministers — the Revs. Samuel W. Williams and John T. Porter — filed a suit in Federal Court Monday asking an injunction against segregation on Atlanta public buses.

The suit was brought against the Georgia Public Service Commission and members Matt L. McWhorter, Allen Chappel, Walter McDonald, Crawford Pilcher and Ben S. Wiggins; Mayor William B. Hartsfield Police Chief Herbert T. Jenkins and the Atlanta Transit System, Inc.,

Attorney for the two plaintiff ministers are S. S. Robinson, D. L. Hollowell, Miss Romae L. Turner, R. E. Thomas, Jr., all of Atlanta, and Thurgood Marshall, of New York City.

ORDERED TO MOVE

The suit charged that during the first week of June 1956, Rev. Porter "seated in the front most section on the Irwin Street bound trackless trolley," was ordered by the operator to: "get up, move to the back, and let these (white) folks set down."

After a second order in which the operator referred to the minister as "boy," Rev. Porter moved to the back, "fearing that he would be arrested or suffer scome other violence or embarrassment," according to the suit.

Rev. Porter argues in his suit that he "was denied the right and choice to remain in the seat he had selected on the sole ground of his race and color."

"HELD CAPTIVE"

The minister also charged that on June 23, 1956, he was captive in the doors of a bus after seeking to leave through the front door.

The suit also alleged that Rev. Williams and several other Negro ministers sat in front of whites on a bus on or about January 9, 1957, and that the operator "failed and refused to move" the bus "until most of the white passengers had left." The bus was designated "special" and dispatched to the barn, he declared."

In all allegations the ministers are charging violation of their civil rights as guaranteed under the United States Constitution.

According to the suit, such violations or such instances of segregation on Atlanta buses have caused the plaintiffs "great injury, inconvenience and humiliation as a result of the denial to them of their constitutional rights to use said facilities on an unsegregated basis without fear or intimidation."

Atty. Robinson said yesterday he had no idea when the suit would be heard by the court.

FORMAL CHARGES

January 9,1957, was an historical day for several Atlanta Ministers who sat unsegregated on local buses. Six of them were arrested and later indicted by the Fulton County Grand Jury on formal charges of violating state segregation laws.

They were: the Revs. W. H. Borders, B. J. Johnson, R. B. Shorts, . Franklin Fisher, Howard Bussey and R. W. Williams.

The highly contested law is Title 18, Sections 207, 208 and 904 of the Code of Georgia Annotates ((Revised Edition (1933) which says, in part:

Daily World

"All conductors or other employees in charge of passenger cars shall assign all passengers to their respective cars, or compartments of cars, provided by the said companies under the provisions of section 18-206 and all conductors of street cars and buses shall assign all passengers to seats on the cars under their charge so as to separate the white and colored races as much as practicable....."

The ministers, after going through real criminal processing, were released under $1,000 bond.

75 MINISTERS

Before the arrests, an estimated group of 75 ministers convened here to discuss further steps to be taken in the drive to desegregate Atlanta buses. The arrests snuffed their tentative plans, however.

Meanwhile, as the push for bus desegregation gained momentum, Gov. Marvin Griffin alerted the state militia and held it on stand-by status. He said he would commit the militia if Atlanta officials could not spray out the desegregation fires.

"I am satisfied that the Georgia General Assembly will do everything in its power to preserve our Georgia way of life," he said.

2 Negroes Here Ask Court to Ban Bus Segregation

Pastors Base Plea on Rides During Test

Constitution

Tues. 6-11-57

Atlanta, Ga.

By GENE BRITTON

Two Negro ministers Monday filed suit in federal court here to test the legality of segregation on city buses and trolleys.

It was the first direct legal attack on public transportation segregation in Atlanta.

The suit, asking an injunction to halt segregation, was filed on behalf of the ministers by Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, another New York attorney, Robert L. Carter, and five Atlanta lawyers.

The clergymen—"for themselves and on behalf of all other Negro citizens"—are asking for a three-judge court to rule that state laws and city ordinances requiring separation of the races on buses and trolleys are in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

NAME GPSC, MAYOR

Defendants were named as the Georgia Public Service Commission, Mayor William B. Hartsfield, Police Chief Herbert Jenkins and the Atlanta Transit System, Inc.

The suit was filed by attorneys for the Rev. Samuel W. Williams and the Rev. John T. Porter.

The Rev. Mr. Porter charged that in June, 1956, he sat down near the front of a bus operated by the Transit Co. A number of white persons boarded after him and stood in the aisle rather than occupy vacant seats nearer the rear, he said.

The brief states that the operator of the bus ordered: "Boy! get up, move to the back and let these folks sit down." When the Negro refused to move, the operator told him, "This bus won't move until you move out of that seat."

"HUMILIATED"

The action "greatly injured, inconvenienced and humiliated" the plaintiff, the suit charges.

It further charges that later in the same month, the Rev. Mr. Porter tried to leave by the front door of another bus, was ordered to leave by the rear door and was caught between half sections of the door when he tried to leave by the front. The operator closed the door on him, the suit charges.

Constitution

The plaintiff said he complained to the Transit Co. and was informed that rules of the company require that Negro passengers leave through the rear door while white passengers may use either door.

The Rev. Mr. Williams said he and six other Negro ministers were treated as "common criminals," jailed and indicted by a Fulton County grand jury because they refused to move from seats near the front of a trolley in January of this year.

The brief said the Rev. Mr. Williams and his companions boarded the bus and took seats in front of whites. The operator refused to move the bus and gradually all the white passengers filed out of the bus, the brief continues, and the operator then changed the bus' designation from "Amsterdam" to "Special" and drove directly to the trolley barn.

The brief contends the Transit Co. maintains segregation in compliance with city and state regulations and "in violation of rights guaranteed to the plaintiffs and other Negro citizens under the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Defendants have 20 days in which to answer the suit under federal court rules.

Atlanta Bus Case In U. S. Court

Daily World Wed. 6-12-57

Monday, two ministers filed suit in the Federal District Court here, seeking a declaratory judgment to invalidate the state law which requires separation of the races on the public city buses.

In the petition filed, one of the ministers charges that he was ordered by a trackless trolley driver to move from a seat in which he was sitting to make room for a white passenger. This incident reportedly occurred in June 1956. The other plaintiff charges that he and several other ministers took front seats on a trolley in January of this year, but the driver refused to move the bus until all the white people had gotten off. Then, the bus was designated "special" and sent to the barn.

Six ministers were arrested by city officials as a result of this attempt to desegregate the buses. They were charged with violating a state law. No hearing has been scheduled in the state case.

Atlanta Ga.

Segregation on city buses has been discontinued by either court or voluntary action in several southern cities during recent months. Some of the action took place without incident.

During the past year, it has been observed that the segregation enforcement on buses has been relaxed. Last month, a newspaper report stated that the Atlanta Transit Company dropped the former sign "White passengers seat from front, colored from rear," when their buses were repainted.

Although there may have been few incidents about seating on the buses, we think the state laws, requiring segregation, should be officially discontinued. In the light of recent court decisions, bus segregation is unconstitutional; therefore, we hope the pending case will resolve the issue on that basis.

Atlanta is growing more liberal and progressive and we believe she can eliminate local legal requirements for segregation without any incidents.

Anyway, we hope all concerned will recognize the reality of the situation and will cooperate in making or accepting the change in a spirit of goodwill. Mixing of the riders of the buses is not the question; the question of segregation becomes a problem when it discriminates against one person in favor of another.

Negroes End Bus Push Here, Plan Court Test

Constitution 1/11
Atlanta, Ga.

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Atlanta Negro ministers called off their "up-front" seating strategy Thursday after six were arrested for violating the state's trolley segregation laws.

The Rev. William Holmes Borders, leader of the effort, declared, "We've got one of the things we want."

"There's no need for us to ride any more right now," he told a noon gathering at Wheat Street Baptist Church. He said the arrests can serve as the basis for legal attack on bus segregation.

GUARD STILL ALERTED

The arrested preachers were later released on bond.

The Georgia National Guard, meanwhile, remained on the standby alert ordered Wednesday by Gov. Griffin. The governor was not available for comment on speculation that he now may countermand the alert order.

A challenge to the transit segregation laws developed from another direction Thursday.

ATTORNEY'S LETTER

Negro attorney A. T. Walden revealed he had asked Atlanta Transit Co. president, Robert L. Sommerville, in a letter dated Jan. 8, whether the company intended to maintain segregation "in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court."

Walden said Sommerville replied that the Georgia laws had never been declared unconstitutional.

Observers viewed Walden's letter as a preliminary move toward seeking a declaratory judgment against the segregation statutes in federal court.

It was believed the Negro attorney hopes a faster decision may be obtained in federal court than on an appeal of the arrest of the ministers.

The churchmen arrested Thursday were six who boarded an Amsterdam trolley Wednesday and took seats usually occupied by whites. They were:

The Rev. Mr. Borders and the Revs. R. Joseph Johnson, H. Bussey, R. B. Shorts, R. H. Williams and A. Franklin Fisher.

HARTSFIELD ORDERS

Warrants were sworn out on the instance of Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins, who was instructed to take the action by Mayor Hartsfield. The writs specifically charged the ministers with breaking segregation laws.

About 50 ministers and other interested persons met at the Wheat Street church at noon. Borders said the original plan had been to repeat yesterday's tactics, gradually expanding operations until there would be two or three Negroes testing the law on every trolley in the city.

However, Borders said, "If we've got a warrant then we've got one of the things we want."

WARRANTS SERVED

At first the ministers, who had heard in advance of the warrants, decided to walk several blocks to the courthouse to surrender themselves. While they were making arrangements for bond, a patrol wagon arrived at the church.

The ministers walked voluntarily to the wagon. Warrants were served by Capt. J. L. Moseley and Howard Baugh, a Negro detective.

All but one of the churchmen were on hand to meet the wagon. The sixth, Johnson, was not at the Wheat Street church but voluntarily turned himself in early in the afternoon.

$1,000 BONDS SET

The six ministers were booked, jailed and then released on bonds of $1,000 each.

They scheduled another mass meeting at the Wheat Street church at 8 p.m. Thursday.

A closed session was held at Ebeneezer Baptist Church at 2 p.m. with talks slated by pro-integration leaders from other Southern cities.

In a statement at Fulton Tower, Borders declared that "the Montgomery movement and ours here are distinct." He apparently was replying to statements by Gov. Griffin and the Rev. W. T. Bodenhamer of the States Rights Council that "outside agitators" were responsible for Wednesday's integration test.

Negroes make Atlanta bus riding effort

Some 100 Negro ministers agreed to participate today in a bold move aimed at ending segregation on buses in Atlanta, at 500,000 the largest city yet attacked by the integrationists.

The plan was drawn at a mass meeting last night. Termed "the love, law and liberation movement," participants were committed to "complete non-violence in word and action, observing the ordinary rules of courtesy and good behavior."

The Atlanta Daily World, Negro newspaper reporting on the meeting, said participants were admonished: "Remember always to pray, especially for those who would persecute anyone."

THE FIRST step was delegated to some 100 Negro pastors and the wife of one of the leaders said it began as scheduled around 10 a.m.

The ministers agreed to start out from their individual homes "and take seats heretofore reserved for white only," tempering their action with prayer courtesy and non-violence.

THE ATLANTA move came during an apparent lull in activities of those attacking segregation, the South's No. 1 problem today.

In Florida, Gov. Leroy Collins appealed to the whites of his state to accept the realities of integration decrees.

Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee today recommended what he termed a "moderate" approach to the problem of segregation, but he asked the legislature for new laws to prevent integration of the state's public schools.

In a speech to the legislature, Clement made his first public stand on the issue and declared, "I, for one, will not be a party to any action which would imperil or endanger the continued existence of our public schools."

The new acts which he asked would allow local school boards to maintain separate schools for white and Negro children whose parents wish segregated schools permit the school boards to assign pupils on grounds of "sociological, geographical, physical, psychological, fiscal, education and any other factors," and authorize transfer of pupils.

Clement's address to the Tennessee Legislature followed introduction of two resolutions attacking the U. S. Supreme Court's ban on school segregation. Introduced by Clement's top legislative aids, they would denounce the decision as a usurpation of power by the court.

THE REQUEST for "mutual respect and confidence on the part of both races" in Florida was made by Gov. Collins at his second inaugural.

At Montgomery, Ala., a ban was lifted after 12 days on night bus service. It was put into effect after shots were fired into four buses and a Negro woman was wounded in both legs.

And at Tallahassee, where bus service was stopped by Collins after disorders several days ago, Negro leaders denounced a new bus seating plan advanced by the city commission to delay integration. They declared they would not subscribe to it.

In South Carolina, white ministers at Rock Hill issued a statement asserting "we do not believe racial supremacy can be supported by the Bible."

"We firmly believe that whatever attitude and opinion we now have regarding the relationship of the races—and we believe there is room for different convictions here—we do not believe that racial supremacy can be supported by the Bible," the ministerial association said.

IN TAKING THE OATH for a full four-year term Florida's 47-year-old Collins told an inaugural crowd that "it is folly for anyone to expect judicial dictation to compel social adjustment."

But he added:

"The (U. S.) Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land. And this nation's strength and Florida's strength are bottomed upon the basic reverse premise that ours is a law of the land.

"I am convinced, for example, that the average white citizen does not object to non-segregated seating in buses. . . . He does resent some of the methods being used to achieve certain ends.

"Boycotts, ultimatums and preemptory demands can never achieve what persuasion, peaceful petitions and normal judicial procedures can do for the Negro race."

The new bus seating plan adopted by the Tallahassee City Commission would allow drivers to assign riders to specific seats for which they would be handed tickets.

ATLANTA NEGROES HELD IN BUS CASE

5 Ministers, Seeking Test in the Courts, Had Defied Segregation Laws

P. 24c

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 10—Five Negro ministers were arrested here today for refusing yesterday to observe the state law requiring segregated seating on a city bus.

New York,

They were released from custody about an hour later after friends had posted $1,000 property bonds for each of them. The charge, a misdemeanor, is expected to be submitted to a grand jury tomorrow.

A sixth Negro minister, for whom a warrant was issued on a similar charge, was at home with his sick wife when police officers made the arrest. It was understood that he would surrender and post bond late tonight or early tomorrow.

The Atlanta ministers' group had mapped strategy for yesterday's defiance of bus segregation laws. Its leaders said that the arrests would halt their efforts to ride buses on an equal status with whites until court litigation resulted in a legal ruling.

Wednesday's bus riding incident was an attempt by the Negro leaders to create a court test. In it they will seek a judicial ruling that Georgia laws weer invalidated when the Supreme Court struck down an Alabama state law and Montgomery city ordinance requiring segregation on intrastate buses.

After the Supreme Court ruling Nov. 13, some of the Negro leaders wanted to move swiftly to break down the bus segregation pattern.

However, a strategem was devised locally to forestall a court test. Under it, bus drivers, when confronted with a desegregation incident, were to assert that the vehicle was "out of order" and take it to the depot without controversy over integrated seating.

Consequently, when the Negro ministers' group took action yesterday, no controversy resulted and no arrests were made. The bus driver, after talking with a dispatcher, said that the bus had a faulty mechanism. He drove away with his Negro passengers in the direction of the depot.

Sharp Language Used

The incident, however, was marked by some sharp language among a few white bus riders and spectators. It also received news coverage by more than a dozen reporters and photographers.

Apprised of the incident, Gov. Marvin Griffin directed that the state militia be "subject to call on a moment's notice."

He said he would not hesitate to use guardsmen to "preserve tranquility" if the local authorities did not "cope with the serious situation."

Governor Griffin is a strong opponent of racial integration.

Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who has pursued a moderately liberal course in Negro-white relations, released a statement today disclosing that he had asked local police to arrest "violators of state laws on the buses."

Police Chief Herbert Jenkins obtained arrest warrants and requested that grand jury action be taken in the case.

A few hours later the five Negro ministers were arrested at Wheat Street Baptist Church, where they were discussing plans for another bus riding tactic today.

Mayor Hartsfield's action thus opened the door for the Negroes to act on a specific legal issue. There are no city ordinances requiring bus segregation.

In the eyes of many, Mayor Hartsfield had avoided a "squeeze" between the Negro aims and the stern opposition of the state segregationist leadership. It also removed the problem from Atlanta's streets for a while.

Those arrested were the Rev. William Holmes Borders, leader of the ministers' group; the Rev. A. Franklin Fisher, the Rev. Robert H. Shorts, the Rev. Howard Bussey and the Rev. R. H. Williams. The sixth minister was the Rev. B. J. Johnson.

Governor Griffin, in his statement yesterday, charged that the bus desegregation program was provoked by "out-of-state agitators."

All indications were that the matter was entirely in the hands of local ministers who had been discussing strategy for many weeks.

the peace on buses."

Cook said "It all depends on the magnitude of the situation as to what the State may or may not do."

While the expressing hope that Atlanta's record for good race relations will be preserved, Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield declared:

"If this issue is forced upon us, the city must in a decent way uphold the State law."

Georgia Readies Law For Bus Halt Powers

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

ATLANTA, Jan. 2 (AP) — Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook said today he will draft a law giving Gov. Marvin Griffin police power to close down a public transit system in case of an emergency.

Cook said the law would be similar to the one used by Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins in shutting down the Tallahassee bus system. He added that he contacted Atty. Gen. Richard Ervin for a copy of the Florida statute.

The bill will be submitted to Griffin for final approval and will be ready for the Jan. 14 opening of the General Assembly.

Fulton Jury Indicts Six Local Ministers

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 1-16-57

Six Atlanta ministers, free on $1,000 bonds after being arrested 13 days ago for attempting to desegregate city buses, were indicted Tuesday on formal charges of violating state segregation laws.

A Fulton County Grand Jury returning 23 bills brought the misdemeanor charges against: Rev W. H. Borders, of Wheat Street Baptist Church, Rev. B. Joseph Johnson, of Greater Mt. Calvary Baptist Church, Rev. R. B. Shorts, presiding elder of Williams-Atlanta District of the CME Church, Rev. A. Franklin Fisher, of West Hunter Baptist Church, and Rev. Howard Bussey, of Perry Homes Baptist Church.

In separate bills, each of the ministers was charged with occupying seats commonly occupied by white persons on Jan. 9. They were members of the "Love, Law, and Liberation Movement," which seeks to overturn state laws requiring bus segregation. Such laws were ruled unconstitutional in several adjoining states.

The "true bills" said each of the accused men "having boarded as a passenger, an electric car operated by the Atlanta Transit System, Inc., a common carrier, within the corporate limits of the City of Atlanta, said county (Fulton), did after being assigned a seat by the conductor of said car, unlawfully refuse to occupy the seat assigned to him but remained in a seat to which he had not been assigned."

PUNISHMENT

The maximum punishment for a conviction on the charge is up to 12 months in a public works camp, or $1,000 fine and six months in a work camp. Punishment upon conviction can be less severe.

Witnesses subpoenaed by the grand jury included: Ganis V. Daniel, bus driver, Robert L. Wages, transit company supervisor, Samuel L. Adams, of the Atlanta Daily World staff, and the two arresting officers, Dets, Howard Baugh, and Capt. J. L. Mosley.

Only one of the witnesses, Daniel, was called to testify before the panel.

The six ministers were arrested Jan. 10 for boarding a trolley at a downtown stop on the preceeding day. The arrests were made on the order of Mayor William B. Hartsfield, who was criticized by extreme pro-segregationists both before and after the six were jailed. Before the arrests he was accused of permitting the ministers to break the segregation laws, and after they were taken into custody, he was charged with giving them the test cases they wanted.

THREE DAYS AFTER

Usually, misdemeanor cases coming through indictments by the grand jury are transferred to the Fulton Criminal Court within three days after the bills are returned. However, cases which have great public moment may be retained in Superior Court.

Immediately after the preachers were indicted, Sol. Gen. Webb said "the cases would follow the regular course."

Assistant Solicitor General Carl Copeland predicted that the ministers would be brought to trial in Superior Court in about 30 days, but he hastened to say that Solicitor Webb would decide which course to take.

Meanwhile, there was some indication that action for a declaratory judgment for integrated bus seating was being prepared and that a suit probably would be filed in the Federal District Court within 20 days. The federal action, which will be civil proceedings, may be entered while the criminal cases are still pending. However, the number and length of cases on court calendars will determine when the segregation suits actually come to trial. This may take six months on the Federal court calendar, it was learned. Wed. 1-16-57

Asst. Sol. Copeland, who discovered the act under which the ministers were indicted, said he believes the segregation acts will be ruled unconstitutional by the courts. The statute was passed 67 years ago.

ASSIGN PASSENGERS

The Georgia Code provides that "all conductors of street cars and buses shall assign all passengers to seats on the cars under their charge so as to separate the white and colored races as much as practicable; and all conductors and other employees of railroads and all conductors of street cars and buses shall have, and are hereby invested with police powers to carry out said provisions."

Even as the grand jury was preparing to indict the group of ministers, there was some question as to whether the bus driver actually assigned them to rear seats or asked them to move from up front. However, signs on most buses cover this technicality. These signs instruct white persons to seat from front to rear and order Negro patrons to seat from rear to front.

Rev. Borders, leader of the desegregation drive, said the ministers would discontinue sitting up front while the cases are pending in court.

Bus Integration Campaign Launched in Atlanta

ATLANTA, Jan. 9 (AP)—Six Negro ministers, singing, praying and reading the Bible, today launched the first organized attack on the traditional racially separate seating pattern on Atlanta city buses.

Their attempt to take seats in the front section—normally reserved for white people—on an Atlanta Transit System bus ended somewhat indecisively when the vehicle was immediately pulled out of service as mechanically defective.

"We will do something else," said the Rev. William Holmes Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Baptist Church and leader of the campaign against segregated bus seating.

He indicated the campaign, emphasizing non-violence, will continue until "they let us ride in peace," or the issue comes to a showdown.

Meanwhile, state and city officials commented cautiously on the movement in the Georgia capital, a stronghold of segregation. Georgia laws require white and Negro races to be seated separately on city buses.

State Attorney General Eugene Cook said "The initial responsibility for preserving the peace is vested in local authorities. The bus companies and their drivers also have some responsibility in keeping in bus seat incident

AUGUSTA, Ga.—Miss Bessie Abrams, [illegible] year old stenographer for Pilgrim Insurance Company, last Friday was jailed for refusing to obey the driver's order to move to the rear.

This was the first recorded incident of its kind to occur here. Miss Abrams was holding an NAACP membership card at the time she was taken into custody.

She was charged with disorderly conduct and later released on bond signed by W. S. [illegible], president of the insurance firm. He later had the bond changed to cash collateral and paid $29.

MISS ABRAMS told the arresting officers that the NAACP had "nothing whatsoever" to do with the incident. She insisted her actions were hers alone and entirely unplanned.

"I got on the bus," Miss Abrams told reporters, "and found it crowded mostly with colored maids. I took a seat in front of a colored girl but when she got off, I just sat there, being worn out from a day's work.

"The driver asked me to move to the rear and I refused. I was just tired and didn't want to move," she explained.

SHE SAID, "The driver left the bus and soon three policemen arrived. The stenographer said one was "very nasty" and the other two "were very rude."

Miss Abrams related that when I got to the police barracks they began quizzing me. I have lived in Augusta all my life. I told them I had worked for two years with my father in Washington."

The next question they asked was if the NAACP had anything to do with my refusal to obey the bus driver's orders. I told them absolutely not."

City Of New Orleans No Gospel Train, Say Clerics

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 12-23-57

The Illinois Central railroad's streamliner "City of New Orleans" is no gospel train, according to a complaint filed this week by the Baptist Ministers Conference of Chicago.

The conference has initiated a move to force the Illinois Central railroad to obey a state order forbidding segregation of interstate passengers.

Rev. King S. Range, treasurer of the Chicago Civil Liberties committee, is complainant in the action. He has the support of the Rev. T. Emerson Brown, president of the Illinois Baptist State convention; and Rev. J. L. Horace, president of the Baptist General State convention.

The group is seeking to have the state attorney general secure a court ruling that the railroad is in contempt of an Illinois Commerce Commission directive ordering the Illinois Central to abandon "car card" system, which is used to segregate passengers.

Under the system, all Negro passengers bound for southern points, are seated in the first three cars while white passengers going south are directed to cars some distance back.

In 1952, the Illinois Commerce Commission directed the railroad to cease this practice.

The ministers contend that the railroad has failed to comply with the order.

PARTICIPATING IN meeting of Baptist Ministers' Conference which voted to file formal complaint with Illinois Commerce Commission are Rev. Thomas Adderson, Rev. J. L. Horace, president, Baptist General State convention; Rev. T. E. Brown, president Illinois Baptist State convention; Rev. Ira Latimer, executive secretary, Civil Liberties Committee; Rev. King S. Range, pastor, Range Memorial, and Rev. W. H. Walton, president, Baptist Ministers conference.

CHICAGO—A cleric who claims he was denied the right to sit in a seat of his own choice on a Memphis-bound train has filed a $500,000 suit against the Illinois Central Railroad.

The Rev. King S. Range, pastor of Range Memorial Baptist Church in Chicago, says that his constitutional rights were violated. In his suit, filed by Atty. William E. Peterson, the Rev. Mr. Range asserts that he was restricted to a certain seat.

According to the pastor the alleged rebuff occurred on May 10 when he was directed to take a seat in a front car. He says these cars are used primarily for Negro passengers.

THE PLAINTIFF stated that he has the support of the Baptist Ministers Conference of Chicago and vicinity; the Pastor's Conference and the Interdenominational Conference.

The church, of which the Rev. Mr. Range is pastor, was named after his father, Ambrose Range, who was a Baptist deacon for 75 years. The Rev. Mr. Range is founder and organizer of the church.

Train Segregation Suit Filed By Negro Cleric

P.P.

CHICAGO, Oct. 15 (AP)—A Negro minister today filed a $500,000-damage suit against the Illinois Central Railroad, contending he was segregated into an all-Negro car on a trip from Chicago to Memphis.

The Rev. King S. Range, 55, pastor of the Range Memorial Baptist Church, charged that on May 10 he was humiliated, intimidated, menaced, insulted and forced to occupy "Jim Crow facilities" on the train, the City of New Orleans.

The Superior Court suit said the alleged IC action was segregation and unconstitutional.

Court Clears 4 In Bias Cafe Row

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 5-11-57

The Appellate Court of Illinois in a decision handed down this week reversed the convictions of four persons convicted of disorderly conduct arising out of their attempt to obtain service at Jennie's Cafe, 658 East 79th Street on May 1, 1956.

38b

Willoughby Abner, president of the Chicago Branch of the NAACP hailed the decision of the Appellate Court as "upholding the right to orderly and peacefully protest refusal by restaurants or other places of public accommodations to serve Negroes or mixed groups."

Abner also commended Atty. Howard Savage for his able handling of the legal defense and carrying the appeal to the Appellate Court on behalf of the NAACP.

The four persons were part of a mixed racial group, members of the Committee of Racial Equality who went to Jennie's cafe after receiving reports that the restaurant refused to serve Negroes. Upon arrival and being refused service the group announced their intentions to remain until they were served or until the place was closed. Employees of the restaurant called the police and the group was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

In a bench trial before Municipal Court Judge Alexander J. Napoli, they were found guilty of disorderly conduct and fined $100 each. Judge Napoli in his opinion contended that the actions of the group in remaining in the restaurant, knowing that they would not be served, "was such that may have caused other individuals in the place to become violent against these particular individuals. . . their action was not such that one would have said they were in the peace of the people."

The group refused to pay the fines levied against them and appealed their convictions to the Court in Illinois, contending that they were convicted of disorderly conduct for the sole reason that they attempted to assert their civil rights, that is the right of the Negro persons in the group to eat in a publicly licensed restaurant and the right of the white persons of the group to be served there in the company of their Negro friends.

CHARGE JUDGE

They contended that the action and opinion of Judge Napoli amounted to a bar against all people from attempting to enforce their civil rights under penalty of being charged with disorderly conduct should those violating their civil rights become angry and disorderly against them.

Justice Grover C. Niemeyer delivered the opinion of the Appellate Court which was concurred in by Justice Hugo M. Friend and Justice Joseph Burke. The high court in voiding the convictions said "the defendants here, so long as they conducted themselves in an orderly manner, had the right superior to the rights of the owners and employers of the tavern and restaurant persons, to enter the premises and wait for service, so long as the place was open and occupied by others enjoying the accommodations of the business being conducted these.

The owners and employees could not by violating the law and refusing service on account of the race or color of some members of the group, deprive them of that right."

RIGHTS OF ALL

The high court also said that the principal question in the case is the right of all persons conducting themselves in a peaceable and orderly manner to remain in the restaurant after service has been denied them on account of race or color and to insist upon such service.

The four persons whose convictions and fines were voided are Fred Fields, John Corney, Mrs. Jeanne Wesson and John Forbes. The Appellate Court upheld the conviction and fine for Mrs. Kathryn Fields and Dale Drews on a technical point, but pointed out that this in no way denied them the right to participate in the protest against being served and that the conviction on that basis by Judge Napoli was on the wrong basis.

"The principal involved in the case was far reaching and the decision of the Appellate Court firmly upholds the right of members of minority groups to be treated impartially and fairly as all other Americans," said Willoughby Abner, president of the Chicago NAACP in commenting on the victory.

FIVE NEGROES FLOUT SHREVEPORT BUS LAW

No Police Interference In Segregation Test

Sun. 6-16-57

WHITES REFUSE TO RIDE

Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

SHREVEPORT, La., June 15.—Five hymn singing Negro preachers openly broke Louisiana's bus segregation law in Shreveport today, but were warned by police not to try it again.

p. 11

The preachers carried Bibles with them when they boarded a trolley bus at 5 a.m. and sat in the front section traditionally reserved for whites. Their unlawful ride was not interrupted from the time they boarded until they got off in downtown Shreveport.

They had announced their anti-segregation move in advance to police, a newspaper, and radio and television stations. But Police Chief Harvey L. Teasley said the threats had been made before and not carried out, so they were not taken seriously today.

Officials Notified

Officials of the Shreveport Railways Co. were notified by bus driver H. C. Spence. He was told not to take action against the five, who chanted and sang as they rode.

City police said they could make no arrests unless a formal charge was preferred against the Negroes. Chief Teasley said he understood from the bus company that drivers will file formal complaints against the next violator of Louisiana's bus segregation law.

H. C. Kihneman, an official of the bus company, said drivers have been instructed to file a complaint at the next incident.

Refused To Board

Several whites refused to board the bus when they saw the Negroes riding in front of the "for colored passenger" signs. Two dozen whites stood as the bus passed through the fashionable Broadmoor section of Shreveport, a city of more than 150,000. There was no violence and no reports of bitter exchanges of words.

Rev. A. L. Scott, one of the Negro riders, identified himself as a Baptist minister, and a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He said the bus ride was part of a pro-integration drive and "it is just a beginning." Rev. Scott also said he was a member of the United Christian Movement, a pro-integration group in Louisiana.

Wanted To Be Arrested

Bus company workers said privately the Negroes apparently wanted to be arrested.

The company and police were placed in a delicate situation in the matter because of Federal Court Litigation underway in downstate New Orleans.

A Federal Court has declared Louisiana's bus and streetcar segregation law unconstitutional, but the decision so far has been limited to New Orleans. The decision does not take affect until all appeals are heard in the case.

Louisiana officials generally fear that any new tests of the law in sections outside New Orleans will get the same treatment in Federal Court. The Shreveport preachers will begin such a test if they are arrested, it is believed.

MAYOR ISSUES WARNING

Memphis, Tenn.

By The United Press

SHREVEPORT, La., June 16.—Five Negro ministers hinted Sunday they will again move against Louisiana bus segregation laws despite warnings by the mayor and chief of police that further violations would lead to arrests.

The ministers, all members of the pro-integration United Christian Movement, Saturday boarded a Shreveport bus and took a 45-minute ride in seats reserved for whites under Louisiana segregation laws, which already are under attack in Federal courts.

No Arrests, Violence

No arrests were made and no incidences of violence were reported.

It was the first organized move by Negroes to sit beside whites in Louisiana buses.

A Federal judge recently declared Louisiana transit segregation laws pertaining to New Orleans unconstitutional. However, an injunction issued against segregation does not become effective until all appeals are exhausted, not expected before 1958.

One of the ministers, Rev. J. R. Retledge, chairman of the board of the UCM, said it would be "at least 10 days" before the group would make any new move. He said the group's board of directors would meet to formulate plans and submit them to the UCM membership.

Mayor James C. Gardner said as long as Louisiana segregation laws are in effect, the city would enforce them.

Mayor's Warning

"Any violations that are brought to the attention of the city enforcement agencies," the mayor said, "will result in charges being preferred."

Police Chief Harvey Teasley said had police been notified in time Saturday, the Negroes would have been arrested.

Several whites refused to board the bus when they saw the Bible-carrying ministers sitting in the front, a section traditionally reserved for whites.

However, three unidentified white women took seats beside Rev. A. L. Scott, executive secretary of the UCM, at different times.

Two of the ministers also are members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is outlawed in Louisiana. However, a spokesman said the NAACP had no part in Saturday's incident.

Five Bible-Readers Ride Unmolested Through Fashionable Shreveport Section

Atlanta Ga.

SHREVEPORT, La., June 15 (AP)—Five Negro ministers, reading from their Bibles, rode in the white section of a bus Saturday as it drove through a fashionable district of this segregated city in the Deep South.

Chief of Police Harvey L. Teasley, notified in advance that the ministers would board the bus, made no attempt to arrest them. Louisiana laws require separate seats for whites and Negroes on public buses.

AFTER THE RIDE, however, Chief Teasley said all other Negroes attempting to follow the lead of the ministers would be arrested if they sat in the white section of a city bus.

Three white women sat next to the Negroes. Two of them took seats there because no others were available. But one unidentified young woman boarded the bus, noticed other empty seats and then sat down next to the Rev. A. L. Scott, leader of the Negroes.

The woman rode for 10 minutes until she reached her destination, then departed. During her trip she did not say a word.

Three other white persons refused to board the bus. About 20 to 25 white men and women clogged the aisles, refusing to sit in any empty seats surrounding the ministers.

H. C. SPENCE, driver of the bus, made no attempt to escort the Negroes to the rear section, normally reserved for members of their race.

At his first opportunity, the driver phoned the Shreveport Transit Co. headquarters and was told to let the ministers sit in front.

There was no incident of violence. On only one occasion was there even a hint of trouble.

As a second bus passed the bus with the ministers a driver shouted to Spence.

"I've got a shotgun if you need it."

All other Negroes boarding the bus moved quickly to the back and took their regular seats during the 45-minute ride.

Scott described himself as a member of the National Assn. of the Advancement of Colored People and the United Christian Movement, a prointegration organization in Shreveport.

Integration Action Made on Shreveport Bus

Mon. 6-17-57

(The Associated Press)

While Southerners continue their battle in Congress against President Eisenhower's civil rights bill, Negroes in Louisiana and Texas are planting new seeds in the fields of integration.

p. 20

Five Negro ministers rode in the white section of a public bus in Shreveport, La., Saturday. They called it the "beginning of integration" in that segregated city of the Deep South.

There were no arrests and no acts of violence. But Police Chief Harvey L. Teasley warned that arrests will be made in the future if Negroes refuse to take seats in the rear, as is customary under the pattern of segregation.

All Was Quiet

All was quiet yesterday in Shreveport, Louisiana's second-largest city. No further integration attempts were reported. All five of the ministers who defied the state's segregated seating law mentioned the incident in their Sunday sermons, but did not make it a major theme. The incident was not mentioned from the pulpit of any white church.

In Austin, Tex., the 20th annual Texas conference of NAACP branches dedicated itself to "mass action for civil rights."

"We will file a lawsuit tomorrow if any citizen comes to us and asks us to do so with the facts that his civil rights have been violated," said keynote speaker W. J. Durham, a Dallas lawyer. Durham is an attorney for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Professor Pressured

On the other side of the ledger, a Negro history professor in Hazlehurst, Miss., said he is being pressured because of newspaper articles he wrote supporting segregation.

Prof. Clennon King said the president of all-Negro Alcorn A & M College has "tried to force me to move off the campus," denied him use of his office and indicated his salary may be cut.

Alcorn President J. D. Boyd declined comment.

Early this year the bulk of Alcorn's students quit classes in protest against King's prosegregation articles. They demanded his discharge or resignation.

School Back to Normal

It has been announced that King would be retained on the faculty and almost all students have returned to classes. The school has been reported back to normal for several months. All Alcorn faculty members and students are Negroes.

The Shreveport "ride integrated" incident was the first organized attempt by Negroes to sit next to whites on Louisiana buses. State law provides for separate but equal seating facilitie and empowers the bus driver to determine who sits where.

The Rev. J. R. Retledge, chairman of the United Christian Movement, a Shreveport antisegregation group, said he and his fellow ministers expected to be arrested as a result of their ride.

To Use Legal Test

They planned, he added, to use that as a basis for a legal test of the state's segregation laws in the courts. He did not indicate their future course of action.

Negroes make up about one-third of Shreveport's 165,000 population.

The President's civil rights bill is expected to receive final action in the House Monday. It then will go to the Senate where Vice President Nixon and Sen. Knowland (R-Calif), the GOP leader, reportedly will join forces in an effort to prevent the bill from being sidetracked to a committee, where it might be bottled up.

For 45-minutes the ministers rode through a fashionable district in this city. reading their Bibles enroute, as whites jammed the aisles standing up rather than taking seats next to the clergymen. No arrests were made even though Police Chief Harvey L. Teasley reportedly knew of the incident in advance.

Three white women took seats at various times during the ride, next to the ministers. The third woman deliberately took a seat next to a Negro minister even though other seats were available in the white section.

The Rev. A. L. Scott, a spokesman for the group said the third woman looked at the empty seats and then took a seat with him.

A white man and a white woman refused to board the bus. Another man stepped into the bus, saw the Negro ministers sitting in front and demanded to be let out of the vehicle. He was accommodated.

The bus driver, H. S. Spence, stopped the vehicle and called the Shreveport Transit Company. He was reportedly told to make no attempt to force the ministers to the rear.

Rev. Scott, who is an NAACP member and also is affiliated in the United Christian movement, a Shreveort anti-segregation group here, said other Negroes would follow the ministers in defying segregation laws on the buses.

No other Negroes rode the front of the bus during this ride which was the first organized attempt by Negroes to break down bias on buses.

Negroes To Seek Segregation Ban In Baton Rouge

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 3 (AP) —A Negro leader said today his group would go into federal court next week to seek a ruling ending Baton Rouge bus segregation.

Times-Picayune Sat. 1-5-57 Montgomery, Ala.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, head of the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, newly formed pro-integration group, said he expected his group would meet this afternoon with a special city council committee named to deal with bus segregation.

"We expect to go into court for a declaratory judgment just as soon as we get the preliminary steps out of the way," said Jemison, indicating he didn't expect the city to announce any change in its policy of enforcing a city segregation ordinance.

The nine-member movement is composed of the members of the boycott of Baton Rouge buses a few years ago.

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 4 (AP) —A Negro leaders said today he doubts a Baton Rouge membership list of the National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People will be filed until late this year.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, heading a move for a court fight to end bus segregation here, said "we're hopeful of reactivating an NAACP chapter here this year."

He said that under the law he did not think any membership list would have to be filed until the 1957 deadline next December.

Bus Seat Law To Be Backed In Louisiana

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 1-5-57

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 4 (AP) —Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion today backed city officials with a warning to Negro leaders the state will do all in its power to uphold bus segregation laws here.

P. 8-A

"Until our laws are wiped off the books," he told a Negro delegation, he is advising district attorneys to enforce city and state laws requiring separate seating for the races.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, head of the new Baton Rouge Christian movement, a pro-integration unit, said immediately after the conference with Gremillion his group intends to go ahead next week with a federal lawsuit forcing a showdown.

The Negro leaders seek a federal declaratory judgement to render the state and city segregated seating laws unconstitutional.

City officials told the same Negro group yesterday city and state laws will be enforced "Until declared invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Baton Rouge, Negroes Nix Bus Boycott Hint Court Action For Desegregation

Advertiser Sat. 1-5-57 Jackson, Miss. P. 1

Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 31.—City Parish Attorney Gordon Kahn said Friday Baton Rouge will enforce its bus segregation ordinance until it is appealed or invalidated by court action.

Kean's statement came during a meeting with Negro leaders seeking an end to bus segregation.

Kean said the Negro leaders assured him "they planned no drastic action such as a boycott although they may take it to court."

The attorney said there was a basic difference between the Baton Rouge ordinance and the Montgomery, Ala., ordinance that the Supreme Court recently outlawed.

Advertiser P. 8-A

Kean said a new mayor-president and City-Parish Council will take office next Tuesday and that he felt sure the new officials would be willing to meet with the Negro group to discuss the question.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, Negro Baptist minister, said after a meeting with bus company officials earlier Friday they had formed the "Baton Rouge Christian Movement" to direct the drive for a test of the ordinance.

Manager H. Flynn Cauthen of the bus line told the Negroes his company must abide by state and city laws. He did not comment when asked if the company would hire Negro drivers.

LOUISIANA NEGROES WARNED BY OFFICIAL

Commercial Appeal Sat. 1-5-57

Will Enforce Segregation, Says Attorney General

Memphis, Tenn.

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 4. —(UP)—Louisiana Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion told a Negro integrationist group Friday that the state would enforce segregation laws "until when and if they are found invalid."

P. 12

"And that we will fight against most vigorously," he told the newly formed Baton Rouge Christian Movement.

The movement is presently bringing pressure against the city's bus segregation ordinances.

Earlier, Negro leaders told the attorney general they hoped he would advise other officials in the state as to "what the law of the land now is," in order to avoid litigation and possible violence.

Mr. Gremillion told the group his office had only general supervisory power over enforcement, and advised them to contact district attorneys in their search for "peaceful solution."

One director of the integration movement, Dr. D. H. Anderson, said his group needed the help of Christian people.

"In Mississippi," he said, "our people are fleeing as people did in Hungary—from brutality."

"The reason they have bombings and shootings in other place," he said, "is because officials in charge have defied decisions of the Supreme Court. I think we have enough honest Christian citizens in Louisiana to handle it peacefully.

"We fought in the war to preserve democracy. As a reserve officer in the Air Force I am subject to recall to do it again. But sometimes, after what happens back here, we wonder what we are fighting for."

The conference grew tense at one time when Mr. Gremillion, after listening to one member of the group discuss "law and our land." He snapped, "Are you asking me, or telling me?"

Later Gremillion added: "It is immaterial to this office what the United States Supreme Court has said about other laws, and I am so going to advise all district attorneys."

The conference ended pleasantly, however, with mutual wishes for "Happy New Year."

Negro Leader Talks Litigation After Parley

New Orleans, La.

By JAY HALL

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 4—Negro leaders seeking an end to segregation amid "a good Christian atmosphere" failed to soften the state attorney general into relaxing enforcement of bus-seating laws Friday.

Rev. T. H. Jemison, pastor of the Mount Zion First Baptist church here and president of the Negroes' newly formed Baton Rouge Christian Movement, talked with Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion approximately half an hour.

They said they wanted Louisiana to recognize what a Florida judge has already recognized in the wake of the United States supreme court integration decisions—that segregation "is as dead as a doornail."

When the conference broke, Jemison commented: "This ends our steps to avoid litigation . . . our course is clear."

He had announced the day previously he was considering petitioning the federal courts for declaratory judgment to automatically effect the end of nonmixed seating on buses and indicated that step may come next week.

Gremillion told the group, "I am sure if a court suit follows all this, it will be vigorously contested."

The attorney general did not deviate from this answer to the group: As long as Louisiana law requires segregated seating on buses, his office must necessarily uphold the law.

He told the half-dozen Negro leaders who gathered in his office that he must advise the district attorneys of the state to enforce the state segregation laws until they are "erased" from the books.

One of the Negro leaders, Rev. Edward W. Brown, reminded Gremillion that the US supreme court is "the law of the land," governing the law of all states, and he "assumed" that Louisiana is "one of the member states of the United States."

Gremillion, bristling, burst out: "Did you come here to argue with me or—?"

Brown interrupted, explaining it was not his intent to put the conference on hostile ground.

The attorney general told him, "I do not intend to get into a controversy . . . over this issue. It is immaterial what the supreme court has said . . . until this (segregated seating) law is declared unconstitutional in Louisiana and wiped off the books of the state, I'm going to carry it out."

Jemison interposed, "We are law abiding citizens. We have taken steps to work by peaceful and harmonious means to bring about a just solution.

"We had hoped you would advise other state officers what the law of the land is . . . a Florida judge has wisely said that 'segregation is as dead as a doornail.'

"We had hoped to avoid a lot of litigation. We hoped that Louisiana would profit by the mistakes of Florida and Alabama."

Another Christian Movement member, Dr. D. H. Anderson, told Gremillion, "The reason for the bombing and people being shot at on buses (in Alabama) is that the officers in charge denied and defied the decision of the supreme court."

He added, "We are talking to you as honest Negro, Americans. We fought in the war to preserve democracy . . . when you've been overseas and think about how we are being browbeaten back here, you sometimes stop and wonder: 'What are we fighting for?'

"People are fleeing Mississippi because of brutality just as they are in Hungary.

"We are here to build good public relations in a good Christian atmosphere so that Louisiana will not become a Montgomery or a Tallahassee."

Gremillion replied, "I know Baton Rouge has got many good colored people, but the attorney general's office has nothing to do with the Baton Rouge bus company.

"Whatever controversy you may be engaged in with them, I can only tell you what the law is."

A reporter riding the elevator with the Negro group after the conference ended asked if he had any plans for discussing the matter with Gov. Earl K. Long.

"Lordy, no. Not him," Jemison answered. "He wouldn't be any help to us," he said.

Recalling the series of conferences, most of them arranged in a matter of hours before they were held, with Baton Rouge city, parish and bus company officials in the past 10 days, Jemison was asked if there would be more such meetings.

"No more meetings are planned at this time," he said. Later, Jemison disclosed a new Baton Rouge chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is planned. The old one apparently died when the branch failed to file a list of members. Failure to file led to an injunction last March against further operations.

Jemison said, "We're dead members now. We'll have to start a new group."

If a new one is begun, he said, he believes it would not be necessary to file a list of members until next Dec. 15-31, the filing period specified in state statutes.

Minister Cites Time As Factor For Social Change

Daily World Sun. 1-13-57 Atlanta, Ga.

P. 1

By HARRY TRIMBORN

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS) — "It will take time and understanding to change the social customs of our community."

[illegible] believes the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Negro Baptist minister, who [illegible] president of the Baton Rouge [illegible]ian Movement, plans to call [illegible] a Federal Court to declare segregation of Baton Rouge buses illegal.

For the 37-year-old stocky, fast-talking clergyman, the current drive of his group's attempt to remove racial barriers on the buses is but the first step in an avowed aim to seek integration in all walks of life.

ALL SOUTHERNERS

However, Jemison, who led a short but successful Negro boycott of Baton Rouge buses in 1953, believes in making haste slowly.

"We are all Southerners," he said in his clipped, precise manner, "and we know that it will take time and patience to change the habits of the people. You cannot legislate good feeling.

But in order to hasten the change the minister and his group are relying on jurisprudence, as contained in the U. S. Supreme Court decision which brought about the end of racial segregation on Montgomery, Ala., city buses and the successful conclusion of the famous year-long bus boycott there.

Jemison said the Baton Rouge Christian Movement seeks a "peaceful and orderly" end to segregation on Baton Rouge buses.

To the suggestion that the Supreme Court decision is the "law of the land," Jemison said his supporters received forceful declarations from city and state officials that Louisiana segregation laws would be upheld.

Jemison is confident a federal court will follow the Montgomery decision and apply it to Baton Rouge.

Jemison, a native of Selma, Ala., who holds degrees from Alabama State Teachers College at Montgomery and Virginia Union University at Richmond, has long heard talk of an end to segregation "some day."

His minister father, once president of the National Baptist Convention, was a life-member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. So was his mother.

"I will be a member too, as soon as I can get the required $500 needed," he said.

The NAACP, he feels, has done much to bring about Federal Court decisions to improve the Negro's status.

But the minister emphasized that no court decision could finally settle the Southern dispute over segregation. In today's climate, Jemison—leading a fight for integration on buses—would not want his children to attend integrated schools.

Daily World P. 11

"My two girls (eight and ten) say they don't want to go to an integrated school because they feel the white children would be mean to them," he said adding: "At present, I personally don't want to see them attend an integrated school because of their fears."

He emphasized that he is not against school integration, "but it is a question of free choice—a child should be allowed to attend the school of his choice, whether white or Negro."

Jemison thinks the final answer to the South's current problems over segregation can be found in the region's children, however. He said:

"We should start desegregating those activities and facilities which have the greatest effect on children, such as school and recreational facilities.

Gov. Long Defends Bus Seating Laws

Advertiser P. 4-C Montgomery, Ala.

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 9 (AP) —Gov. Earl Long said here he saw no reason for a change in Louisiana's law requiring segregated seating on buses.

Baton Rouge Negroes have indicated they plan to seek a federal court order ending separate seating in city buses, similar to action in Florida and Alabama. This has brought violence in several cities.

Atlanta 1-10-57

"I don't think, as long as you get a good seat in the bus, it makes any difference whether you sit in the front or the back," Long told a press conference.

"I don't see any reason for a change in the laws as long as the colored people are furnished plenty of seats. I can't see any reason for a change. I just hope it'll be all peaceful."

Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion last week warned the Negro group he would demand enforcement of all Louisiana's segregation laws until a court declares them invalid.

Ex-GI's 'Test' Of La. Jim Crow Gets Him Shot

Courier p.3
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 1-12-57

By GULLY CARTER

NEW ORLEANS—Was 24-year-old Army veteran Frank Jones Jr., 3605 Thalia, making a one-man test of Louisiana's bus segregation law, as he says, or did he throw two jim crow (screens) signs out of a crowded local bus last week to cover a holdup attempt on the driver, as police say?

• Regardless of the motive, Jones threw the signs from the crowded bus and was shot in the back and dangerously wounded, as he went through a rear door, by Traffic Patrolman Frank Lovol.

Police say Jones was a passenger on a New Orleans Public Service (Tulane) bus when he threw the segregation signs out the window of the crowded vehicle.

THE DRIVER, Lloyd Alexander, retrieved the signs, police say, and Jones reportedly placed a knife at his throat, ordering him to throw the bus operating gear out the front door.

Police quote the driver as saying, "Jones then added, 'I'm going to take this money-changer, too.'" At this time, he said, the bus had stopped at the intersection of Tulane Ave. and Galvez St.

Patrolmen Frank Lovol and Lawrence Bayer were riding a bus following the one on which the incident occurred and went to investigate, when they found Jones holding a knife at Alexander's throat, police said.

• Bayer guarded the rear door of the bus while Lovol entered the front and followed Jones to the rear door. As Jones stepped out, he was shot in the lower back by Lovol, who said Jones tried to stab Bayer.

Interviewed in Charity Hospital, where he is under police guard, Jones told a Courier reporter:

• "I had an argument with a white passenger, who insisted on moving the screen and making me move back. Other white passengers joined in the argument . . . I got mad and threw both screens out the window.

• "It's a lie about my trying to commit a holdup. One cop hit me—that's all I remember—I don't know when I got shot. Yes, I had a knife, but I didn't take it out of my jocket."

Seriously ill following an operation that required several hours for removing the bullet, Jones talked with extreme difficulty and ended the interview saying, "That's all . . . I'm tired. Come back later, just let me sleep . . . That screen . . . that damned screen . . . move the screen."

JONES HAS been charged with attempted murder of two policemen and armed robbery of the bus driver and resisting an officer. He has a record of arrests for minor offenses dating back to 1950.

His sister, Mrs. Edna Robinson, said he had been acting "nervous and jittery" for more than three weeks. She said he had served two years in the Army and is presently attending a business college.

'Tired Of 2nd Class Citizenship'

Weekly
Sat. 1-19-57
New Orleans, La.

There was a strong indication here last week that a New Orleans bus official would obey a desegregation order should the courts determine the matter.

P. 1

That was the obvious conclusion drawn by leaders following their session with George Dinwiddie, president of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc.

He told the leaders, representing two groups headed by the Rev. A. L. Davis of the Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance and Dr. W. R. Adams of the New Orleans Improvement League, that "Our purpose is to provide safe, efficient, economical and courteous transit service for all the citizens in New Orleans. The United States Supreme Court decision was rendered in a case arising in Montgomery, Alabama. Public Service is chartered under the laws of the State of Louisiana."

Obviously inviting the group to take legal action so that the courts can settle the matter, Dinwiddie continued: "The applicable laws of Louisiana have not been reviewed by the United States Supreme Court, and must, therefore, be compiled with. In our judgment, Public Service cannot presume to determine judicial and regulatory matters."

Explaining that the enforcement of segregation law is the responsibility of state and local officials, the official crystalized his position as a "law-abiding citizen"...we are not at liberty to use our own discretion in all decisions about operations. We must operate within the framework of applicable State and local laws."

Because of these circumstances, Dinwiddie ended, the company will continue segregation practices until the state and city law says otherwise.

The meeting came on the heels of a letter from the Alliance seeking to learn if the city transit system planned to take steps towards compliance with a federal desegregation order.

Text of Alliance statement following conference:

"In our conference with George Dinwiddie, president of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., in regard to his corporation's compliance with the Supreme Court Decision on public carriers, Mr. Dinwiddie stated that the position of his firm was that it was going to operate its system under whatever law prevails at the time.

"In view of this statement, it is our firm belief that we have exhausted all but legal means of desegregating the local carriers. We cannot appeal to the laws of Louisiana for removal of segregation on the public carriers for the Attorney General of the state has told a group similar to ours in Baton Rouge that he will enforce the laws of Louisiana regarding segregation, regardless of the Federal Court decision.

"We feel that the time has come for a more realistic attitude by the community on the total subject of the Negro's place as an American citizen. As American citizens, we have complied with all of the requirements and demands placed upon us as members of this great state and nation. We pay our taxes, we shed our blood for our nation and we deny ourselves for the needs of the nation, yet we are continually denied the privileges which are accorded the most newly-arrived white person to our shores.

"We are tired of second-class citizenship, and we want all to know that we are specifically weary of riding behind the segregation screen on the public modes of transportation in New Orleans.

"As American citizens, we are deeply hurt that the American people feel great indignation for the suffering and the struggles of the Hungarian people yet no such indignation is felt for the American Negro as he suffers under the same kind of oppression in our beloved Southland.

"We have reluctantly used the facilities of the New Orleans Public Service on a segregated basis; but now that the Federal Courts, which supercedes the Louisiana and the local courts, have made riding behind segregated screens unconstitutional, we therefore feel that it is imperative that all who believe in impartial justice under the law should join with us in our efforts to peaceably get the New Orleans Public Service to comply with the supreme Court Decision on public carriers."

Negroes File Bus Plaint in New Orleans

Constitution
Sat. 2-2-57
Atlanta, Ga.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 1 (AP)—Two Negroes today filed suit in federal district court demanding a halt to bus segregation in New Orleans.

P. 3

Their petition came several hours before a scheduled Negro rally which featured the Rev. Martin Luther King as main speaker. King was leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

Besides asking for an immediate end to bus segregation, the suit called for a ruling that would nullify all of Lousiana's bus segregation laws.

Similar action is expected to be taken in Baton Rouge.

A. P. Tureaud, former chief of Louisiana Council for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, acted as attorney for the two Negroes.

The NAACP has been barred in the state under an old law originally aimed at the Ku Klux Klan.

Tureaud asked the U.S. district court to set up a special three-man court and hear the case.

White Citizens Urge Transit Co. To Respect Court Ruling

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 2-21-57

BY HARRY TRIMBORN

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — A group of white clergymen Tuesday urged New Orleans City and Transit officials to "honor the supreme law of the land" by ending segregation on buses.

In reference to the U. S. Supreme Court's historic decision which struck down segregation on Montgomery, Ala., City buses, the group presented a petition to the officials which said:

"A normal respect for the orderly progress of life under law should, we believe, impel the authorities in any community to honor the supreme law of the land and seek to implement it."

After presenting the petition, which contained the signatures of 125 persons, most of whom are white, to city transit president George S. Dinwiddie, the transit official told the group that his agency will have to comply with Louisiana segregation laws.

The Clergymen, with the Rev. C. H. Snelling, Jr., Methodist chaplain at Tulane University acting as their spokesman, also presented the petition to Robert Wall, executive assistant to the mayor of New Orleans. Wall said that "No Action" would be taken on the petition at this time and added that it would be treated like a "Routine request made by a group of interested citizens."

Previously, city officials maintained that they, too, must abide by the state segregation laws.

The petition said it recognized that the Montgomery decision was not applicable in Louisiana -- a point repreately stressed by transit authorities -- but added that bus desegregation in New Orleans "will surely come."

The statement said:

"To ignore or attempt to circumvent what must come would give strength to lawlessness and make the eventual outcome for from peaceful.

We therefore urge our local authorities not to wait for a court order, but rather to initiate a positive program of complance with what eventually must be considered a law of the United States.

Dinwiddie's statement was identical to one made last Jan. 9 to an all-Negro group which initiated a move to desegregate the city's buses.

Subsequently, the Negro group filed a suit in New Orleans federal court seeking a declaratory judgement and injunction against the state race laws in view of the Montgomery decision. No date as yet has been set for the case.

N.O. Ministers, Priest Ask Bus Desegregation Steps

Times-Picayune p. 2

NOPSI President, City Given Statement

New Orleans, La.

Three New Orleans ministers and a Catholic priest Tuesday asked New Orleans Public Service, Inc., and the city government to "initiate a positive program" to bring about desegregation of the races on the city's buses and streetcars.

The clergymen said their statement was signed by 41 ministers and priests, most of them white. The list of purported signers totaled 125 with 41 of them being identified as clergymen.

Presenting the statement to NOPSI president George S. Dinwiddie and to Robert E. Wall, executive assistant to Mayor de-Lesseps S. Morrison, were the following:

The Rev. Clarence H. Snelling Jr., Methodist chaplain at Tulane university.

The Rev. Thomas C. Aycock Jr., pastor of St. Augustine's Episcopal church.

The Rev. Eugene P. McManus, S. S. J., a member of the faculty at St. Augustine's High school for Negro boys.

And Rev. Samuel L. Gandy, D. D., Negro chaplain at Dillard university.

All four said they were acting as individuals and were not representing their various institutions.

'Law Not Reviewed'

They met first Tuesday afternoon with Dinwiddie in his offices at 317 Baronne and then with Wall at City Hall.

Following the conference Dinwiddie said he referred the clergymen to a statement he made last month to a group of Negro ministers also seeking integration on the city's public transit.

That statement said the Louisiana law calling for racial segregation on such transport had not been reviewed by the US supreme court "and must therefore, be complied with."

Wall said he received their statement and would refer it to the mayor.

Among the list of the purported signers, as presented by the Rev. Mr. Snelling, was the name of James A. Dombrowski, executive director of the Southern Conference Educational Fund and who has been the subject of questioning by the Senate committee of Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), investigating alleged Communist activities.

Phifer Listed

The Rev. Mr. Snelling said the statement was prepared in Dombrowski's offices at 822 Perdido. He said the appearence of Dombrowski's name on the list shouldnot be construed to indicate the statement had anything to do with the SCEF.

Another name on the list is that of Calhoun Phifer. Calhoun Phifer refused to testify last April before the Eastland committee in New Orleans, invoking all amendments to the Constitution and the Magna Carta.

The statement said the problem of segregated seating on the buses should be solved under the guidance of "the highest type of moral principles."

"A normal respect for the orderly processes of life under law should, we believe, impel the authorities in any community to honor the supreme law of the land and to seek to implement it. To do otherwise would be a dereliction of duty not only as public officials, but even as citizens of the United States," it read.

The statement said no one can "seriously doubt" that integration of the races on public transport will come. In following policy of segregation, it said, "the peace of such a course of action can be immediate only." It added:

"To ignore or attempt to circumvent what must come would give strength to lawlessness and make the eventual outcome far from peaceful. We therefore urge our local authorities not to wait for court order, but rather to initiate a positive program of compliance with what eventually must be considered a law of the United States."

Restraint Called for

The statement called for restraint, human understanding and good will and pointed to New Orleans' position as a cosmopolitan city whose population consists of persons of many national origins.

The statement concluded:

"This background encourages us to hope that New Orleans authorities will not permit our city to drift into the pattern of violence and bitterness that we have witnessed elsewhere, but will instead provide a demonstration of how a great international center can face and solve a difficult problem of human relations."

The list of names follows:

Two bus suits herald King's arrival in N.O.

(Special to the AFRO)

NEW ORLEANS — Two suits asking Federal courts to declare city and state bus segregation laws illegal were filed in U.S. Districts courts at New Orleans and Baton Rouge Friday.

The petitions hailed the triumphant appearance here of the Rev. M. L. King Jr., who last year led 50,000 Montgomery people to victory over bus segregation.

On the same day, a third suit seeking to knock out newly-enacted bus seat assignment laws was filed in the Federal Court at Tallahassee, Fla., another scene of a transportation boycott.

* * *

THE NEW Orleans suit named the Rev. A. L. Davis, pastor of the New Zion Baptist Church and Dr. William Adams, president of the New Orleans Improvement Association, as plaintiffs.

Defendants are the mayor of New Orleans, the chief of police and the president of the bus company.

Filed by A. P. Tureaud, the former NAACP counsel, the petition asks the convening of a three-judge Federal court which would issue a declaratory judgment forbidding city and state officials from enforcing bus segregation laws.

A similar petition was filed in the U.S. District Court at Baton Rouge with the Rev. Theo Jemison as the plaintiff.

MORE THAN 2,500 persons braved a chilly rain to attend the mass meeting at the huge coliseum Arena where the Rev. Mr. King spoke Friday night.

The meeting was given adequate protection by the city police department after numerous attempts had been made by the White Citizens Council to have it canceled.

A special detail of two colored policemen was assigned to guard Dr. King the entire time he was in the city.

* * *

MAYOR DEL. S. Morrison had earlier rejected a White Citizens Council demand that he compel the United Clubs, Inc., to call off the meeting.

The mayor based his rejection on a ruling by City Attorney Henry Curtis that there was no "legal way" to prevent the meeting.

* * *

UNABLE TO get official help in blocking Dr. King's appearance, the segregationists reportedly offered the manager of the Coliseum Arena, scene of the city's major sports events, three times the rental fee it was receiving, to cancel the date.

This offer, too, was rejected.

In a blistering attack on persons and organizations who would deprive American citizens of their Constitutional rights, Rev. Mr. King evoked thunderous applause when he said:

"I know not what the future holds, but I do know who holds the future."

During the day, the Alabama leader addressed a luncheon meeting of the city's ministers and in the afternoon spoke to an assemblage of teachers.

He urged them "not to be afraid to join the fight for freedom" asserting, "you have nothing to lose but your needless fears."

The King rally was not segregated.

THE UNITED Clubs, Inc., is a citywide federation of 156 social and civic clubs of which Raymond B. Floyd is executive secretary.

The bus suit at Tallahassee was filed by Johnnie Herndon and Leonard D. Speed, students at Florida A. and M. University, who face trial for violating the new bus seat assignment law.

The ordinance makes no reference to race, but gives bus drivers the right to assign passengers to seats on the grounds of "weight distribution," "avoidance of riots" and other reasons.

"The ordinance is clearly designed to get around the Supreme Court's ruling that bus segregation is unconstitutional," Francisco Rodriguez, Tampa NAACP attorney, representing the students, declared.

The suit also asks the Federal judge to issue a permanent injunction barring the city transit company and city officials from enforcing the new law.

Order Will Be Permanent Injunction In Louisiana

BY HARRY TRIMBORN

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — Louisiana laws and city ordinances requiring segregation on New Orleans buses and streetcars and in a city park were declared unconstitutional Wednesday.

Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright, in two separate decision, said he will order a temporary injunction issued to prohibit the laws from being enforced. He said he will order the injunctions made permanent but did not say when.

The ruling involving the City Transit System was handed down on a suit filed by two Negro plaintiffs who had previously sought to have the city's buses and streetcars desegregated "without recourse to the courts."

In his ruling, Judge Wright said:

RIPE FOR DECISION

"This matter (bus segregation) is ripe for decision. All State statutes requiring segregation on public transportation facilities in New Orleans ..... are unconstitutional."

In the city park case, the judge declared his ruling was based on desegregation cases involving parks in Atlanta and Baltimore in which the U. S. Supreme Court ordered them opened to all races.

The judge also cited a recent court ruling ordering the Orleans Parish (New Orleans) School Board to desegregate "with all deliberate speed."

The ruling was made after assistant Attorney Gen. William P. Schuler sought to have the suit, filed by the plaintiffs, dismissed.

DECLARATORY JUDGMENT

The decision involving the City Transit System was made on a motion for a declaratory judgment involving the State racial laws by A. P. Tureaud, attorney.

Named as plaintiffs in the suit were the Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., president of the New Orleans Interdenominational Alliance, and Dr. W. R. Adams, president of the New Orleans Improvement League.

Both men headed a group who urged City and Transit officials last January to desegregate the public carriers in view o fthe U. S. Supreme Court's ruling striking down bus segregation in the historic Montgomery, Ala., case.

But they were informed that since Louisiana law prohibits the mixing of the races on public carriers, segregation would continue on them "until a court of competent jurisdiction ruled otherwise."

City attorney sought to have the suit dismissed on the grounds that the plaintiffs had never been actually forced to sit behind signs on buses and trolleys which separate white from Negro patrons. He also maintained that neither had been arrested for not sitting behind the segregation signs.

However, the judge contended:

ARRESTS NOT NEEDED

"It is not the court's view that in our civilization it is necessary to have incidents, to have people arrested, to have their rights declared."

Following the rulings, attorneys for the city said they will appeal both decisions.

George S. Dinwiddle, president of the public service, Inc., which operates the City Transit System, said his firm will continue segregation practices until the injunction is issued.

He said:

".....So long as there is no final judgment declaring the state laws involved, we are required to observe such laws and accordingly we will continue our present operating practices.

In Baton Rouge, Attorney Gen. Jack Gremillion, who entered the case to defend the state laws, said he preferred to make no comment until he had read the decisions.

Rules Bus, Park Segregation Illegal

In a sweeping, double barreled decision Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright ruled Wednesday that city and state laws calling for segregation of the races in city parks, streetcars and buses in New Orleans are unconstitutional.

Judge Wright said he will issue permannent injunction to stop enforcement of the laws.

In making the ruling Judge Wright said "It is not the court's view that in our civilization it is necessary to have incidents to have people arrested, to have their rights declared."

He did not say when the injunctions would be issued.

Attorneys representing the city of New Orleans say they will appeal the decision.

One case involved the use of City Park facilities by Negroes. The other dealt with segregated bus and streetcar seating.

The City Park case came up whem William P. Schuler, Louisiana Assistant Attorney General, asked for dismissal of the suit. The state intervened several weeks ago.

Judge Wright said the Law involved in the City Park case had already been decided by previous litigation.

He also upheld the recent decision directing the Orleans Parish school Board to halt segregation with all deliberate speed.

The bus and street car case was before the Federal Court on a motion for a summary judgment filed by Attorney A. P. Tureaud.

City attorney Alvin Liska said the Negroes represented in the case have never been required to sit behind segregation signs on city transportation vehicles.

Liska added, neither the mayor nor the police superintendent have given orders to arrest plaintiffs for not sitting behind segregation signs.

However, Judge Wright held that incidents are not needed for the court to declare the rights of the people.

Upon learning of the decision Negro leaders advised that the decision be taken calmly in stride, with restraint and dignity. Many were of the opinion that there was nothing to be excited about inasmuch as the law of the land was upheld; the concern would have been had not the law been upheld.

Pending final court action, N. O. P. S. I. said bus seating would remain the same.

Transit Segregation Ended in New Orleans With New Ruling

NEW ORLEANS, La.—(ANP)—A federal district judge here Wednesday told the City of New Orleans and the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., that they could no longer practice segregation in seating facilities on street cars and buses in this city.

In a ruling that was as historic as it was sudden, Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright ordered an end to racial segregation on public transportation here and issued a permanent injunction against the mayor of this city, the police superintendent and the new Orleans Public Service, Inc. In doing so, the jurist declared all state laws requiring segregation in public transportation unconstitutional.

The city immediately declared it would appeal the action to the Fifth Circuit court of Appeals. City Atty. Alvin J. Liska said Judge Wright told him the injunction would not be effective immediately, but will be stayed until all appeals are exhausted.

Judge Wright said he would issue permanent injunctions to halt enforcement of present segregation laws. He did not disclose when he would issue the restraining orders.

The president of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., George S. Dinwiddie said the practice of segregated seating would be continued until the judgment is final. NOPSI operates the street cars and buses in this city.

Judge Wright also ruled that segregation in city parks here is unconstitutional and must be ended.

The bus and street car case was brought before the court by NAACP attorney A. P. Tureaud.

Judge Wright stated "this matter is ripe for decision. All state statutes requiring segregation on public transportation facilities in New Orleans, particularly the transportation facilities of New Orleans Public Service, Inc., are unconstitutional."

Attorney Louis B. Porterie of the City Park board said he will appeal the case involving the death of segregation in City Park.

Two Arrested In La. Trolley Fight

NEW ORLEANS—(ENS) — A Negro sailor and a White man were arrested Thursday for fighting over segregation seating arrangements in a New Orleans street car.

Police said the fight broke out when a motorman moved a sign separating whites from Negroes in front of William Paul Brandon, 60, white, and Yoeman third class James J. Griffin, 45-year-old Negro attempted to sit beside Brandon.

Both men were booked on disturbing of the peace charges, police said.

Bus Segregation Tested By 5 Colored Ministers

SHREVEPORT, La., June 15 (AP). — Five colored ministers, reading from their Bibles, rode in the white section of a bus today as it drove through a fashionable district of this segregated city in the Deep South.

Chief of Police Harvey L. Teasley, notified in advance that the ministers would board the bus this morning, made no attempt to arrest them. Louisiana laws require separate seats for whites and Negroes on public buses.

After the ride, however, Chief Teasley said all other Negroes attempting to follow the lead of the ministers would be arrested if they sat in the white section of a city bus.

White Women on Trip

Three white women sat next to the ministers. Two of them took seats there because no other seats were available. But one unidentified young woman boarded the bus, noticed other empty seats and then sat down next to the Rev. A. L. Scott, leader of the Negroes.

The woman rode for 10 minutes until she reached her destination, then departed.

Three other white persons refused to board the bus. About 20 to 25 white men and women clogged the aisles, refusing to sit in empty seats surrounding the ministers.

H. C. Spence, driver of the bus, made no attempt to escort the Negroes to the rear section, normally reserved for members of their race.

At his first opportunity, the driver phoned the Shreveport Transit Co. headquarters and was told to let the ministers sit in front.

Negroes Take Usual Seats

All other Negroes boarding the bus moved quickly to the back and took their regularly designated seats during the 45-minute ride.

The Rev. Scott described himself as a member of the National Association of the Advancement of Colored People and the United Christian Movemen, a pro-integration organization in Shreveport.

"This is just the beginning of integration in Shreveport," said the Rev. Scott.

5 clerics ride Shreveport bus

SHREVEPORT, La.,—Five colored ministers, rode in the white section of a public bus Friday in what they called the "beginning of integration" in this Deep South city.

Harvey L. Teasley, chief of police, informed of the ministers' plan in advance, made no arrests. He said he tried but arrived at the bus stop too late.

The 45-minute ride through a fashionable district of Shreveport produced a few rough words but no violence. The segregated city is the second largest in Louisiana.

Three white women sat next to the pastors at various times during the ride. Two of them sat near the minsters because no other seats were available.

But the third, an unidentified young woman, boarded the bus at a time when other seats were available in the white section. She looked at the empty seats and then sat by the Rev. A. L. Scott, spokesman for the ministers.

The woman rode for ten minutes and, without saying a word, left the bus when she reached her destination.

Most other white persons in the bus clogged the aisles rather than sit near the ministers. All other colored passengers took their regular seats in the back as required by law.

One woman and a man, both white, refused to board the bus. Another man stepped into the bus, paid his fare, saw the preachers and then demanded to be let out. Driver H. C. Spence stopped the bus in a half block and the man left.

At the first chance, Spence rushed out of the bus to telephone headquarters of the Shreveport Transit Company. Officials told him to make no attempt at escorting the ministers to the rear.

As another bus passed the bus with the ministers a driver shouted at Spence:

"I've got a shotgun if you need it."

Spence did not reply.

The ride was the first organized attempt by colored people

Wright refuses new trial in New Orleans bus case

NEW ORLEANS—Judge J. Skelly Wright of the U.S. District Court last week said "no" to the City of New Orleans in its attempt to get a new trial and hearing of his recent ruling outlawing segregation on buses and street cars here.

Following his ruling that bus and street car segregation laws were unconstitutional, Judge Wright issued an injunction prohibiting segregated seating. He said, however, the injunction wouldn't become effective until the city exhausted all appeals.

The judge also turned down a request of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., operators of the system, to extend the injunction to St. Bernard and Jefferson Parishes.

to sit next to whites on Louisiana busses.

Colored people in New Orleans, however, have filed a court suit attacking the state laws in view of the recent United States Supreme Court decision throwing out Alabama's bus segregation laws.

It's All So Simple

The ride of five Bible-carrying ministers on the front seats of city buses in Shreveport was spectacular, but it hardly made sense.

Such antics may have been necessary to secure grounds for a test case before November 13, 1956.

But on that date the Supreme Court in its Montgomery decision ruled that laws requiring segregation of passengers on city transit systems were unconstitutional and could not be legally enforced.

Of even more recent date and nearer home, U.S. District Judge Skelly Wright, sitting at New Orleans, only last month declared Louisiana's bus segregation laws unconstitutional and only awaits an appeal for issuing an injunction.

Which made the bus-riding spectacle of Shreveport's ministers all the more puzzling.

With the law clearly on their side, all these ministers had to do was to have raised some money, hired a lawyer, and asked a Federal judge to order the police and transit company to desist from trying to illegally enforce an unconstitutional law.

It's that simple for Shreveport and any other Southern community which still clings to bus segregation.

Reviews History Of Bus Segregation

New Orleans, La.
P. 3

"Segregated passenger transportation in New Olreans and in Louisiana during ante bellum days was largely a matter pertaining to Negroes who were free, since it was sometime difficult to apply such a rule to one's own slaves and it was applied to white immigrants only when they did not have money enough to pay for first-class fares."

So stated Poet Marcus Christian during a radio interview by Moderator O. C. W. Taylor on WNOE Forum last Sunday morning.

Citing background in his discussion of the bus integration situation, Mr. Christian explained: "In the old mule-car days, New Orleans Negroes had a special car set aside for their use...one with a huge star painted on both sides. Yet, even in those days, segregation proved to be an inconvenience to both races. Negroes were forced to let several cars pass by before they could board a star car going to the same destination as the others. Whites, in a hurry to get somewhere, were not supposed to ride on cars set apart for Negroes.

"The situation soon resolved itself into one in which Negroes began to ride on "white" cars and many seats on star-cars were filled indiscriminately by whites. This situation was further aggravated by war, when Negro officers insisted upon riding on any cars. P. B. S. Pinchback was one of these who would tie up whole blocks of cars while he argued it out with the conductor. Then, shortly after the war, a New Orleans Negro brought a test case into court and the law was repealed."

"A year after the law was repealed," he continued in response to a question, "Negroes came into some political power and with the meeting of the Constitutional Convention of 1867-68, they voted with many liberal white Northerners and Southerners to enact laws prohibiting all forms of racial discrimination. This prevailed until about 1890, when the Democrats became firmly entrenched.

Then followed a re-enactment of all racial laws which the Constitution of 1867-68 had abolished. One of these, the separate car railroad law, was soon followed by segregated seating on the city street cars. For several years Negroes marshalled their forces and fought all of these discriminatory measures, but the spirit of the times was against them. The country had swung back to pre-Civil War conservatism and their bitter, final defeat was the notorious decision of Plessy vs. Ferguson - a Louisiana case. The ruling was thereafter used extensively in every field of endeavor to relegate Negroes to second-class citizenship."

Asked what Negroes have been doing to break the old Plessy vs. Ferguson deadlock, the noted writer declared that the "first and most notable break came when, following suit by Negroes, the U. S. Supreme Court reversed itself in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson, in 1954, claiming that this ruling was no longer tenable as the law of the land. Following this decision in regard to public schools, came others, hammering against a steadily-encroaching philosophy which had its seat in the Old South. The latest decision was the bus transportation ruling of Nov. 13, 1956."

He pointed out the significance of non-violence protest bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala. and its influence and spread to other Southern cities seeking integrated bus operations. Christian noted that the bus ruling will not become a dead letter in cities where Negroes have long struggled against the emasculating defeat suffered in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson.

Discussing the picture in regards to actual compliance with the bus decision, Christian said: It is "not a very encouraging one. Most of the Southern law enforcement authorities seem to take the stand that the decision applied only to Montgomery, and, at most, only to that city and the state of Alabama...Southern whites, the segregationist ones, seem to think that the Negro, given his pearl of greater freedom, will do absolutely nothing to claim it as his own."

Ministers Talk With Officials

New Orleans, La.

The New Orleans Ministerial Alliance met here Wednesday at 11 A.M. with city bus officials in what was believed to be a move to bring about a peaceful solution to compliance with the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling calling for an end to segregated seating arrangements aboard buses.

The delegation headed by the Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., president, included the Reverends T. W. Raphael, chairman, T. N. Collins, John B. Morris, Scott Chinn, T. W. Gaines, Dave A. Dennis, and Nicholas Hood, secretary.

Details of the discussion were not immediately known. The committee is scheduled to meet in a special session with the Alliance body at 1 P.M. today for a report and further discussion. It was learned that a statement would be issued following the meeting.

The action taken here today came on the heels of similar movements presently underway in other southern cities which stubbornly refuse to sanction the desegregation order. The first action taken in Louisiana began at Baton Rouge under the guidance of the Rev. T. J. Jemison, and from all indications may spread to other points throughout the state before the end of the year.

Local citizens hailed the move as a step forward for many had been led to believe that the backbone of the community leadership had remained silent far too long.

Weekly
Sat. 1-19-57

It was learned that many have long been tired of being "fathered" like a child and paying the same price, and are mainly interested in only being able to sit where there is a vacancy whether it be front, middle or rear.

New Orleans, La.

From all indications, it appears that Negro citizens are anxiously awaiting the "words" of the Alliance for, it is expected, these "words" will govern the pattern of operation in the famed Mardi Gras City for the next several months of the year.

Negro Clergyman, Doctor Hit At Segregation

OFFICIALS TO DEFEND IT

P. 15

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 1.—A clergyman and a doctor, both Negro, filed suit in United States District Court Friday, demanding a halt to bus segregation in New Orleans, the Deep South's largest city.

The suit also called for the nullification of all Louisiana's bus segregation laws.

Legal officers of both city and state planned to fight the suit.

Negro leaders indicated a similar suit would be filed in Baton Rouge. They met Friday afternoon to plan thein action.

Calls For Special Court

The New Orleans petition called for formation of a three-man Federal Court to judge the issue. Such courts are requested in cases involving the United States Constitution.

The argument of attorney A. P. Tureaud, who represented the suit, was that a recent United States Supreme Court decision made all bus segregation illegal. That decision concerned Montgomery.

The petition said when Negroes asked New Orleans Public Service, operators of the buses, to halt segregation last Jan. 9, they were told by George Dinwiddie, president of the company:

"The applicable laws of Louisiana have not been reviewed by the United States Supreme Court and must, therefore, be complied with."

Mr. Dinwiddie said the Supreme Court decision had affected only Alabama laws.

The suit was filed in the names of the Rev. A. L. Davis Jr., president of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, and Dr. William R. Adams. Tureaud, their attorney, was Louisiana counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People before its activities were banned under an old state law once used to wipe out the Ku Klux Klan.

Mayor is Defendant

Named as defendants were Mayor deLesseps Morrison, the city councilmen, the police superintendent, the director of public utilities and Mr. Dinwiddie.

In Baton Rouge, Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion was unavailable for comment. But earlier Friday, Mr. Gremillion had said if such a suit were filed, "I would enter into it since the constitutionality of a state law would be challenged. We will defend the state law with all possible legal means if such a suit is filed."

Henry Curtis, city attorney in New Orleans, said he would plan a defense as soon as he studied details of the suit. He added he would welcome the help of Mr. Gremillion.

Mr. Morrison and Mr. Dinwiddie were reported out of town and unavailable for comment.

Under Louisiana law, persons who break segregation barriers on buses may be fined $25 and sentenced to 30 days in jail. Bus drivers who help them break the segregation lines also are subject to the fines and jail terms.

White Citizens Urge Transit Co. To Respect Court Ruling

Worked p. 3 Birmingham, Ala.

BY HARRY TRIMBORN

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — A group of white clergymen Tuesday urged New Orleans City and Transit officials to "honor the supreme law of the land" by ending segregation on buses.

In reference to the U. S. Supreme Court's historic decision which struck down segregation on Montgomery, Ala., City buses, the group presented a petition to the officials which said:

"A normal respect for the orderly progress of life under law should, we believe, impel the authorities in any community to honor the supreme law of the land and seek to implement it."

After presenting the petition, which contained the signatures of 125 persons, most of whom are white, to city transit president George S. Dinwiddie, the transit official told the group that his agency will have to comply with Louisiana segregation laws.

The Clergymen, with the Rev. C. H. Snelling, Jr., Methodist chaplain at Tulane University acting as their spokesman, also presented the petition to Robert Wall, executive assistant to the mayor of New Orleans. Wall said that "No Action" would be taken on the petition at this time and added that it would be treated like a "Routine request made by a group of interested citizens."

Previously, city officials maintained that they, too, must abide by the state segregation laws.

The petition said it recognized that the Montgomery decision was not applicable in Louisiana -- a point repreately stressed by transit authorities -- but added that bus desegregation in New Orleans "will surely come."

The statement said:

"To ignore or attempt to circumvent what must come would give strength to lawlessness and make the eventual outcome for from peaceful.

We therefore urge our local authorities not to wait for a court order, but rather to initiate a positive program of compliance with what eventually must be considered a law of the United States.

Dinwiddie's statement was identical to one made last Jan. 9 to an all-Negro group which initiated a move to desegregate the city's buses.

Subsequently, the Negro group filed a suit in New Orleans federal court seeking a declaratory judgement and injunction against the state race laws in view of the Montgomery decision. No date as yet has been set for the case.

'Most Negroes Indifferent,' Says Baton Rouge Mayor

'Minority Pushing Bus Issue to Front'

New Orleans, La.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 27 (AP)—Mayor-President Jack Christian says he believes a majority of Baton Rouge Negroes have no feeling one way or other about attempts to end bus segregation here.

"Unfortunately," he told the Baton Rouge White Citizens Council Tuesday, "there is a small minority group pushing to bring the issue of bus integration here to the front."

The capital city would have another bus boycott if the minority had its way, Christian said.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison heads the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, which filed a federal lawsuit a few weeks ago attacking city and state bus seating laws.

It was the second lawsuit of its kind in Louisiana. The first attack was filed in New Orleans.

Christian said he feels a majority of Baton Rouge Negroes "would not desire to have a change in their way of living here.

"The minority is stirring up things," he said, "and doing a lot of flag waving in an effort to influence the larger group to join them in their effort. They are trying to bring about something by revolution."

Baton Rouge does not have the racial problem affecting some communities, he said, because this city has "older, Southern Negroes."

Negro, White Clerics Ask Bus Integration

Pittsburgh Pa.

NEW ORLEANS — An interracial delegation of four prominent clergymen last week called upon President George S. Dinwiddie of New Orleans Public Service and presented a petition asking for a positive program of bus desegregation. The statement stressed restraint, human understanding and good-will.

There were 125 signatures, white and Negro, including 41 clergymen. A copy was also presented to Robert E. Wall, executive assistant to Mayor de Lesseps S. Morrison.

In the delegation were Rev. Clarence H. Snelling Jr., Methodist chaplain at Tulane University; Rev. Thomas C. Aycock Jr., pastor of St. Augustine's Episcopal Church; Rev. Eugene P. McManus, S.S.J., faculty member at St. Augustine's High School (Catholic), and Rev. Samuel L. Gandy, D.D., chaplain at Dillard University. They presented the petition as individuals and not as representatives of their particular institutions.

Denies Motion For New Transit Trial

Weekly Sat. 6-22-57

New Orleans, La.

Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright last Wednesday denied motions by the city of New Orleans for a new trial and a rehearing in the bus and street car segregation case.

Last month Judge Wright ruled that city and state laws calling for segregation of races on streetcars and buses in New Orleans was unconstitutional.

He issued an injunction restraining the enforcement of laws requiring it.

The case last month was presented before the Federal Court on a motion for a summary judgment filed by attorney A.P. Tureaud.

Judge Wright stipulated that his injunction should not take effect until all appeals have been exhausted.

Judge Wright, before ruling on the motions, observed that the New Orleans Public Service Inc., had asked that the injunction be extended to cover St. Bernard and Jefferson parishes since the company operates in the two parishes as well as in Orleans.

He asserted that he could not do this, but added that he will amend the decree specifically limiting the scope of the injunction to Orleans Parish.

Negro leaders were pleased with Judge Wright's denial of a new trial, and felt assured that all appeals by the city of New Orleans to maintain a delayed block would fail.

Pending final court action, bus seating in New Orleans will remain the same.

Shreveport clerics defy bus jim crow

Afro-American Sat. 6-29-57

Baltimore, Md.

SHREVEPORT, La. (ANP) —Numerous white persons here last week were stunned to see five colored ministers sitting in the section a bus reserved for whites. The clerics initiated what they called "the beginning of integration" in this city.

For 45-minutes the ministers rode through a fashionable district in this city reading their bibles as whites jammed the aisles standing up rather than taking seats next to them.

No arrests were made even though Police Chief Harvey L. Teasley reportedly knew of the incident in advance.

* * *

THREE WHITE women took seats, at various times during the ride, next to the ministers. The third woman deliberately took a seat to a colored minister even though other seats were available in the white section.

The Rev. A. L. Scott, a spokesman for the group, said the third woman looked at the empty seats and then took a seat with him.

A white man and a white woman refused to board the bus. Another man stepped into the bus, saw the ministers sitting in front and demanded to be let out of the vehicle. He was accommodated.

H. S. SPENCE, the bus driver, stopped the vehicle and called the Shreveport Transit Co. He was reportedly told to make no attempt to force the ministers to the rear.

The Rev. Mr. Scott, who is a NAACP member and also is affiliated in the United Christian Movement, a Shreveport anti-segregation group here, said other colored people would follow the ministers in defying segregation laws on the buses.

Hearing Monday On Baton Rouge Bus Case

BATON ROUGE, Oct. 10.—(UP)—A hearing will be held Monday in federal court here on a motion to dismiss a suit aimed at integration of public buses in Baton Rouge. Federal Judge Herbert Christenberry will preside at the session.

Attorneys said the motion for dismissal was based on a plea that issues involved in the suit were decided earlier in a similar case. The defense petition asked that the case be tried by jury in a state court instead of a Federal court.

Baton Rouge city officials contested the suit on the grounds the Louisiana attorney general was not named a defendant and that some Baton Rouge officials were not properly named.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, Baton Rouge Negro minister, filed the suit to desegregate the buses.

Three other cases to be heard by Judge Christenberry concern desegregation of schools in Louisiana. A. P. Tureaud, a New Orleans Negro attorney, filed the suits against Louisiana State University, East Baton Rouge Parish public schools and five state trade schools.

Shreveport Negro Arrested On Bus

Advocate

SHREVEPORT, La., Aug. 22 (AP) —Frances Sullivan, 24-year-old Negro woman, was arrested today on a charge of violating state bus segregation laws. She was freed on $25 bond.

Trolley operator John B. Rich told officers she took a seat in front of the trolley and declined to move to the rear when asked.

She was charged under a state law providing that the operator of a public conveyance shall assign persons to seats in accordance with their race.

Officers said she told them she knew state law requires separate sections for white and Negro passengers on trolleys.

Conviction on the charge carries a $25 fine or 30 days in jail or both.

Negro Dismissed On Riding Charge

SHREVEPORT, La., Aug. 26. —(UP)—A city judge Monday dismissed a charge against a Negro woman who admitted she rode in the white section of a city bus.

City Judge G. Randall Whitmeyer freed Frances Sullivan after her lawyer announced he planned to challenge the constitutionality of a state statute. The statute requires a bus driver to assign seats on the basis of color.

He said by dismissing the case, defense lawyers could not make a "mountain out of a mole hill." He said he wanted to see no prolonged city transportation disputes such as occurred in Montgomery, Ala., and Tallahassee, Fla.

WOMAN IS HELD ON BUS CHARGE

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

SHREVEPORT, La., Aug. 22 —Frances Sullivan, 24, Negro woman, was arrested here about 10:35 a. m. Thursday and charged with violating the state's segregation laws.

The woman, according to reports at the police station, boarded a Veterans Administration bus in downtown Shreveport and took a seat at the front of the vehicle. She was asked by trolley operator John B. Rich to move back to the Negro section but declined to do so.

Rich telephoned police, but by the time officers C. L. Barron and W. D. Bamberg arrived at the scene the woman was leaving the trolley at the side exit.

She was placed under arrest and taken to the police station where she was booked on a charge of violating Louisiana revised statute 45.195 which provides that the operator of a public conveyance assign persons to seats in accordance with their race. She was released on a $25 bond.

The officers reported that they asked the woman if she was familiar with Louisiana's law regarding separate sections for white and Negro persons on trolleys and she replied that she was.

Conviction of the charge carries a fine of $25 or 30 days in jail or both at the descretion of the court.

This is the first instance of a Negro being arrested for refusing to move to the Negro section when asked to do so by the operator in charge. Several months ago five Negro ministers boarded a local trolley and seated themselves in the white section and rode to the end of the line before returning to the business district. They were not arrested inasmuch as they left the trolley when police arrived.

La. Minister Vows Finish Fight Against Bus Bias

Defender Chicago, Ill. 1-3

Sat. 1-19-57

By HARRY TRIMBORN

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS) — "It will take time and understanding to change the social customs of our community."

So believes the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Negro Baptist minister, who as president of the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, plans to call upon a federal court to declare segregation of Baton Rouge city buses illegal.

For the 37-year-old stocky, fast-talking clergyman, the current drive of his group's attempt to remove racial barriers on the buses is but the first step in an avowed aim to seek integration in all walks of life.

LED BOYCOTT

However, Jemison, who led a short, but successful Negro boycott of Baton Rouge buses in 1953, believes in making haste slowly.

"We are all Southerners," he said in his clipped, precise manner, "and we know that it will take time and patience to change the habits of the people. You cannot legislate good feeling."

But in order to hasten the change, the minister and his group are relying on jurisprudence, as contained in the U. S. Supreme Court decision which brought about the end of racial segregation on Montgomery, Ala., city buses and the successful conclusion of the famous year-long bus boycott there.

PEACEFUL MOVE

Jemison said the Baton Rouge Christian movement seeks a "peaceful and orderly" end to segregation on Baton Rouge buses.

To the suggestion that the Supreme Court decision is "the law of the land," Jemison said his supporters received forceful declarations from city and state officials that Louisiana segregation laws would be upheld.

Jemison is confident a federal court will follow the Montgomery decision and apply it to Baton Rouge.

Jemison, a native of Selma, Ala., who holds degrees from Alabama State Teachers college at Montgomery and Virginia Union university at Richmond, has long heard talk of an end to segregation, "someday."

NAACP MEMBER

His minister father, once president of the National Baptist convention, was a life-member of the NAACP. So was his mother.

"I will be a member too, as soon as I can get the required $500 needed," he said.

The NAACP, he feels, has done much to bring about federal court decisions to improve the Negro's status.

But the minister emphasized that no court decision could finally settle the southern dispute over segregation. In today's climate, Jemison — leading a fight for integration on buses — would not want his children to attend integrated schools.

"My two girls (eight and ten) say they don't want to go to an integrated school because they feel the white children would be mean to them," he said, adding: "At present, I personally don't want to see them attend an integrated school because of their fears."

FOR INTEGRATION

He emphasized that he is not against school integration, "but it is a question of free choice — a child should be allowed to attend the school of his choice, whether white or Negro."

Jemisonthinks the final answer to the South's current problems over segregation can be found in the region's children, however. He said:

"We should start desegregating those activities and facilities which have the greatest effect on children, such as school and recreational facilities.

"After all, they are the new generation and are most receptive to the teaching of tolerance. We adults are too steeped in our prejudices to profit much from integration."

Rev. T. Jemison, who two years ago led a successful boycott of Baton Rouge city buses, was among the petitioners.

Other petitioners were the Revs. Edward Brown and Felton Hitthens; and three doctors, Dupuy Anderson, Curtis Gilliam and Lewis James.

Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion immediately issued a statement saying he was convinced that the present city ordinances, which require Negroes to sit from the rear to the front and separated from white passengers, is "constitutional and will be found so."

Negroes To Seek Segregation Ban In Baton Rouge

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 3 (AP) —A Negro leader said today his group would go into federal court next week to seek a ruling ending Baton Rouge bus segregation.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, head of the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, newly formed pro-integration group, said he expected his group would meet this afternoon with a special city council committee named to deal with bus segregation.

Sat. 1-4-57

"We expect to go into court for a declaratory judgment just as soon as we get the preliminary steps out of the way," said Jemison, indicating he didn't expect the city to announce any change in its policy of enforcing a city segregation ordinance.

FED COURT PETITIONED ON BUSES

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS) — Six Baton Rouge Negroes — three ministers and three physicians — Monday petitioned for a Federal court judgment declaring segregated bus seating unconstitutional.

The petition, based on the Federal constitution and decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court, asked for a declaratory judgment on the constitutionality of the city's segregated bus seating ordinance and for a temporary injunction restraining enforcement of the ordinance.

This suit follows a similar filing in New Orleans last week.

Baton Rouge Vows Keep Segregation

Defender P. 3

Chicago, Ill.

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS) — Baton Rouge's mayor told Negroes Friday that he will continue to enforce bus segregation in the city.

At an evening conference between city officials, and the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, representing city Negroes, Mayor Jack Christian told the group that regardless of "other decisions," the city expected the Negroes to comply with its segregation ordinance.

Sat. 1-12-57

SEEK JUDGMENT

The integration group said after the meeting that it would seek a court judgement to declare existing city ordinances invalid.

In Montgomery, where Negro and city commission officials met Friday, reports of progress were issued.

Rev. Martin Luther King, one of the integration leaders, said there had been a discussion of "various issues, but not one in particular."

Montgomery Mayor W. A. Gayle, speaking for the commission, declined any comment except to say that the meeting had been called for by the Negro delegation.

The door was left open, however, to end the night bus curfew, which was scheduled to continue until Jan. 8.

ment, said, "We expect to go into court for a declaratory judgment just as soon as we get the preliminary steps out of the way."

Preliminary steps, he indicated, included a meeting with the special city council committee named to deal with the bus segregation question and the attorney general.

Earlier, Jemison had said his group would violate the city bus segregation ordinance, then notify police to set up a test case.

Now, he said, the plan was to go directly into federal district court for a declaratory judgment based on the supreme court ruling that knocked out bus segregation in a case involving Montgomery, Ala.

Jemison said the group planned only court action, no boycott or other public demonstrations.

Nine members of the movement were named in the list filed Monday with the secretary of state. The group primarily consists of the steering committee that headed a bus boycott several years ago.

In 1953, Negroes protested segregation regulations and organized their own car pools as part of a bus boycott.

They complained Negroes often had to stand while seats in the white section were empty.

The boycott ended when the city council adopted the existing bus seating ordinance. It requires Negro seating from the rear and white seating from the front, but bans white passengers from using the long rear seat and bans Negroes from using two front seats facing the aisle.

laws requiring separate seating for the races.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, head of the new Baton Rouge Christian movement, a pro-integration unit, said immediately after the conference with Gremillion his group intends to go ahead next week with a federal lawsuit forcing a showdown.

The Negro leaders seek a federal declaratory judgement to render the state and city segregated seating laws unconstitutional.

City officials told the same Negro group yesterday city and state laws will be enforced "Until declared invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction."

The Negroes said they were appealing to the state's chief legal officer in a hope Louisiana would avoid "the mistakes in Alabama and Florida." They urged a "harmonious, Christian solution."

said "at this time, our people are fleeing Mississippi, just as the Hungarians did from brutality, in an effort to avoid violence."

Gremilllion maintained that the Montgomery decision was not applicable to Louisiana. He said:

* * *

"IT IS immaterial to this office what the U. S. Supreme Court has said about segregation laws in other states and I am going to advise every district attorney in the state to that effect until and if our laws are declared unconstitutional — and that we will fight against it most vigorously."

The attorney general's comments echoed those of Baton Rouge city officials who met

He said America "must not continue to throw bread to Hungarians and bombs at American Negroes."

He sympathized with the Hungarians, but said America must face "the problem of equal rights for all citizens."

New Orleans, La.

An attempt on the part of the City of New Orleans and the State of Louisiana to have dismissed the bus segregation suit brought against the New Orleans Public Service by Rev A. L. Davis, Jr. and Dr. W. R. Adams failed on last Wednesday in Federal Court.

The City asked Judge Wright Attorneys Israel Augustine, Jr., Earl J. Amedee, Louis Berry, Robert Collins, Alvin Jones, Revius Ortique and A. M. Trudeau, Jr. all of whom were present.

Hearing on the motion for judgment on the pleadings, filed on behalf of Rev. Davis and Dr. Adams was postponed when Atty Tureaud informed the Court that only New Orleans Public Service and George S. Dinwiddie, its president, filed "responsive pleadings."

It was explained that this motion, if granted, would have avoided further trial of the case on the merits. As it now stands, the mayor and police superintendent will have to file answers to the suit within 20 days.

Shuttlesworth says race laws keeping 'good officials bad'

News P. 2

Birmingham, Ala.

BATON ROUGE, La., Feb. 16—(AP)—A Negro minister from Birmingham, spurring the move for integration on city buses, said "segregation laws are keeping good public officials from being good."

Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Birmingham Christian Movement for Human Rights, spoke Friday night at a meeting sponsored by the Baton Rouge Christian Movement.

"Segregation and the tradition of segregation is legally dead," he said. "The American Negro is not and cannot ever again be satisfied with less than anything else."

Shuttlesworth, whose home was bombed in December, told some 200 Negroes "what we need to do is to move away the legal barriers.

"The politicians and Citizens Councils are confusing the good white people. The few do all the bad. . . . But it is the good white people who still are responsible, but they do not speak out."

to dismiss the case against members of the Commission Council, Mayor Morrison, Paul Ristroph, director of public utilities, and Provosty Dayries, superintendent of police. The motion was granted only as to the Commission Councilmen and Paul Ristroph, but was denied as to all others.

A crowded courtroom heard arguments on the dismissal, with both the City Attorney and the Attorney General participating through their assistants Alvin J. Liska and William Shuler. In rapid succession Judge Wright advised the City that he would dismiss the suit only as against the Commission Council and Paul Ristroph, director of utilities, but maintained the suit against all others, and held also that the law passed by the Louisiana legislature requiring permission of the state to sue was not applicable to the case before him.

Argument on behalf of Rev. Davis and Dr. Adams was made by A. P. Tureaud. He was assisted at the argument by

Judge Wright Signs Orders Ending Bus, City Park Bias

Times-Picayune New Orleans La. Sat. 6-1-57

On Wednesday morning in Federal District Court, Judge J. Skelly Wright signed orders permanently stopping enforcement of all city and state laws calling for segregation in City Park and on buses and streetcars in New Orleans.

The permanent injunctions would become effective said Judge Wright only after all appeals are exhausted by legal counsel representing the city in both suits.

The signing of the permanent injunctions was more or less expected inasmuch as Judge Wright had ruled on May 15 that all city and state laws requiring segregation in City Park and on buses and streetcars was unconstitutional. He had further indicated that he would sign the permanent injunctions.

The fact that City attorneys in both cases will appeal means that the injunctions will not become effective for quite a while yet. The granting of time to exhaust appeals in the two cases is routine and is simply a judicial courtesy. The City, through its attorneys, does not have to prolong the issue through exhaustive appeals because it is quite clear the injunctions are going to stand. Whether the City goes through with its appeals depends on the character and courage of the Mayor and City Council.

Negro Shot In Louisiana Bus Melee

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 1-3-57

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 2 (UP)—A policeman shot a Negro who allegedly hurled two segregation screens from a crowded bus and threatened to stab the driver today. Meanwhile, the South's bus seating troubles appeared likely to spread to two other cities, making six in all.

There was no bus service at all in one affected city, Tallahassee, Fla., where Gov. LeRoy Collins used his emergency powers to suspend runs to prevent violence.

In Montgomery, Ala., where the turbulence all began two weeks ago when the U.S. Supreme Court ordered an end to segregated seating, a curfew on night bus operations was extended until Jan. 8.

FORMED PLANS

Negroes in Tuscaloosa and Mobile, Ala. mapped plans for riding the buses on an integrated basis.

There were conflicting reports as to just what part the racial seating incident played in the New Orleans shooting which sent Frank Jones, 24, to the hospital with a critical wound.

Jones was shot through the spine. He was booked on charges of attempted murder of two officers and with attempted robbery of the bus driver, Loyd Alexander, 56.

Police said Patrolman Frank Lovoi shot Jones after the Negro threatened Alexander with a knife and robbed him of his coin changer.

SIGNS REPORTED GONE

The disturbance began in the rear of the bus, Alexander said, when a passenger boarded the bus and reported someone had thrown out the signs designating which sections each race is to occupy.

Alexander, driver of a bus on the Tulane-Galvez line, said he told Jones to "put those signs back in their place" but the Negro instead whipped out a knife "and held it at my throat."

Lovoi and Patrolman Lawrence Bayer were riding on a following bus when they noticed the disturbance on Alexander's bus. They boarded the first bus and Lovoi said the Negro slashed at Bayer with a four-inch knife.

Lovoi said he hit the Negro on the head with his revolver but Jones "kept on fighting," then abruptly tried to flee the bus. It was then he fired at him, the officer said.

Bus Leader Urges Seven Point Code

Daily World Wed. 2-13-57 Atlanta, Ga.

NEW ORLEANS, -- (INS)-- Bus protest leader in New Orlean, who filed suit to desegregate the city's buses, has urged members of his race to adopt a seven-point code of behavior while awaiting the outcome of the court action.

The Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., who is named as plantiff in a Federal Court suit seeking a declaratory judgement on Louisiana's bus segregation laws, outlined the code in a pamphlet entitled "A New Use For Old Wood."

The Rev. Davis' suggestions are:

1. Pray for guidance and commit yourself to keep non-violence in word and action, observing the ordinary rules of courtesy and good behavior.

2. If any person is being molested, do not arise to go to his defense but pray for the oppressor and use moral and spiritual force to carry on the struggle for justice.

3. The bus driver is the man in charge of the bus. Ask his aid and report any serious incidents to him The report to one of our leaders immediately. Give date, time, place and names of persons involved.

4. Be courteous. Avoid loud talk. Be sure you are neat and clean at all times. Be friendly; Proud but not arrogant; be happy but not loud.

5. Do not be drawn into arguments about segregation, desegregation or integration. In case of accident, talk as little as possible and always in a quiet tone.

6. If cursed, do not curse back. If struck, do not strike back, but show love and good will at all times.

7. Remember to pray especially for those who would persecute anyone. Romans 12:21: "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good."

judgement on the state's segregation laws and ask for an injunction halting separation of the races on both cities' public carriers. 8he plaintiffs asked for a three-judge court to make the rulings.

The suits charge that segregation on public carriers is a violation of the equal protection and due process of law clauses of the 14th Amendment in the U. S. Constitution.

Plaintiffs in the New Orleans suit are the Rev. A. L. Davis, head of the New Orleans inter-denominational alliance, and Dr. W. L. Davis, Negro physician, who heads the New Orleans Improvement Association.

The Rev. T. J. Jemison, leader of the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, is the plaintiff named in the suit filed in the Louisiana Capitol.

Officials in both cities have told Negro leaders seeking an end to bus segregation in view of the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing racial separation on Montgomery, Ala., carriers, that they must obey the state racial laws.

The officials maintain that the Montgomery decision is of no effect in Louisiana and that the state's segregation laws would remain in

About 60 leaders from 10 Southern states are expected, including Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

All sessions will be closed to the press. The final session however, will be followed by a press conference.

The meeting was called by Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth of Birmingham after the President turned down an appeal to speak in the South. The appeal had been drafted by Negro leaders in an Atlanta conference.

In calling the New Orleans meeting, Rev. Shuttlesworth, whose home and church have been wrecked by dynamite, said:

"At a time when our churches and homes are being bombed, when the darkness of each night brings physical danger to our people, President Eisenhower has decided not to come South and put the moral weight of his office against the breakdown of law and order."

The Negro minister is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, founded after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was ordered to halt operations in Alabama.

The New Orleans sessions are being held at the New Zion Baptist Church.

Suit Attacks Biased New Orleans Bus Laws

Sat. 2-2-57 Atlanta, Ga.

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — Negro leaders in New Orleans Friday filed suit in Federal court in an attempt to tear down Louisiana's bus segregation laws while a similar action in Baton Rouge was stopped due to a last minute hitch.

The suit filed in the first District Court in New Orleans charges Mayor Delesseps S. Morrison, the City Council, transportation and other officials of maintaining bus segregation in violation of U. S. Supreme Court rulings.

A. P. Tureaud, attorney for the New Orleans Negroes said that a similar suit was filed in the Baton Rouge division of the same court. But Negro leaders at the Louisiana Capitol said they were prevented from filing their suit because they were unable to obtain a required signature of one of the plaintiffs.

One of the Baton Rouge plaintiffs, the Rev. T. J. Jemison, president of the Baton Rouge Christian Movement, said his group will now submit its suit on Monday.

Jemison said that his group's suit will be identical to the one filed in New Orleans naming the city officials as defendants.

Both suits seek a declaratory effect until and if "a court of competent jurisdiction" ruled otherwise.

Ministers Outline 7 Point Program Of Non-Violence

Daily New Orleans La. Sat. 2-16-57

The Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance of New Orleans has announced a SEVEN POINT PROGRAM OF NON-VIOLENT ACTION. The announcement was made Sunday by Dr. A. L. Davis, Jr., president, at a mass rally conducted at Union Bethel A.M.E. Church on the New Orleans Bus Situation.

Dr. Davis indicated that the announcement in the form of a well-designed pamphlet, bearing the title "A New Use for Old Wood" and shows two of the screens used by New Orleans Public Service to separate white and Negro passengers being nailed in the form of a Cross, will be distributed by all Churches of IDMA within the week.

He pointed out that the phamphlet is free of charge and that they should be shared with neighbors and friends.

The seven points are:

1. Pray for guidance and commit yourself to keep NON-VIOLENCE in word and action, observing the ordinary rules of courtesy and good behavior.

NEW ORLEANS—State laws providing penalties for integrated seating on local trolley cars and buses may face tests in Baton Rouge and New Orleans, according to press-time indications. Thus, it is likely that Louisiana will fall in line with Alabama and Florida in seeking to bring local transportation policies into conformity with the recent U. S. Supreme Court ruling on the Montgomery Bus Case.

The Courier learned from reliable sources that Baton Rouge Negro leaders, headed by the Rev. T. J. Jemison, pastor, Mt. Zion Baptist Church, are planning action. Also, they have asked H. Flynn Cauthen, manager of the Baton Rouge Bus Co., to meet with them to discuss local transportation policies.

IN NEW ORLEANS, retired public school teacher, Bruce C. Neale, complained to the FBI and to the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., last week, following verbal abuse by a white passenger who had demanded he surrender his seat aboard a Magazine St. bus.

Leaders in Mobile, Ala.; Atlanta, Ga., and in Memphis, Tenn., were planning to sit where they please on buses and trolleys.

Mr. Neale told the Courier he was seated in the jim-crow section set aside for Negroes when the passenger demanded that he go farther to the rear of the vehicle.

Louisiana law provides that Negro and white patrons, respectively, occupy the section set aside for them under penalty of fine and imprisonment.

Companies operating transportation vehicles face similar penalties for failure to provide separate sections for Negroes

BATON ROUGE, La. — City-Parish Atty. Gordon Kean said Saturday that Baton Rouge will enforce its bus segregation law until it is appealed or invalidated by court action. His statement followed a meeting with Negro leaders seeking to end segregation on the basis of the Supreme Court decision in the Montgomery case.

Rev. T. J. Jemison said Negroes have formed the "Baton Rouge Christian Movement" and will test the ordinance shortly.

and whites, also for failing to enforce the state law.

THE LAW, however, does not state definitely which section—front or back—shall be occupied by Negroes and whites. This matter is left to the discretion of transportation agencies. Thus, it has been the practice to assign Negroes to rear seats on buses and to front coaches on passenger trains. Trolley cars and buses do not have permanent jim-crow sections but are equipped with signs which may be adjusted according to the racial percentage of patrons.

Three weeks ago three Negro businessmen deliberately occupied seats in white sections of the Jackson and Freret Buses without incident. The driver of the Freret Bus ordered the trio to move but took no action when they refused.

Man Charged With Attempt To Murder 2 Policemen

VICTIM IN CRITICAL SHAPE

By The United Press

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 2.—A policeman shot a Negro who hurled two segregation screens from a crowded bus and threatened to stab the driver Wednesday, as the South's bus seating troubles spread.

But there was no bus service at all in one affected city, Tallahassee, Fla., where Gov. Leroy Collins used his emergency powers to suspend runs to prevent violence.

In Montgomery, Ala., where the turbulence all began two weeks ago when the United States Supreme Court ordered an end to segregated seating, a curfew on night bus operations was extended until Jan. 8. The city also voted to hire 20 additional policemen to cope with integration disorders.

There were conflicting reports as to just what part the racial seating incident played in the New Orleans shooting which sent Frank Jones, 24, to the hospital with a critical wound.

Given 50-50 Chance

Jones, who was given a 50-50 chance to live, was shot through the spine and the bullet lodged in his back. He was charged with attempted murder of two officers, including the one who shot him, and with attempted robbery of the bus driver, Lloyd Alexander, 56.

Police said Patrolman Frank Lovoi shot Jones after the Negro threatened Mr. Alexander with a knife and robbed him of his coin changer.

The disturbance began in the rear of the bus, Mr. Alexander said, when a passenger boarded the bus and reported someone had thrown out the signs designating which sections each race is to occupy. The signs are made of boards which can be attached to any seat. Where Negro passengers are more numerous the boards are placed farther forward, with the Negroes seated to the rear.

Knife Brandished

Mr. Alexander, driver of a bus on the Tulane-Galvez line, said he told Jones to "put those signs back in their place" but the Negro instead whipped out a knife "and held it at my throat."

Patrolman Lovoi and Patrolman Lawrence Bayer were riding on a following bus when they noticed the disturbance on Mr. Alexander's bus. They boarded the first bus and Patrolman Lovoi said the Negro slashed at Patrolman Bayer with a four-inch knife.

Patrolman Lovoi said he hit the Negro on the head with his revolver but Jones "kept on fighting," then abruptly tried to flee the bus. It was then he fired at him, the officer said.

Jones had a record for investigation of burglary and narcotics and police said he may have tossed out the signs to divert Mr. Alexander so he could rob him. The Negro, almost incoherent from his wound, would only deny he had weilded a knife.

Tallahassee Buses Idle

Negro leaders in Tallahassee served notice they will resume their drive for integrated seating when the buses run again. The Governor's suspension order hit Negro domestics particularly hard as they make up the bulk of passengers on the small bus line.

Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of the desegregation campaign, said no plans have been formulated to try to integrate other public facilities "but when the buses go back, we will be back riding them up front."

The Negro Inter-Civic Council met Wednesday night to discuss the new development and urge members with cars to "pick up their friends" when the buses are idle.

Rev. Steele said the council is not providing transportation in view of court action declaring illegal a free "car pool' operated during a recent boycott of buses here.

A few maids called taxis or walked Wednesday while others called their employers to pick them up.

Montgomery Curfew Goes On

In Montgomery, where five shootings resulted in the putting of a curfew on night bus runs last week, the city commission voted to extend the policy another week. At a closed door session the commissioners also voted an emergency appropriation of $60,000 to pay extra policemen.

Meanwhile Negroes in Tuscaloosa and Mobile, Ala., mapped plans for riding the buses on an integrated basis.

A mass meeting was called by Negroes at Mobile to discuss a recent decision of the local bus line to remove the segregation boards. At Tuscaloosa, Rev. W. B. Sheeley, Negro Baptist minister, said he has organized a "fellowship" group which will press "for all the rights and privileges of American citizenship."

In Birmingham, fourth Alabama city affected by the issue, city officials said they would ask for a postponement Thursday when the cases of 22 Negroes came up for trial on charges of violating local Jim Crow laws in mixing with white riders on the buses.

It was reported the city might decide to prosecute only on disorderly conduct charges or drop the cases entirely to prevent an early Federal Court attack on the laws.

They then immediately conferred to plan mass protest meetings and to plot a legal course leading to federal court. P.12

There was no immediate threat of a bus boycott similar to that in Montgomery, Ala., nor was there talk of violence.

George S. Dinwiddie, president of New Orleans Public Service Inc., operators of the city's transit system, told a group of 11 Negro leaders Wednesday morning that "the company is continuing its present operating practices" of segregating its passengers by race.

A joint statement issued later in the day by the New Orleans Inter-Demoninational Ministerial Alliance and the New Orleans Improvement League said the Negro leaders believe they have "exhausted all but legal means of desegregating the local carriers."

Protest Meeting

After the statement was issued, one of the Negro ministers reported it is planned to hold a mass protest meeting Feb. 13 or 15 in New Orleans. The minister, Rev. Nicholas Hood, alliance secretary, said it was also planned to bring to New Orleans Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, leader of that city's Negro forces that sought through a boycott to end bus segregation there.

And another Negro minister, Rev. E. L. Johnson, pastor of a Lafayette church and also an alliance member, said the Negro leaders plan to establish a test case designed to lead into federal court for a declaratory judgment.

Backing up Dinwiddie was Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison

NOPSI President Outlines Policy to Negro Group who issued a statement saying that the city government has an obligation to insure peaceful operation of the city's segregated transit system "and shall fulfill that obligation."

Dinwiddie emphasized that his meeting with the Negro leaders was "friendly, amicable."

He was presented a letter by the combined alliance-improvement league group that was tantamount to a request that NOPSI desegregate its carriers.

From 250 Churches

It was signed by eight Negro ministers who said the alliance represents 250 churches and more than 200,000 Negroes in the New Orleans area.

Pointing to the recent US Supreme Court decision relative to the segregation of persons riding public carriers, the letter asked whether NOPSI has "considered any ways or means of complying with this decision by discontinuing to separate white and Negro patrons; and if so, in what way?"

The letter claimed that state segregation laws are "null, void and unconstitutional and are in direct violation of federal statutes . . ."

"In the light of these facts, does the New Orleans Public Service have any immediate plans for desegregation in compliance with the Supreme Court decision," the letter asked.

"We can avoid many of the unpleasant experiences which have plagued and given some of our cities a bad name, if your company will act on this matter in the immediate future."

Statement In Reply

Dinwiddie said the following statement constituted his reply to the group after the one-hour-and-40-minute conference in his office:

"Our purpose is to provide safe, efficient, economical and courteous transit service for all the citizens in New Orleans. The US supreme court decision was rendered in a case arising in Montgomery, Ala. Public Service is chartered under the laws of the state of Louisiana.

"The applicable laws of Louisiana have not been reviewed by the US supreme court, and must, therefore, be complied with. In our judgement, Public Service cannot presume to determine judicial and regulatory matters.

"In carrying out our purpose of providing safe, low-cost transit service, we are not at liberty to use our own discretion in all decisions about operations. We must operate within the framework of applicable state and local laws. Enforcement of the law is a responsibility of the state and local officials.

"Under these circumstances, the company is continuing its present operation."

Points to 7-Cent Fare

In another statement, Dinwiddie pointed to the seven-cent fare and the resulting high riding volume. Preservation of such transit service "depends on continued willingness of large numbers of people to utilize the service."

Dinwiddie said the Negro ministers at no time threatened a boycott here.

Morrison's statement said, in part: "The position of the city . . . is that we intend to continue following state law and we expect all citizens to abide by the law."

The mayor said inquiries had been directed to him as to where the city government stood on the issue. Pointing to what he termed "fortunate" and "cordial" race relations in New Orleans, Morrison said "it is in the public interest and the interest of every citizen and family that we maintain that relationship. I hope every citizen recognizes his personal responsibility in this matter."

Required by Law

He said segregation on public transit is required by state law and that the city will abide by this law.

He also referred to the seven-cent fare and added: "The continued maintenance and operation of this transit system is essential and vital to our community."

Replying to Dinwiddie's statement, the alliance and league issued a statement Wednesday afternoon which said: ". . . it is our firm belief that we have exhausted all but legal means of desergregating the local carriers."

Said their statement: "We are tired of second-class citizenship, and we want all to know that we are specifically weary of riding behind the segregation screen on the public modes of transportation in New Orleans."

The Negro leaders issued their statement during a meeting held Wednesday afternoon in the Young Men's Christian Association building at 2222 Dryades.

King to Come Here

It was after the meeting that Rev. Hood confirmed the report that Rev. King of Montgomery would be brought here to "give impetus" to the Negro movement. He said a mass meeting will be held either Feb. 13 or 15, the place not yet set.

There was also another report that the alliance and league plan a mass meeting to be held within two weeks, probably in the Coliseum.

The letter from the alliance to Dinwiddie was signed by the following:

Rev. A. L. Davis Jr., alliance president; Rev. P. W. Raphael, chairman of the alliance committee, and Revs. G. N. Collins, J. B. Morris, W. Scott Chinn, T. W. Gaines, Dave A. Dennis and Hood.

Also attending the conference with Dinwiddie were Dr. William R. Adams, improvement league president, Ferdinand Galleaud, league treasurer, and C. C. Detionje Jr., a board member of the league.

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — A group of New Orleans Negroes declared Wednesday they have "exhausted all but legal means" in their attempt to tear down racial barriers on the City Transit System and will carry their fight to the Federal courts.

The Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., Negro minister who is chairman of the New Orleans Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance, said:

"We are going to the Federal courts as soon as we can."

Emphasizing that his group will not institute a boycott of city buses, Davis said legal advisors will be consulted to determine "whether it is best to seek a test case or a declaratory judgment from the Federal courts."

Earlier, leaders of the Alliance and those of the New Orleans Improvement League, were turned down by the City Transit Company on their request for an end to bus segregation.

Rips Segregation Sign Down; Shot

NEW ORLEANS—Frank Johns, 25, who was shot by police after he threw a segregation sign on the floor of a crowded bus is in serious condition in a hospital here.

According to police, the bus was jammed with commuters when Johns boarded it and threw the sign segregating Negroes from white passengers on the floor.

The bus driver, Lloyd Alexander, 50, told police he stopped the bus, replaced the sign and started to drive off when Johns came up to him, pulled a knife and attempted to grab the money changer, but instead bolted out the rear exit of the bus.

Two policemen, Larry Bayer and Frank Lavoi, who were riding in a bus directly behind Alexander's vehicle, said they saw Johns leave the bus and ran after him.

Sat. 1-12-57

Lavoi said he hit Johns over the head with the butt of his revolver after they captured him and when Johns continued to struggle, he fired a shot which struck the suspect in the side.

Police later said that Johns who lived at 3605 Thalia Parkway, has a police record. He faces an attempted robbery charge as the result of the incident.

George Dinwiddie, president of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., told them the matter was not within his firm's jurisdiction.

He said that the company is required to abide by Louisiana segregation laws, which prohibit racial mixing on public carriers.

The group later declared:

"It is our firm belief that we have exhausted all but legal means of desegregating the local carrier.

"We are tired of second-class citizenship and specifically weary of riding behind the segregation screen on the public mode of transportation in New Orleans."

NEW ORLEANS — (ANP) The New Orleans Interdenominational Ministers Alliance and the New Orleans Improvement league issued a call last week to "all who believe in impartial justice under the law" to join them in an "effort to peaceably get the New Orleans Public Service to comply with the Supreme Court decision on bus segregation."

two groups said "It is our firm belief that we've exhausted all but legal means of desegregating the local carriers.

"We cannot appeal to the laws of Louisiana for removal of segregation on public carriers or the attorney general of the state."

Earlier, Atty.-Gen. Jack P. F. Fremillion told a similar group in Baton Rouge that he would enforce the state segregation laws "regardless of the federal court decision."

The two groups met with George Dinwiddie, president, New Orleans Public Service Inc., which operates the city's transit system, and were told that the position of the firm is that "it is going to operate its system under whatever state law prevails at the time."

The statement said "We are tired of second class citizenship and we want all to know that we are specifically weary of riding behind segregation screens on the public modes of transportation in New Orleans."

UNSEGREGATION OF BUSES ASKED

Times-Picayune

Negroes Seek Halt to N.O. Separation Laws

Suit was filed here Friday in federal district court by Negroes seeking to end segregation on buses and streetcars in the city.

The suit was filed by A. P. Tureaud, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He said that he will file a similar suit in Baton Rouge.

The New Orleans action asks for an injunction restraining city officials and others from enforcing state laws requiring segregation on buses and streetcars, and for a declaratory judgment defining the rights of the plaintiffs.

Wants Buses Unsegregated

It also asks that a three-judge court be convened to hear the suit, as provided under federal law in suits involving the constitutionality of state laws.

It is alleged that the plaintiffs "have suffered great injury, inconvenience and humiliation as a result of the denial of their constitutional rights to use such facilities on an unsegregated basis without fear of intimidation."

The plaintiffs claim they have no "plain, adequate or complete remedy to redress these wrongs other than by this suit." They allege that any other remedy would "be attended by such uncertainties and delays as to deny substantive relief and would involve a multiplicity of suits and cause further injury, damage and inconvenience."

Ask Speedy Hearing

The plaintiffs also ask that the suit be advanced on the court dockets for a speedy hearing.

Plaintiffs are Rev. Abraham L. Davis Jr. and Dr. William R. Adams. Rev. Davis is head of the New Orleans Inter-Denominational Alliance and Dr. Davis, a physician, heads the New Orleans Improvement Association.

Defendants are Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison, Councilmen Paul Burke, Fred Cassibry, Glenn Clasen, Walter Duffourc, James E. Fitzmorris Jr. and Victor H. Schiro; Paul Ristroph, director of the city's utilities department; police Supt. Provosty A. Dayries; George S. Dinwiddie, president of the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., and that corporation itself.

Says Meeting Unavailing

The suit points out that when a group of Negroes met with New Orleans Public Service officials on Jan. 9 they were told by Dinwiddie "that the applicable laws of Louisiana have not been reviewed by the United States supreme court and must, therefore, be complied with."

Under Louisiana law, persons who break segregation barriers on buses may be fined $25 and sentenced to 30 days in jail.

The suit asks that the three-judge court declare "any and all practices and usages" pursuant to which the plaintiffs and all other Negro citizens of New Orleans are segregated on buses and streetcars null and void and in violation of the 14th amendment of the constitution.

Travel Bias Hearing Set

NEW ORLEANS—A hearing on a suit filed by local leaders who seek to end segregated seating on streetcars and buses will be conducted April 17 in Federal District Court with Judge J. Skelly Wright presiding.

Already a motion to dismiss has been filed by city and state attorneys who claim the plaintiffs failed to state a claim upon which can be granted. Also they contend the court is without jurisdiction.

Bus Suit

Motion Filed To End Delay In Litigation

Attorney A. P. Tureaud in a legal move to avoid unnecessary delay in the bus segregation case here filed a motion Saturday for a summary judgment Saturday. He said a motion for a summary judgment in the case of Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., president of the New Orleans Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance and Dr. W. R. Adams, president, of the New Orleans Improvement League vs the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., and the City of New Orleans was filed with the clerk of court for the United States eastern district court.

In the motion filed Attorney Tureaud is requesting that the court hear the motion on May 15. The City of New Orleans and NOPSI are entitled to 10 days notice from the time of filing which was Saturday, May 4th.

It was pointed out by Tureaud that "the motion is a move seeking to end delay of the case decision.

"It means we are trying to forclose any further hearings. I feel there are no issues of fact before the court anymore. All that has been resolved. It is now a question of law, and that it is either valid or invalid," he concluded.

The plaintiff, The New Orleans Inter-Denominational Ministerial Alliance and New Orleans Improvement League, seeks the right to ride unsegregated in public service operated buses and streetcars in the City of New Orleans in accordance with the law as stated by the U. S. Supreme Court. A delegation of the two organizations met with the NOPSI head, George Dinwiddie on February 8, in an attempt to get the transit service owner to voluntarily remove the "screens" from buses and streetcars in compliance with the high court's ruling.

The delegation was informed by Mr. Dinwiddie that "NOPSI would of necessity abide by the laws of the State of Louisiana and the City of New Orleans by which the franchise was granted for operations." This accounted for the needed legal action taken by the ministers alliance and the improvement league.

Attorney Tureaud stated that copies of the motion had been mailed Friday to state attorney

The Alliance which is one of the plaintiffs in a suit against the City and the New Orleans Public Service, Inc., for integrated seating arrangements of passengers on buses and streetcars has followed a pattern of keeping the public informed of the progress status of the bus situation through educational programs. The other plaintiff in the suit is the New Orleans Improvement League of which Dr. William R. Adams is president.

Byrd who has been connected with the NAACP for years is expected to draw the largest crowd in the brief history of the mass meetings. He will be presented by the Reverend Nicholas Hood, first vice president, of the Alliance and pastor of Central Congregational Church.

Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., President of the Alliance, will address the mass gathering. Davis has spearheaded the drive in New Orleans for desegregation of public service buses and streetcars. STREET CAR, BUS SEGREGATION IS INVALID, RULING

Appeals to 'Delay Injunctions' Effectiveness

Segregation on New Orleans street cars and buses and in the use of City Park facilities was declared unconstitutional Wednesday by Federal District Judge J. Skelly Wright.

The court ruled that all state and city statutes requiring segregation of the races on the transit facilities and in the park are invalid. Judge Wright said that he will issue permanent injunctions restraining enforcement of the laws.

Attorneys representing both the city and the park said that they intend to appeal the decisions to the United States fifth circuit court of appeals and they pointed out that these appeals will delay the effectiveness of the injunctions until the appeals are finally decided. Judge Wright did not say when the injunctions will be isuued.

The court ruled after hearing arguments on motions affecting both cases. The state of Louisiana, as an intervenor, had filed a motion to dismiss the city park suit and the city was opposing a motion for summary judgement filed by Negro plaintiffs in the transit case.

George S. Dinwiddie, president of the New Orleans Public Service Inc., said that state laws must be observed until the judgement is final, and present operating practices (segregated seating) will be continued until then.

Dinwiddie said, "We have been advised by our counsel that the United States district court this morning rendered its opinion that the segregation statutes of the state of Louisiana affecting transit service are unconstitutional; and that the court announced that it will issue a declaratory judgment to that effect and will issue an injunction prohibiting segregation on the local transit system.

Present Practices to Continue

"Neither the judgment nor the injunction have yet been issued and they will not become final and effective until the usual delays for appeal have elapsed.

"We have been further advised that so long as there is no final judgment declaring the state laws involved unconstitutional we are required to observe such laws; and accordingly we will continue our present operating practices."

The City Park case was before the court Wednesday on a motion to dismiss argued by William P. Schuler, assistant attorney general, who contended that the New Orleans City Park Improvement Association is an agency of the state and the state has never given its consent to be sued.

Before ruling on that case, Judge Wright commented that he had held the case in abeyance for a number of years in order to see in which direction such litigation would go. He stated that all of the law cited by the assistant attorney general has been disposed of in prior litigation and he called attention to the Orleans parish school board segregation case and similar park cases in Atlanta, Ga., and Baltimore, Md.

In his opposition to the motion for summary judgment in the transit case, City Attorney Alvin Liska argued that no evidence has actually been produced showing that the plaintiffs in the suit hed ever required to sit behind the signs in street cars and buses and that they have never been arrested or threatened with arrest for failing to sit behind the signs.

Judge Wright then said that he was ready to rule and stated, "Counsel have argued that since no one has been arrested for violating the laws requiring segregation on the buses no issue is presented for decision by this court.

'Ripe for Injunction'

"It is not the court's view that in our civilization it is necessary to have incidents requiring arrests to have the rights of people declared. Here we have the defendants in the case, or, at least one of them, indicating that it is operating under state laws which require segregation in the buses, and pursuant to those laws signs have been used in the buses, are being used in the buses, and will continue to be used in the buses to enforce that segregation.

"The mayor of the city of New Orleans and the chief of this police force have sworn to uphold those laws. As long as those laws have not been declared invalid, the situation will remain status quo, and segregation will be enforced as a matter of course on the buses.

"Consequently, there is before the court a justifiable controversy. This matter is ripe for a declaratory judgment. Moreover, it is ripe for injunction.

"It is the judgment of the court that all state statutes which require segregation on transportation facilities in the city of New Orleans, and particularly those transportation facilities operated by the defendant New Orleans Public Service Inc., are unconstitutional and therefore invalid. The declaratory judgment shall issue along with the permanent injunction."

After the ruling Liska said, "This office, together with the assistance of the state attorney general's office, is in the process of preparing an appeal in the matter of Abraham L. Davis Jr., and William R. Adams vs. de-Lesseps S. Morrison, individually, et al, regarding the judgment rendered against the defendants this date.

"Subsequent to the judge's decision, we discussed this matter with him and he informed us that the injunction is not to be effective immediately, but will be stayed during the pendency of all appeals."

Rev. Davis, one of the plaintiff's in the transit suit and president of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, said "We, the over 300 Negro ministers of the alliance and associated agencies, have always taken the position that segregation is immoral, un-Christian and un-Godly. We receive the decision of the court with Christian dignity and pray that men of all races, creeds and religions will accept it, too, in the true spirit of democracy and the principles upon which our great country was founded.

"We must emphasize, however, that the 'Seven Point Program of Non. Vilent Action' adopted by the NOIDMA is still advocated by the group for both Negroes and other intelligent fair-minded people of this community to follow.

"Although the decision has been rendered declaring unconstitutional segregated seating arrangements on public service buses and trolleys, we must of necessity realize that with both groups, colored and white, there will be some immediate resentment and probable resistance. However, time will assist greatly in the true acceptance in the hearts of all men."

He urged Negroes "to be courteous, avoid loud talk, be sure you are neat and clean at all times. Be friendly, proud, but not arrogant."

Pupils Humiliated Despite Park Tour OK By School Board

Weekly
New Orleans, La.
Sat. 6-8-57

A class of fifth grade pupil accompanied by their teacher were "ordered and forced" to leave City Park Friday afternoon before their educational tour was completed.

Miss O. Grace Evans, ranking teacher, of James Lewis Elementary School, was ordered to leave Story Land by an attendant who later identified himself as "the manager."

The educational tour which had the approval of the Orleans Parish School Board and parents of the participating children was indeed "an education in itself." It was vividly demonstrated just how "nasty and mean man can be" inspite of our widely espoused belief in Christian and Democratic principles.

The children before visiting "Story Land" in City Park, which is a tax supported facility, as is the salary of the "expelling official," had been instructed "to look, observe, and not attempt to inspect the facilities by making use of them." This was a hard thing to tell little children. And when the big-bad, protector of the park facilities, who declared later that he was the "manager" (a check with the Parkway Commission indicates that Ellis Laborde is the manager), ordered them from the park with tearfilled eyes the little children asked "Does he think that we are cattle"?

A parent of one of the children asked the question "Why does the School Board approve these visits and tours, when they know, or should know, that the children will be embrassed and met with unpleasant experiences?" This is a question that the board should asnwer and have some concern about - "the treatment of all children."

Weekly

Although the teacher and group arrived in a public school bus, the "manager" offered to call a Public Service bus, which the teacher refused.

It is alledged that the manager declared that "I am certain that Emile Wagner does not know about this visit." He then said that he would call Wagner. The group was then ushered to City Park Avenue and Orleans Ave. entrance where they were compelled to wait some two hours for the authorized transportation.

Richard W. English, principal, informed a Louisiana Weekly reporter that he had instructed Miss Evans to write up her report which he would submit to the School Board Office.

Sat. 6-8-57

There is evidently no set pattern to follow on park visits by Negro children. Some groups have been permitted to use Audubon Park's facilities, others only to walk through the Zoo and return to their buses. "It all depends upon the mood the individual incharge is in as to what policy will be enforced," said one source of information.

A similiar situation happened several months ago when another group of children attempted to visit the Story Land. Pupils from the McDonogh 32 Elementary School, of which Alvin J. Aubry is principal, were "evicted from City Park by park manager Ellis Laborde." His actions then like now were done much to the disgust of many fair-minded, liberal thinking whites in the park area. . . .

New Orleans Bias Laws Ruled Void

New York

NEW ORLEANS, May 15 (AP).—Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright today declared unconstitutional all city and state laws calling for segregation of the races in city parks and on streetcars and buses in New Orleans.

Judge Wright said he will issue permanent injunctions to stop enforcement of the laws. He did not say when the injunctions would be issued.

Later, however, attorneys for the city said they had been informed by the court the injunction would not be issued until all appeals are xehausted. Lawyers representing the city in both cases said they will appeal the decisions.

Judge Wright ruled after hearing arguments in the two separate cases.

Shreveport Negroes Challenge Bus Segregation Laws Of City

Advertiser Lou. 6-16-57 P. 1
Montgomery, Ala.

SHREVEPORT, La., June 15 (UP)—Five Negro preachers with their Bibles in their arms boarded a bus today and rode without incident in seats reserved for whites through the most fashionable part of town.

It was the first demonstration in several months in the struggle of Southern Negroes for equal seating privileges on public conveyances.

Louisiana has strict segregation laws governing public transit which still are in effect although under attack in the courts. New Orleans has been enjoined from enforcing its local Jim Crow law but the writ does not become effective until the city exhausts its appeals.

Police did not interfere with today's demonstration although tipped off by the Negroes in advance that it would be held. Police Chief Harvey L. Teasley said such "threats" had been made before without being carried out.

He said police would not take action now unless charges are filed.

H. C. Kihneman, an official of the Shreveport Railways Co., operators of the buses, said the driver of the trolley bus could prefer charges. He was told not to do so in this case but drivers were ordered to press charges in future cases.

Several whites refused to board the bus when they saw the Negroes riding in front of the "race boards" assigning Negroes to the rear.

As the bus rolled through the fashionable Broadmoor section of Shreveport, a city of 130,000, many of the white passengers left their seats and stood in the aisle rather than sit "mixed." The Negroes completed their ride downtown.

DETROITER INDICTED IN VOTE BID BIAS

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Jan. 8—An unemployed Detroit advertising man long active in Republican affairs was indicted today on a charge of having distributed anonymous political literature. He pleaded not guilty. He was released on a personal bond of $2,500.

New York

The Federal grand jury here charged that John R. McAlpine, a prominent Republican, had caused about 6,000 letters to be distributed to registered Negro voters in Detroit a fe wdays before the election last Nov. 6. The letters, mailed from Atlanta, urged the recipients to support Democrats in the election "because the Democratic party keeps the colored in their place."

The apparent intent of the letters was to motivate Negroes to vote Republican. The letters were signed "Council of White Citizens of Atlanta, Ga."

George E. Woods, chief assistant United States Attorney, said that an investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation had determined that no such organization as the council existed.

The indictment charged that Mr. McAlpine was responsible for the preparation and mailing of the letters.

Mr. Woods said that the violation came within Section 612, Title 18 of the United States Code and was a misdemeanor punishable by a $1,000 fine and/or one year imprisonment.

Mr. McAlpine met the press later and asserted that he had never seen a copy of the letters in question. During the last campaign, he said, he served as a non-paid volunteer for the Minute Men for Eisenhower.

He said at that time railroads constituted monopolies, which had within their power to favor one community against another and one company against its competitor. At such a time, he added, regulation was in the public interest.

"But continuance of this discriminatory legislation has placed the severely regulated and restricted railroad industry at a disadvantage as it faces the growing competition of other transportation agencies," added the speaker.

Alabaman Urges Agreements With Transit Firms

BILOXI, Miss., April 6.—(UP)—C. C. 'Jack' Owen, chairman of the Alabama Public Service Commission, said Saturday Southern cities can maintain racial segregation on buses by dealing only with companies that agree to segregate their passengers.

38b

Owens told utilities and railroad commissioners from 11 Southeastern states "bus companies operating solely in intrastate commerce have the right to make and enforce rules and regulations separating their passengers according to race" if the rules "represent the sentiment of the community to which they apply."

The commissioners closed their annual spring meeting here Saturday.

A resolution submitted by Mr. Owen and approved unanimously by the commissioners urged bus companies in the South to "voluntarily" maintain segregation.

It called on the regulatory bodies to "suggest" to the companies the "propriety, and in fact, the necessity for the voluntary adoption" of segregated seating.

Mr. Owen, whose state was the scene of the long desegregation strike staged by Negroes against Montgomery, said the voluntary plan was safe from attack by Federal authorities.

Why No Bus Boycott Nor Suit Is Needed Here

Advocate Jackson, Miss. Sat. 1-5-57 p. 4

"Patience and delay achieve more than force and rage"—
Jean De La Fontaine

In the past few weeks a mounting degree of criticism has been leveled at the Jackson Negro Citizens from outside sources, joined by some local Negro leaders of a sort, because there has been no bus boycott nor suits here despite the wide publicity given to such movements in Montgomery, Alabama; Birmingham, Ala.; Tallahassee, Fla.; and Baton Rouge, La., and the reported threats of such action in Atlanta, Ga., and other southern cities.

There appears to us good, sound, and logical reason why there has been no bus boycott movement nor suit here, and why no such movement or suit in regard to the local buses is needed.

In the first place taking the Montgomery bus boycott as the historic example, according to newspaper reports and the speeches of the leaders of the movement, the original demands of the Montgomery Negro Citizens called for the rights to sit anywhere on the buses traversing the predominantly Negro neighborhoods, and for more courteous treatment on the part of the bus drivers.

Some years ago the old style jim crow signs in the Jackson buses gave way to signs, backed by a city ordinance, calling for Negro passengers to start taking seats from the back and white passengers to start taking seats from the front, which was the original interpretation, according to press reports, of Rev. Martin Luther King's call for a first come, first served, seating arrangement on the Montgomery buses, and apparently it was official adamance for maintenance of the status quo, more than anything else, that forced the issue to a decision by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Here in Jackson, from the Old Style Jim Crow signs, to the signs calling for Negro passengers to start seating from back and for white passengers to start seating from the front, there has been a steady evolution for the better towards Negro citizens on the local buses.

Any Negro, or any other person, who will use a little time in observing can see that Negro passengers on the Jackson buses, serving the predominantly Negro neighborhoods, take seats anywhere they please, and generally fill the buses from front to back, sometime with hardly room for the driver to operate.

As for courteous treatment on the part of the local drivers, giving due consideration to human frailties, both Negro and white, the drivers of the local buses generally accord Negro passengers such courteous treatment as has reduced to a minimum of minor complaints, incidents arising out of race relations on the buses here.

For all practical purposes, despite outside critics, segregation on the buses serving predominantly Negro neighborhoods of the city is now only a question of emotions and imagination, and on the buses serving predominantly white neighborhoods, the first come first served basis, works conversely to that on the buses serving predominantly Negro neighborhoods.

In regard to the buses no such conditions as has prevailed for a number of year in Jackson existed in any of the places where the bus boycott has been instituted.

The Supreme Court decisions in all its reecnt segregation cases, both by intent and design, has set in motion an evolutionary process, and not a revolutionary movement, and both past and present history points to a far better future for Negroes of Jackson, via the evolutionary process, than by indulging in revolutionary activities and movements.

No Bus Boycott Needed, Negro Writes In Mississippi Paper

Advertiser Mon. 1-7-57 Montgomery, Ala.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 6 (AP)—The Jackson Clarion-Ledger published two articles today by Negroes one of them a Negro editor's statement that no bus boycott is needed here and the other an appeal for justice.

P. 2-A

The newspaper reprinted on Page One an editorial by Editor Percy Green of the Jackson Advocate saying there are "good, sound and logical reasons why there has been no bus boycott movement nor suit here, and why no such movement or suit in regard to the local buses is needed."

Green said replacement of "old style Jim Crow signs" in Jackson buses several years ago is part of "a steady evolution for the better toward Negro citizens on the local buses." The present signs ask that Negroes start taking seats from the back and white passengers from the front.

Green said that on buses serving predominantly Negro neighborhoods Negroes "take seats anywhere they please, and generally fill the buses from front to back . . ." He said drivers are courteous.

WRITER NOT NAMED

"An appeal to Christian hearts" was the title of the letter. The writer was not named but The Clarion-Ledger, in a note to readers, said he is an American Legion post commander here, a deacon in Friendship Baptist Church and a Jackson native.

Referring to the Hungarians' "trek to freedom," the letter writer asks:

"What about the 16 million Americans who have proved loyal and faithful to the cause of American liberty but because of the color of their skin and the texture of their hair are being denied not only their civil rights but their human and God-given rights?"

In an apparent reference to claims by two Greenville, Miss., Negroes that they were beaten in Hinds County Jail here, the letter said:

"In the face of recent happenings against our people, the appeal is to Christian hearts to cry out against inhuman treatment."

The letter-writer said Negroes who were called to military service in World War II returned to find that "in many counties of our state, we are intimidated, threatened and even murdered if we dare to exercise our suffrage rights."

BUS RULES ASKED ON MIXING RACES

Commissioners Urge Firms Adopt Own Standards

Memphis Tenn.

BILOXI MEETING HELD

By KENNETH TOLER
Staff Writer

Sat. 4-27

BILOXI, Miss., April 5.—Railroad and utilities commissioners of 11 Southeastern states Friday called on bus companies operating within their jurisdictions to "voluntarily" adopt rules for the segregation of races in intrastate transportation.

The unanimous action was on a resolution by C. N. (Jack) Owen, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, presented to the spring conference of the Southeastern Association meeting at the Buena Vista Hotel.

Johnson Makes Motion

Commissioner Norman Johnson Jr., of Mississippi, made the motion for its adoption, with two other members speaking in favor. They were Chairman Rubel Phillips of the Mississippi Commission, and Commissioner Walter R. McDonald of the Georgia Public Service Commission.

Commissioner Johnson said the proposal is in keeping with long-followed southern traditions and presents an approach which may be workable. Chairman Phillips said the resolution "advocates the preservation of segregation within the framework of the law."

Mr. Owen, a candidate for governor of Alabama the last election and mentioned for the next primary, said the carriers operating within the respective states by "voluntary adoption as their own such rules" the separation of races "cannot and will not be violative of the 14th Amendment or other constitutional provisions."

His resolution calls on the regulatory authorities to "advise with the carriers and suggest to them the propriety, and in fact, the necessity for the voluntary adoption by them" of the segregation rules.

Rights Of Companies

Mr. Owen said the voluntary actions could not be attacked as has been done in the case of municipal and state laws for the separation of the races in transportation. He said under a Supreme Court ruling that federal courts have no jurisdiction in cases involving the acts and conduct of private citizens and that the bus companies could claim themselves to be "private citizens."

"On that premise, bus companies operating solely in intrastate commerce have the right to make and enforce rules separating their passengers according to race if such rules represent the sentiment of the community to which they apply," Mr. Owen said.

Developments in the application of atomic energy to the generation of electric power were outlined by H. J. Scholz, chairman of the Board of Southern Services, Inc., at Birmingham, Ala.

Mr. Scholz said the domestic program for nuclear power development "should not be based on a rash program or a kilowat race with other countries."

'Not Under Pressure'

"We should have as our objective economical nuclear power," he said. "With plentiful supplies of conventional fuels, we are not under pressure to develop new sources of power."

He said although atomic energy will be employed in many ways — medicine, agriculture, foods and industry "it will play its greatest civilian role as a fuel for the production of electric power."

Mr. Scholz asserted that the United States "is not behind any country in the development of civilian atomic power." He denied that private industry is "stalling" in its development.

"All we need is a cooperative legislative attitude toward the third party insurance liability question and freedom from competition with government power in the nuclear field," he said.

The convention ends Saturday.

NEGRO LEADERS OF 4 CITIES MEET IN ATLANTA, GA.
THURS. JAN. 9, 1957

100 Ministers Plan To Defy Bus Bias Today

Daily World P.1
Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 1-9-57

By THADDEUS T. STOKES

In a bold move to end racial segregation on local city buses, more than 100 local Negro ministers Tuesday night told a congregation estimated at more than 1,200 that they would ride on all city bus lines at 10 o'clock this morning "and take seats heretofore reserved for whites only."

The strategy of the plan was revealed during a meeting at Wheat Street Baptist Church. It was also revealed that the unprecedented move for Atlantans was the result of more than six weeks planning of all Negro ministers of all denominations here.

The plan — has been named "the Love, Law and Liberation Movement." Also connected with the movement are business and professional men, students, college professors, church members, just plain citizens and civic and religious organizations.

Plans called for "just ministers to participate in the initial move to break down racial segregation in seating on the buses. All other Negroes were asked to refrain from taking a part in the move on Wednesday."

The strategy spelled out the procedure which should be followed in these eight points, which were signed by Rev. William Holmes Borders, chairman of the move; and Rev. H. I. Bearden, listed as vice-chairman:

1. Pray for guidance and commit yourself to complete non-violence in word and action, observing the ordinary rules of courtesy and good behavior.

2. If any person is being molested, do not arise to go to his defense but pray for the oppressor and use moral and spiritual force to carry on the struggle for justice

3. The bus driver is in charge of the bus; ask his aid and report any serious incidents to him. Then report to one of our leaders immediately, giving, date, time, place, and names of persons involved, if possible.

4. You will be notified when we wish you to begin helping to desegregate the busses and trolleys, but until then be quiet, but friendly; proud, but not arrogant; happy, but not noisy.

5. Be sure you are neat and clean at all times.

6. Do not be drawn in to argument about segregation, desegregation or integration; in case of an accident, talk as little as possible, and always in a quiet tone.

7. If cursed, do not curse back. If pushed, do not push back. If struck, do not strike back, but show love and good will at all times.

8. Remember always to pray, especially for those who would persecute anyone.

Daily World

A spokesman went on to say:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that segregation on local buses and trolleys is unlawful. The best legal opinion is, however, that this decision cannot be enforced in Atlanta, Georgia until there has been a specific decision to that effect.

"This places upon all of us a tremendous responsibility of maintaining, in the face of what could be some unpleasantness, a calm and loving dignity befitting good citizens if we are to enjoy the measures of freedom that is present in this area. This matter has been studied by our leaders in an attitude of prayerful contemplation during the past few weeks under the Love, Law and Liberation movement. We are ready to proceed, but we call upon every citizen to exercise caution, accept advice, assume an attitude of love and prayerful non-violence.

Very soon a few leaders will board busses and sit where they please. It is hoped that no one will follow suit unless he or she has attended one of our meetings, given notice of his or her intentions and has accepted the spirit of the Movement. The following simple directions are urged."

Rev. Borders also announced that a similar mass meeting will be held again tonight at 8 P. M. at Wheat Street Baptist Church.

Dr. W. J. Paschal, 94, the oldest minister in Atlanta also spoke out against racial segregation by saying "malice and hatred of race destroy the mind. Prejudice impairs the mind to think straight. We need to pray for southern white man. Death is a happy dream in the face of slavery. Freedom is better than life itself."

Rev. B. Joseph Johnson of Greater Mt. Calvary Baptist Church told the crowd "this reflected the concern of the Negro for human decency — equality, and integration for a new day for American Negroes in the South."

Rev. Samuel William, pastor of Friendship Baptist Church, said "freedom belongs to everybody."

Negro Leaders Call Meeting On Integration

Constitution P.10-a
Tues. 1-8-57
Montgomery, Ala.

A Southern Negro leaders conference on transportation and non-violent integration has been called for Jan. 10 and 11 in Atlanta, Ga.

The call was issued yesterday by the Revs. Martin L. King Jr., of Montgomery, C. K. Steele of Tallahassee and F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

Purpose of the meeting which will bring together Negro leaders from over the South is to "coordinate and spur the campaign for integrated transportation in the South."

A. Philip Randolph, of New York, a vice president of AFL-CIO and international president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, will deliver one of the opening addresses. The Rev. King also will share a prominent spot on the program.

In their call, the Negro leaders said:

CLOSED TO PUBLIC

"We are convinced that most white southerners are prepared to accept integration on buses as the law of the land. On the other hand, a small but willful minority, dedicated to violence, is resorting to threats, shootings, cross burning and bombings.

"In this manner, they seek to intimidate Negroes and to frustrate our highest laws. They believe we will retreat from the realization of democracy for all.

"This conference is called because we have no moral choice, before God, but to delve deeper into the struggle — and to do so with greater reliance on non-violence and with greater unity, coordination, sharing and Christian understanding."

It was announced that the two-day session will be closed to the public.

Atlanta Talks Seek To Spur 3-City Drive

Memphis, Tenn.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 7. — (UP) — Negro leaders from Montgomery, Tellahassee and Birmingham Monday called an emergency conference for Jan. 10-11 in Atlanta "to spur the campaign for integrated transportation."

The Montgomery Improvement Association, backbone of the drive for integration on buses, said the call was issued by Rev. M. L. King of Montgomery, Rev. C. K. Steele of Tallahassee and Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

The conference, to be closed to the public, will discuss "violence directed toward the Negro communities, dedication to non-violence and the relation of registration and voting to all efforts for justice."

The session will be held at the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta. The church is pastored by the Rev. King's father.

A Philip Randolph, a New York Negro who is vice president of the AFL-CIO and international president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, will deliver one of the opening addresses.

Meanwhile Monday, the Tallahassee City Commission passed a law which will in effect make drivers responsible for bus segregation by requiring them to assign seats so as to "preserve good order." The ordinance, passed at a hurried meeting, made no mention of race or the custom of Negroes seating toward the rear of buses in this city where transit service is now suspended to prevent violence.

Negroes To Renew Bus Integration Push Here Today

Constitution Thurs. 1-11-57

Atlanta Ga. p1

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Negro ministers decided Wednesday night to continue their fight against trolley segregation here Thursday despite a standby alert to the National Guard issued by Gov. Griffin.

The governor ordered the militia to be "subject to call on a moment's notice" Wednesday afternoon after Negroes made an unsuccessful attempt to test segregation laws.

MASS MEETING

At a mass meeting of more than 700 Negroes in Wheat Street Baptist Church Wednesday night, the Rev. W. H. Borders declared, "This crusade for freedom will not stop. The orders are 'Forward March.' "

Borders said that for the time being ministers only will make test attempts. More than 100 ministers volunteered their services at the meeting.

The governor said he will "not hesitate" to use the state militia to preserve human life and property.

RAPS 'AGITATORS'

"Peace and domestic tranquility in the City of Atlanta area are now threatened by provocations arising from utterances and incitements of out-of-state agitators," Griffin declared.

"Riots, insurrections and breaches of the peace will not be tolerated," the governor continued. "Where danger to life and property is immediately threatened, it is not the duty or function of the governor . . . to weigh the arguments pro and con of the combatants and pass judgment on the merits of the respective claims made."

Griffin said he would call the troops in case of emergency "if local authorities do not cope with the serious situation thus engendered."

NO ARRESTS MADE

Earlier, Scripture-reading Negro ministers sat up front on an Atlanta trolley in an attempt to test state segregation laws.

No arrests were made Wednesday as a result of the trolley incident. Constitution

The trolley, in effect, ran segregated. The Atlanta Transit Co. provided a second trolley which ran ahead of the test vehicle and took on all further passengers.

Leaders of the integration effort scheduled a mass meeting for Wednesday night at Wheat Street Baptist Church where they were to chart the "next step."

MEMPHIS, NEW ORLEANS

The attempt came on the eve of a Southwide pro-integration meeting Thurs. 1-10-57

Meanwhile, other Negro groups in Memphis and New Orleans made preliminary plans to start riding buses and trolleys on a mixed basis. New Orleans Mayor deLesseps Morrison turned down a formal request to integrate the city's streetlines. Atlanta, Ga.

In Montgomery, a city bus was hit by a shotgun blast from a passing car Wednesday night and the mayor immediately reinstated a ban on night bus operations.

Detective Lt. G. H. Owens said the bus driver was alone, while passing through a Negro residential area when a car pulled alongside. The blast broke a window about three windows behind the driver, who was not injured. P10

Dubbed the "Love, Law and Liberation Movement" by its leaders, the trolley plan here was outlined at a mass meeting Tuesday night. Nonviolence was urged by ministers.

LEADERS NAMED

Leading the boarding by more than 30 Negroes Wednesday were the Rev. W. H. Borders, pastor of the Wheat Street Church, the Rev. R. H. Williams of Smith Chapel Baptist Church and the Rev. B. Joseph Johnson of Mt. Calvary Baptist Church.

The trio paid their fares at the Whitehall and Mitchell stop and sat in the side seat immediately to the left of the entrance. They were followed by the others who took empty seats throughout the trolley.

The Rev. Mr. Williams carried a book titled "The Power of Non-Violence."

All white passengers, except reporters and an elderly man, stepped off the trolley. A transit employe pulled down the power line contacts at 10:55 a.m.

For a few minutes a maintenance man worked on the vehicle's inner mechanism. The trolley's sign was changed from "Amsterdam" to "Whitehall to Cooper and Glenn" and then to "Special."

When another trolley marked Amsterdam pulled up to the stop, most of the former white passengers boarded it. The "Special" trolley followed this Amsterdam trolley over the regular route.

The "Special" stopped to discharge passengers only twice. The elderly white man, who identified himself as M. Egelka, left after riding two blocks. All other passengers disembarked after the trolley turned on to Boulevard, NE, two blocks north of Georgia Baptist Hospital.

Along the route the three leaders and other Negro passengers read from the Bible. The Rev. Borders read John 14: "Let not your heart be troubled . . ."

Other passengers echoed with "amen," "I'm with you" and "that's what Jesus said."

"The Lord is my heart and my salvation," Borders read. "Of whom shall I be afraid?"

'CEASE FROM ANGER'

The Rev. Martin Luther King Sr., pastor of Ebeneezer Baptist Church and father of the minister who led the Montgomery boycott, read a verse admonishing "cease from anger."

"Now abideth faith, hope and charity," read R. B. Shorts, presiding elder of the Williams-Atlanta district of the Georgia Conference of the CME Church.

After the Rev. Borders rang the bell on Boulevard, the trolley driver, No. 1025, asked the passengers to leave by the rear door. Borders insisted they be allowed to use the front door. The driver allowed this.

After they stepped off, the Negroes gathered around Borders. "We need a time of thought and reflection," he said, urging them to attend the 8 p.m. mass meeting.

At the meeting Tuesday night, which reportedly drew more than 1,200, Negroes were presented with an 8-point outline of conduct.

Many of the points dealt with nonviolence. Negroes were urged not to curse or strike back if attacked. They were told not to be drawn into arguments about segregation. "Be sure you are neat and clean at all times," they were told.

"You will be notified when we wish you to begin helping to desegregate the buses and trolleys," instructions read, "but until then be quiet, but friendly; proud, but not arrogant; happy, but not noisy."

In a prepared statement released Wednesday night, the executive director of the States Rights Council of Georgia, Inc., deplored "the attempt to disrupt the harmony of race relations in our state."

W. T. Bodenhamer, the director, called on all "decent people," regardless of race, to heed present state segregation laws. He criticized strongly what he termed "outside" influences.

CHARLOTTE — (ANP) — A Negro man who protested against proposed fare increases on Charlotte buses and sought employment of Negro bus drivers, last week dropped all complaints, declaring that "the best interests of all will be served by my withdrawing protests".

The man, Trezzvant W. Anderson, said he has written the North Carolina Utilities Commission notifying them that he has dropped the protests. He said he felt that Negro drivers would be employed eventually by City Coach Lines, which operates the buses.

The bus company is asking an increase to seven tickets for a dollar instead of the present four for 50 cents and eight for a dollar.

A. H. Caze, general manager of the bus firm, said later that he had "no objections" to hiring Negro drivers, but that the company had a full roster of application and employment of Negro drivers would be unlikely in the near future.

Negro Woman Sues To Test Airport Cafe Segregation

GREENSBORO, N.C., June 18 (AP) — A test of segregated eating facilities at airports — the first in North Carolina — was instituted in federal court here today.

A New York City negress, Martha S. Brisbane, filed suit in Middle District Court against the Greensboro - High Point Airport Authority, members of the airport governing body, manager of the restaurant at the airport and the airport manager.

The case attacks segregated eating arrangements at the local airport.

The complainant states that she arrived at the Greensboro-High Point Airport on Feb. 3, 1957, holding a plane reservation on Eastern Air Lines Flight 560. While awaiting her flight, she states, she entered the airport restaurant.

She was not served, the complaint alleges, and when she requested service she was reportedly told by "servants of the defendants, whose names are unknown to her," that the restaurant gave no service to Negroes.

She asks the court to enter "interlocutory and permanent injunctions restraining the defendants from making any distinction based upon color in regard to service at the Greensbor-High Point Airport or the restaurant therein."

The suit was filed by Conrad O. Pearson of Durham, legal redress officer of the North Carolina Chapter of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, and New York attorneys, including Thurgood Marshall, chief legal counsel for the NAACP.

Suit Filed Against Carolina Airport Bias

GREENSBORO, N. C.—(ANP)—The Greensboro-High Point Airport here was hit by a segregation suit in federal court last week in a move that looms as a test case challenging the legality of segregated dining facilities for Negro and white persons.

The action was brought into U. S. Middle District court here by a New York resident, Mrs. Margaret S. Brisbane. She named the airport, members of the airport governing body, the manager of the airport restaurant and the airport manager as defendants in the case.

Mrs. Brisbane's petition complains that the restaurant served whites only. The complaint charges that "the plaintiff and those similarly situated are threatened with irreparable injury by segregated eating facilities."

She asked the court to enter "interlectory and permanent injunctions restraining the defendants from making any distinction based upon color in regard to service at the airport."

The suit was filed by NAACP legal redress attorney Conrad O. Pearson of Durham, and several other attorneys including NAACP chief counsel Thurgood Marshall of New York.

The petition is the first of its kind in this state and stands as a test case attacking the legality of segregated eating places at the airport.

Suit hits jim crow at airport

Afro-American Sat. 6-29-57

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Mrs. Martha S. Brisbane of NYC filed suit in Middle District Federal Court here last week to end all segregation in eating facilities at airports.

Named defendants in the suit in Mrs. Brisbane's petition are the Greensboro-High Point Airport here, members of the airport's governing body and managers of the airport restaurant and the airport itself.

The suit specifically attacks segregated dining facilities at the Greensboro-High Point Airport, but its aim is seen as a test of the legality of segregation in the use of facilities at any other airport.

SHE ATTEMPTED to obtain a meal at the airport restaurant last February 3 after she had arrived there by plane, Mrs. Brisbane said, and when she was not served, she asked for service.

She says she was then told by "servants of the defendants, whose names are unknown to" her, that it was the restaurant's policy to serve only white persons.

In her petition, she contends that "the plaintiff and all those similarly situated suffer and are threatened with irreparable injury" by the maintenance of segregated facilities at the airports.

SHE ASKS the court to enter "interlocutory and permanent injunctions restraining the defendants (the airport management) from making any distinctions based on color in regard to service at Greensboro-High Point Airport. . ."

Also named defendants are members of the airport authority, J. T. Martin, Caesar Cone, F. Hall, R. T. Amos and Charles Kearns, along with the restaurant manager, Steve Vartis, and the airport manager, J. B. Queen.

Attorneys of record in the suit are Conrad O. Pearson of Durham, legal redress officer of the NAACP North Carolina Conference of Branches; Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, and several other lawyers.

Integration Suit Might Be Dropped

GREENSBORO, July 26 (AP)—Assertions by the Greensboro-High Point Airport Authority and a restaurant operator that segregation is not practiced at the airport facilities may eliminate the need for actual trial of an integration suit.

Both the authority members and Steve Bartis, operator of the restaurant at the airport, have asserted that service has not been denied to Negroes or any other persons because of color.

The authority and its members and Bartis were named in a suit filed last month by Martha S. Brisbane of New York City. She declared she had been denied service at the airport restaurant.

Bartis, in answering the Middle District Court suit, said that if the woman was denied service it was done without his knowledge or consent and was in violation of the restaurant's existing policy.

He also declared that the restaurant has practiced a policy "of serving the general public who are in the course of intrastate or interstate commerce without distinction based on color."

Bartis further said that so far as he is aware "there is not now, nor has there ever existed, any plan, practice, custom, scheme or conspiracy, either on the part of this defendant or any other persons connected directly or indirectly with said airport restaurant, to exclude from service persons of any race otherwise entitled to service at said restaurant."

The Airport Authority and its members asserted that Bartis operated the restaurant under a "bona fide" lease for his own benefit, and not for that of the authority.

For this reason, the Authority members said, they are "not indispensable, necessary or proper parties" to the suit.

Observers said that these assertions by the Authority members and restaurant operator may lead to a settlement of the suit by agreement.

The members further asserted that the Authority was not operating the airport itself on a segregated basis on the date the New York woman said she was denied service. That was last Feb. 3.

Airways Settles Bias Suits Brought By Negro Singers

Chi. Tri. 1-22-57

NEW YORK, Jan. 22 (AP).—Pan American World Airways says it has made out-of-court settlements of four damage suits alleging racial discrimination brought by Negro singer Ella Fitzgerald and three of her staff members.

The suits, filed two years ago in United States District Court, asked damages totaling $270,000. Observers said settlement was made for $7,000.

In announcing settlement yesterday, the airline declared:

"Pan American states that any inconvenience which may have been suffered by Miss Fitzgerald and her party was entirely the result of clerical error, and that no discrimination of any kind was involved."

The suit stated that the singer and her party had booked first-class air passage from San Francisco to Australia. Because of "prejudice," the suit said, the party was not permitted to reboard the plane after a stop at Honolulu.

Complainants in the suit, in addition to Miss Fitzgerald, were her piano accompanist, John Lewis; Miss Georgiana Henry, secretary, and Norman Granz, business manager.

NEW YORK, — (ANP) — Songstress Ella Fitzgerald and her traveling group last week settled a damage suit against the Pan American World Airways out of court.

A representative of the airline said they were bumped off one of the company's planes through "inadvertance" and not because of racial discrimination. The settlement was for $7,000.

The suit was filed in Federal court in December, 1954. It charged that earlier in the year, during a Honolulu stopover, Miss Fitzgerald, her accompanist and her secretary were prevented from continuing on a San Francisco-Australia flight because of their race.

The suit further contended that the incident caused great embarrassment and prevented Miss Fitzgerald from keeping her Australian commitments.

The PWA spokesman said the singer was "a frequent and valued customer of Pan-American," and expressed regret that she was inconvenienced.

Integration of buses working in Columbia

Afro-American Sat. 1-19-57 Baltimore, Md.

COLUMBIA, S.C.— While violence marks integration on city buses in several southern areas, Columbians are quietly going about this business of desegregation. P. 3

For more than a month students at Allen University have individually sampled reaction. Their leader, Fred H. Moore, continued to report this week: "There have been no incidents."

* * *

MR. MOORE said his group, stemming from the NAACP Youth chapter at Allen, had observed "an increasing number of nonschool passengers taking seats wherever they wish."

He expresed the hope that soon a citywide effort to increase integrated seating would be forthcoming from civic and religious leaders.

"So far, it has been just us young people," Mr. Moore said.

Students said that several drivers, over the period, have asked colored passengers to take a back seat, but said or did nothing further when the passengers refused to move.

* * *

A CITY POLICEMAN on one bus took a seat behind two colored passengers, later relinquishing it for a colored woman rider.

A second officer replied to a white passenger who called his attention to the mixed seating on another bus: "I can't do a thing about that."

Illness causes S.C. bus case delay 'til June

Afro American Sat. 2-23-57 Baltimore, MD.

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Because of the illness of Lincoln C. Jackson, attorney for Mrs. Sarah Flemming Brown, the Third District Federal Court has postponed the city bus segregation trial until June. P. 3

The court was scheduled to hear arguments in Mrs. Brown's suit for $25,000 against the S.C. Electric and Power Co. during the current term. The case will be tried during the second week in June.

Mrs. Brown's suit asked a permanent injunction against segregated seating on the company's lines after a bus driver struck her in the stomach in June of 1954.

Twice the case has come before Federal Judge George B. Timmerman Sr. who ordered it dismissed. His decision was reversed each time by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Compulsory Etiquette Proposed On Carriers

Advertiser

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 3 (AP)—Compulsory etiquette on buses and trains in South Carolina will be proposed by a South Carolina representative as a way to help maintain racially segregated seating. Mon. 3-4-57

Rep. John Hart of Union says he plans to introduce a bill in the State General Assembly "that would require a male passenger to obtain permission from a female passenger on public conveyances before he may occupy a seat next to her." Montgomery, Ala.

Hart added he will suggest "stiff" penalties for violators. While the proposal would cover both races, Hart said its actual purpose would be to discourage Negro men from sitting next to white women in the event of an organized move to secure integrated seating arrangements.

Such legislation, Hart contends, would "lessen the certainty of violence in transportation such as recently occurred in Montgomery, Ala., where federal courts have ordered integrated seating."

Panel Fails To Rule On City Petition

Advertiser P. 1 Thurs. 2-28-57 Montgomery, Ala.

By JO ANN FLINT

Opinions expressed by federal judges yesterday may have struck a death blow to plans for an all-white bus line in Montgomery.

Although a three-judge panel declined to hand down an advisory opinion in the bus matter, two of the jurists expressed individual opinions that the proposed system would be "public" and subject to a recent federal court order banning segregation.

group of six white men, charter members of the proposed Rebel Club, asked the city last month for permission to operate a "private" bus line for members only.

ITY STUDIES PLEA

City commissioners yesterday had not ruled on the Rebel Club request but said it would be studied "in ligh of" yesterday's opinions.

Commissioners W. A. Gayle and Frank W. Parks joined in a statement that in their understanding the judges' opinions rendered the Rebel Club plan a public system "subject to the same regulations as the present Montgomery City Lines bus transportation system." Commissioner Clyde Sellers was out of town.

An attorney for sponsors of the club plan, Rep. O. J. Goodwyn, said he would confer with his clients before revealing any future steps in their efforts to provide segregated bus transportation.

COURTS AUTHORITY

Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives and District Judges Seybourn H. Lynne and Frank M. Johnson Jr. dismissed a City Commission petition for instruction. They explained that the court did not have authority to give advisory opinions on "abstract, hypothetical, or contingent questions."

The court's authority, they ruled, was limited under the U. S. Constitution to "actual cases or controversies."

However, Judge Rives and Judge Johnson, feeling "that it will be of some public service," expressed their individual opinions on the three questions put to the court by the commissioners in their effort to avoid contempt of the federal order banning segregation on city buses.

This is the way the two judges answered the city's questions:

(1) Yes. The city commissioners could grant a hearing on the application of the proposed Rebel Club for a franchise to operate a transportation system here.

(2) Yes. The commission could, if the need were found, grant such a franchise.

(3) And yes. If such a franchise were granted it would be "incumbent" upon the city commission "to see to it that in the course of the operation of this private enterprise the holder of such franchise does not discriminate between white and colored passengers." Advertiser

They then stated that the word "private" referring to the bus system was "inappropriate."

NOT BINDING P. 2-a

Since the dismissal order ruled that the court did not have jurisdiction to grant the requested advisory opinion, the statement by the two judges is not binding. It is, however, indicative of how they would rule if presented with the actual situation described by the city in its petition for instruction.

Judge Lynne, the third member of the panel, declined to express any opinion on the proposed bus service.

The same three-member panel, with Judge Lynne dissenting, ruled last June that segregation on Montgomery public buses was unconstitutional and a Supreme Court decision in November upheld that ruling.

Last month city officials petitioned the panel for further instructions pursuant to the Supreme Court order in light of the Rebel Club's request for a franchise.

BRIEFS ASKED

The court then announced it would withhold its decision for three weeks and invited briefs from opposing attorneys in a case in which four Negroes contested city and state bus segregation laws here.

Negro attorney Fred Gray was the only one submitting such a brief.

Atty. Goodwyn said an informal request to submit a brief in behalf of the members of the Rebel Club was denied by the court since his clients were not involved in the older segregation cases.

The Rebel Club, which has not yet filed papers of incorporation in Probate Clerk's office here, has nonetheless submitted proposed articles of incorporation to the City Commission.

Headed by a six-man board of directors, the club would restrict patrons to the membership of the corporation which would operate five scheduled routes in the City of Montgomery.

Threats Made In Bus Boycott

West Palm Beach Herald P. 17

ROCK HILL, S. C., Aug. 3 (AP)—A minister, leader of a boycott by Negroes of city-franchise buses here, said he received three anonymous telephone calls Friday night, one saying that the caller "wanted to be sure you're there before it goes off."

The minister, the Rev. C. A. Ivory, replied calmly to a question that "you might call them threatening calls," but added that the caller did not specifically mention a bomb or otherwise explain the remark. Washington

Mr. Ivory said he had notified police, who still were in the area of the minister's home today.

It was the first hint of violence. 1-A, 8-4-57

The first caller, Mr. Ivory said, asked, "Are you the Negro preacher?" On the second call, apparently from the same person, Mr. Ivory added, the same question was asked and then the voice said, "I want to be sure you're there before it goes off."

The minister declared that another person called a couple of hours later and told him, "If you don't call off the boycott, there won't be a Negro working in town in three weeks."

The boycott is two weeks old. It started after Allene Austin, 23 - year - old Negro woman, allegedly was ordered by a bus driver to leave a seat she had taken beside a white woman. Miss Austin said that the seat was the only vacant one on the bus and that the white woman had invited her to take it.

Mr. Ivory said he and other leaders had set up a private transportation system to make the boycott effective. He said that a check of morning runs on the three small buses today showed only 11 Negroes riding. On weekdays, he said, these runs usually are filled and there are standees.

Mr. Ivory said his group didn't want to put anyone out of business, but "we'd rather walk than be insulted."

S. C. Bus JC Case Back In US Court

Afro-American Sat. 6-15-57 Baltimore, Md.

P.5

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown's $25,000 damage and civil rights suit against the S.C. Electric and Gas Co. was back in Federal District Court Monday for the third time before Judge George B. Timmerman Sr.

Judge Timmerman, on both previous occasions, has dismissed the action and as many times has been overruled and ordered to try the case for its damages angle.

Mrs. Brown, who has married since she was struck in the stomach by a city bus first time, Judge Timmerman held that the 1954 school decrees did not apply in transportation. "One's education and personality is not developed on a city bus," he wrote.

In reversing Timmerman, Circuit Court Judge John J. Parker held that the school rulings did apply and that segregation on city busses was as outlawed as in clasrsrooms.

(The U.S. Supreme Court has, subsequently, stricken out city bus segregation in a case arising in Montgomery, Ala.)

At a second trial, this one to determine the damages, driver in June of 1954, sued on two counts:

She sought the damages stipulated, and then a decree which would outlaw racial segregation on intrastate public vehicles.

* * *

IN DISMISSING her case the Judge Timmerman again dismissed the case in an overnight surprise move.

* * *

HE HELD that the bus driver acted under color of then existing state law when he ordered Miss Flemming (Mrs. Brown) to leave by a rear door.

(The school rulings were issued May 17, 1954. The plaintiff's cause for action occured June 22, 1954).

The Circuit Court has again remanded the case for trial before Judge Timmerman.

The plaintiff, up to the point of her fist appeal, employed a Columbia Jewish attorney.

From that point on it has been handled by the legal staff of the NAACP and at one point was laid before the U.S. Supreme Court which, following custom, failed to act inasmuch as it had not been disposed of by the lower courts.

Leader Threatened But "Not Alarmed"

Daily World P.1

Sun. 8-4-57

Atlanta Ga.

ROCK HILL, S. C. — (INS) — The Rock Hill Negro Minister bus-boycott leader, already threatened with bomb retaliation, vowed Saturday to continue the concerted action until transportation is integrated.

The Rev. C. A. Ivory, who reported three threatening phone calls to police Friday night, took the stand Saturday that: "This boycott will last until we get justice. By justice I mean until my people are allowed to ride the buses on an equal basis." He added:

"All we want is justice and fair treatment. We're waiting until the other people agree to obey the law of the land. We know it is unconstitutional to be forced to ride in a segregated manner."

Paul Knight, owner of the city bus company, issued the franchise three weeks ago, maintained "I intend to obey South Carolina laws and only South Carolina laws as long as I am in this state. -- The buses will remain segregated."

The two-week old boycott began when Miss Arlene Austin, 23, a Negro, was ordered by a bus driver to leave a seat just given to her by a white woman. Miss Austin said it was the only vacant seat on the bus.

Ivory received three threat-phone calls last night, he said, by "probably two different men." In one call he was told "I just wanted to be sure you'd be there when it goes off." said the second caller, "If you don't call off the boycott there won't be a n---r working in town."

The minister said he duly reported the threats to the police, "but I wasn't alarmed."

Raleigh N.C.

ROCK HILL, S.C., Aug. 3 (AP)— The Rev. C. A. Ivory, Negro minister who is leading a Negro boycott of city-franchised buses in Rock Hill, today said he has had three threatening telephone calls.

Ivory said one anonymous caller said he wanted "to be sure you're there before it goes off." P.32

The caller, according to Ivory, did not specifically mention a bomb or in any other manner explain the remark. The minister notified police.

Ivroy said the caller who apparently was talking about an explosion had called twice. The other caller told him, "If you don't call off the boycott, there won't be a 'Nigger' working in town in three weeks."

The boycott started two weeks ago after Allened Austin, 23-year-old Negro woman, was ordered to leave a seat she had taken next to a white woman. Miss Austin said the seat was the only one vacant and that the white woman had invited her to take it.

Ivroy said Negro leaders arranged a private transportation system for members of their race as a result of the incident. He said a check of morning runs on the bus system's three small busses today showed only 11 Negroes riding.

The minister said these runs usually are filled and often include standees.

The Negro leaders, Ivory said, did not want to put anyone out of business, but "we'd rather walk than be insulted."

The owner of the bus operating firm, Paul Knight, said he operates the busses only as a public convenience. "There's little money in it," he said.

Negro leaders have scheduled a public meeting Monday night to perfect their private transportation system and discuss legal steps which could be taken in a possible move to block segregated seating on the busses. Ivory said the group may decide to seek an injunction "either against the bus company or the city."

Rock Hill Boycotters Buying Second Bus

By TREZZ W. ANDERSON
Courier

(Last of Two Articles)

ROCK HILLS, S. C.—Here in Rock Hill, Negroes have been moulded into a pattern of solidarity and determination as a result of the bus boycott.

While it is true that the movement has not met with 100 per cent cooperation, that was not to be expected. However, there is some disappointment that the pastor of the largest Baptist church in the town has failed to be cooperative, along with some professional men.

Oct 18 - 55 - 57

DR. HUGH A. HOGAN, surgeon, and recent addition to the city, was given an ovation after he had fired a sizzling blast at some of his brother professionals who were not showing full cooperation with the bus boycott.

"I have absolutely no respect for any man," Dr. Hogan blasted, "who receives his entire living from his own colored people and then is not man enough to get up and go to bat for them and support them when they ask for what are just their human rights. Any such professional man who won't even come out to the meeting is not much of a man!"

The inspiration born out of the leaving of that bus early in July by Miss Allene Austin rather than accept the insult thrown at her by the driver has had broad repercussions.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED is that the pool of 17 cars has now been cut to just three autos, but six of the city's progressive Negro churches have thrown their money in the fight and bought a 32-passenger bus.

This bus now runs on regular half hour schedules into the heavily populated Negro areas starting in early morning and continuing throughout the day.

Mrs. Flossie Gaines alights from Negro-owned and operated bus in Rock Hill, S. C.

The bus service is augmented by the three cars, also on regular schedules.

The city's Negro library is used as the headquarters and assembly point for the bus and cars. The bus went into operation on Aug. 31. Rock Hill's three Negro policemen say there has been no trouble since the carpool went into action in late July. The boycott is being systematically run and is well organized.

Driver of the bus is Clarence Toatley, an ETO veteran who drove for a QM trucking company in World War II. Dispatcher is Edward Billings, who keeps the vehicles rolling on schedule and sends out emergency trips when needed.

THE CHURCHES which bought the bus are: Mt. Olive Methodist, Trinity Baptist, New Mt. Olivet AMEZ, St. Matthews AMEZ, Rock Grove AMEZ and Herman Presbyterian, which is pastored by Rev. Ivory, the boycott chairman.

Incidentally, Rev. Ivory was chosen for the leadership by the citizens who swear by his integrity and dedication to his task.

The idea was that a new chairman would be picked each week, so there would be no opportunities for individual jealousies to enter the picture. But for several weeks running, Rev. Ivory was picked and finally the citizens gave him a three-months term as chairman.

City buses had previously hauled between 300 and 350 Negroes daily, at a fare of 15 cents each. All this traffic is now lost to Mr. Knight and the city.

The boycott bus does not charge its riders. Each trip made by the bus covers a distance of six miles, through Flint Hill, Rock Hill Homes and Ebenezer, the Negro residential sections.

TELLING of the progress of the effort, Rev. Ivory commented to The Courier that Mayor Jerome has made no official remarks one way or the other to the boycott leaders.

"I thought the Mayor personal friend of mine," Rev. Ivory said, "but since we asked for what was ours he hasn't said a thing to me yet."

The boycott leaders met with the City Council and gave the council a list of grievances. All of them were rejected and the council gave word of the rejection to the local paper before telling the Negro leaders anything. Rev. Ivory said he wouldn't have known of the council's action had not the local press called him for comment.

WHAT HAD BEEN asked was that the city bus service be restored on a non-segregated basis. This was refused, so the boycott leaders made plans at once to buy a bus. Now they are working on the purchase of a second bus.

To explain just what happened here, Rev. Ivory put it this way:

"We just got tired of being pushed around. We decided to ask for what is ours."

In asking that city bus service be restored, the Negroes also asked that as an alternative they be allowed to provide bus service in the interim, by negotiating with other bus lines with a view to having them come into the city and operate.

The council told the Negroes finally that Mr. Knight had the local bus franchise and that the city itself did not have the power to desegregate the bus line. That power belonged to the state, the Negroes were told. So, they took the bull by the horns.

MEANWHILE, as they make plans to buy another bus, the Negroes are also working on legal action to bring the situation to a head. That action may come within the next two or three weeks.

There have been threats, the Ku Klux Klan has held meetings and burned crosses in the Negro sections, but no one is frightened. These Negroes regard the Klan as something of a comedy.

They are following the pattern of Negroes in other states, who refuse to panic at the sight of a hooded Klansman or a burning cross.

Here in Rock Hill the pattern of Montgomery, Ala. is also being followed. The theme is to meet the problem with love and compassion, not hatred and violence. That is the counsel given the Negroes by their leaders. But they are firm in their determination not to yield an inch in their demands.

One of the key leaders in the fight is Dr. Dewey M. Duckett, the city's leading physician. Dr. Duckett was a first-hand observer of the tactics and operations in Montgomery, and studied carefully the policies of Dr. M. L. King Jr. and his Montgomery associates. That pattern has been transposed to Rock Hill and it is working.

IT WAS DR. DUCKETT who drove up unexpectedly on a Ku Klux Klan meeting in a field just outside Rock Hill when returning from a visit to a patient. The robed Klansmen did not molest him however, or any of the other Negroes who had come out to watch the affair.

But the city fathers are tense because they don't know which way the Negroes will move next. They do know, however, that Rock Hill Negroes have already petitioned for desegregation of the public schools.

That has been turned down, too, with the excuse that only the state has the authority to desegregate the schools. The city fathers know that legal action is now possible against them, and they are wondering if that will be the next move.

How do the Negroes feel about what they are doing here? The Rev. W. A. Knox, prominent Baptist pastor, sounds the keynote:

"We've got to have courage and no cowards."

Two little boys at the corner of Pond and Taylor Sts. also sound the keynote as the bus goes by: "There goes our bus," they said, emphasis on "our."

Rock Hills, S. C. (ANP) — As a boycott by Negroes here against the Star Bus Lines swung into high gear last week, the company was reported to have altered its schedules and routes in some Negro areas of the town.

The Rock Hill Evening Herald newspapers reported the changes, although Paul Knight, owner of the lines, refused to comment on the matter.

The boycott went into force recently after a Negro woman got off a bus after being ordered to leave her seat beside a white woman. Since then Negroes have organized a car pool along the lines of the system used in the successful Montgomery (9la.) bus boycott.

The newspaper also stated that the bus line is operating without a city franchise and apparently under a 2½-year-old "temporary agreement, authorized by the City Council, December 3, 1954.

Bus Segregation Case Being Tried

News + Courier Tues. 6-11-57

P. 1-b

By W. D. WORKMAN JR.
Capital Correspondent

COLUMBIA, June 10 — The Columbia bus "Civil Rights" case which has been bouncing back and fourth between district and circuit courts for three years today was being heard for the third time before District Judge George Bell Timmerman.

After a full day of testimony Judge Timmerman still had given no positive indication whether he would direct a verdict as requested by counsel for the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co. The plantiff, a Negro woman named Sarah Mae Flemming Brown, is seeking $25,000 in actual and punitive damages for alleged violation of her civil rights as a passenger aboard a Columbia city bus operated by the electric and gas company.

Conflicting testimony between witnesses for plaintiff and defense produced this anomalous situation:

If plaintiff's witnesses be correct, there is doubt whether she actually has a case in federal court. On the other hand, if witnessses for the defense are correct, then there does seem to be a case.

That odd situation was pointed up from the bench when Judge Timmerman commented that there was no basis for a civil rights case if the plaintiff had not been violating a state segregation law.

Mrs. Brown and another Negro witness said she had not seated herself in front of a white person when the incident occurred on June 22, 1954. Defense witnesses, however, contended that she had taken a seat in front of a white passenger, although told by the bus driver to wait until white passengers had moved up forward.

The plaintiff says she was ordered out of her seat by a city bus driver, who later struck her in the stomach when she sought to leave the bus by the front door. The defense contends that the Negro woman left the bus voluntarily after having been asked to vacate a seat and that she had suffered no blow or damage.

The bus driver, Warren H. Christmus, veteran of 20 years driving for the bus company, flatly denied having struck the plaintiff. His testimony was supported by three white passengers of the bus.

Defense attorneys contended throughout that any incident linked with leaving the bus was totally disconnected with any civil rights situation, since there is no state law as to segregated doors on buses.

The two Negro attorneys representing the plaintiff said the plaintiff should recover damages for being held up to public humiliation and embarrassment even in the absence of physical damage.

When the case first was brought before Judge Timmerman he dismissed it on grounds that state segregation laws were still valid with respect to bus transportation.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals sent the case back.

Judge Timmerman, a year ago this week, dismissed the case a second time, holding that the segregation laws had not been upset by the circuit court at the time the incident occurred. Again the dismissal was reversed and today the case came up for the third time in district court.

At one juncture, while discussing the question of punitive damages, Judge Timmerman said:

"The courts have not yet said flat-footedly that Negroes have rights that nobody else can enjoy".

Later, he wondered aloud whether Negroes "have a civil right not to sit with someone of their own race or color and to force their prescence where it is not wanted."

Bus Segregation Suit In Columbia Is Set For Trial

News + Courier Sun. 6-2-57
Charleston, S.C.
P. 15-a

COLUMBIA, June 1 (AP) — Trial of a $25,000 civil rights suit will get under way in Federal District Court here June 10.

The suit, twice dismissed earlier by District Judge George Bell Timmerman, was brought by a Columbia Negro woman, Mrs. Sarah Mae Flemming Brown.

She said her civil rights were violated when she allegedly was ordered off a South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. bus after sitting in front of several white people. The incident took place in June, 1954, according to Mrs. Brown. She also charged that the bus driver struck her.

The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals overruled Timmerman after each dismissal of the case.

Timmerman held that a state law requiring segregated seating was valid at the time of the alleged incident. The appeals court, in ordering the case to trial, said that reliance on a law later found unconstitutional did not protect a person from being liable.

ROCK HILL, S. C., Aug. 2 (UP) A Negro minister and official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said today members of his race would boycott city buses here until "we get justice."

"We certainly want the bus service in the city, but with dignity," said the Rev. C. A. Ivory.

The boycott was touched off two weeks ago when a 23-year-old Negro woman, Allene Austin, said she got off a bus after the driver ordered her to leave a seat next to a white woman. The Negro woman said she took the seat at the invitation of the white passenger when all the bus seats were occupied.

Three Buses Involved

Ivory said the boycott against the Star Bus Line was not patterned after the celebrated Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott of last year. "But it certainly is inspired by it," he added.

Rail Station J. C. 'Back In Business'

Afro-American Sat. 8-10-57 P. 5
Baltimore, Md.

By JOHN H. McCRAY

FLORENCE, S.C. — The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad station in Florence, where NAACP's Clarence Mitchell and a South Carolina minister were arrested for obeying the Interstate Commerce Commission, is back at its segregation business.

Two Florence County Deputy sheriffs Wednesday nailed above the hitherto unmarked doors to the two waiting rooms (two doors to each room), respectively, signs which read: "Colored Intrastate," and "White Intrastate."

Signs above the doors had been removed as the ICC integration order became effective Jan. 12, 1956 for interstate passengers.

* * *

MR. MITCHELL and the Rev. H. P. Sharper of Sumter had entered the unmarked, formerly white, door shortly afterwards to pick up reservations for Mr. Mitchell, who was traveling back to Washington.

They were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct, and violating the state's segregation laws. However, City Recorder's Court nol prossed the charges the following afternoon.

A promised lawsuit against both the railroad and city has not yet materlialized.

The AFRO wasn't able to talk with Florence ACL Superintendent C. Paterson, whose office said he is on vacation, or, with the "next in charge," H. N. Strange Jr., who was in conference.

* * *

HOWEVER, AN unidentified ticket clerk, asked "What provisions does the station have for interstate passengers? You have but two rooms and have no signs directing them," replied:

"Oh, you just use either of the waiting rooms. Nobody is going to bother you."

He emphasized the first two syllables of the word "intrastate" in explaining that the signs applied only to ACL passengers traveling within the state, who use the station.

The ticket clerk wouldn't guess what might happen to a colored passenger arriving from outside of the state who might walk through the "white intrastate" room. Nor could, or would, he give reasons for the reappearance of racial signs which had been absent for 19 months.

SHERIFF JOHN HANNA of Florence County was out of his office, but Deputy M. Bacot told the AFRO that he and Deputy Sheriff M. Gregg, on orders from Mr. Hanna, had erected the signs Wednesday.

He said that similar signs were erected simultaneously at the ACL station in Timmonsville, 12 miles east, by Deputy Huggins. He didn't say whether similar signs were placed at all other ACL stops within the county.

Mr. Bacot said, however: "Mr. Hanna was ordered to put the signs up. It wasn't his idea; nor ours. It came from higher up. You know we have to follow orders; if we don't, off goes everybody's head."

"Higher up" in the county, legally, is the county's legislative delegation, led by State Sen. William Clyde Graham, who lives near Timmonsville.

THE DELEGATION, this past legislative session, is recorded as having introduced several anticolored bills. One provided for segregation of blood used in blood banks within the state and county.

President E. E. Guile of the Florence NAACP branch said he was just returning to the city from a business trip and had not yet seen the signs. "I'll check on it just as soon as I hang up," he said, however.

Meanwhile, other civic leaders had begun to steam over the signs and plan conferences with members of the legislative delegation, members of City Council, and possible legal action, if necessary.

* * *

THESE WERE charging the White Citizens Council and Ku Klux Klan with having sponsored the signs.

Both organizations have been active in the county; they are credited with having influenced the resignations of a young Baptist pastor and a crusading newspaper editor, in recent months.

Both opposed the WCC and KKK and fought for county and state respect for the Supreme Court's school decrees.

Station employes said they had not observed colored passengers using the "white intrastate" room during the two days since the signs were hung.

THEY AND civic leaders speculated that the signs would have the effect of intimidating colored passengers, with an end result of total segregation in effect.

A check on the ACL general headquarters station at North Charleston disclosed that it continues unsegregated, with neither of its waiting rooms in the new building marked.

The Union News Company, a station employee said, operates the lunchroom at the Florence ACL station, which remains segregated and which never took down its racial signs.

Nor were the race and color signs ever removed from the Florence but terminal, which also operates a segregated lunchroom on N. Cot St.

S.C. jury rejects damage claims in Brown bus case

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat 6-22-57

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — An all-male, all-white Federal court jury took only 40 minutes Tuesday to decide that Mrs. Sara Mae Flemming Brown wasn't entitled to a penny's worth of damages as a result of experiences on a city bus June 22, 1954.

She had sought $25,000 of the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., which operates the bus line, as well as a court order outlawing racial segregation of city buses.

Her attorneys, Lincoln C. Jenkins Jr. of Columbia, and Matthew J. Perry of Spartanburg, weren't ready to say whether or not an appeal would be made. They have 10 days in which to file notice of intention to appeal.

* *

THE TRIAL, third time around Federal court here since 1955, occupied most of Monday, when both sides offered evidence.

Tuesday morning, the jury heard brief final arguments by attorneys, the charge of presiding Judge George Bell Timmerman Sr., and then retired.

The plaintiff and another passenger on the bus the fateful day, Miss Julia E. King, testified as the case opened on Monday.

THE DEFENSE was handled by four white lawyers, Messrs. Cooper, Gary, Arthur Williams and W. C. McLain. Six witnesses were presented. These were:

Dr. Frank C. Owens, who said his examination of the plaintiff shortly after the incident failed to show any bruises or external injuries; the bus driver, Warren H. Christmus, who said he had stretched his hand across the aisle to restrain Mrs. Brown from leaving the crowded Main St. bus by way of the front door; and Four white women passengers, Mrs. George W. Russell, Mrs. C. E. Putnal, Miss Corrie Hayes and Mrs. Alice McKown, who testifed they did not see Christmus strike Mrs. Brown, but that she apparently came in contact with his extended arm.

* * *

THE PLAINTIFF and Miss King, however, testifed that the driver did strike the plaintiff, who started collapsing and who was caught by Miss King who was standing in the crowded aisle behind Mrs. Brown at the time.

Considerable testimony was given about the crowded condition of the bus and entrance and exit regulations.

The defendant company contended that the driver was enforcing a company regulation when he directed the plaintiff to the rear or center door exit.

However, witnesses testified that Mrs. Brown, near the front of the bus at the time, had started out of the front door behind a white woman passenger, whom the driver did not check or correct.

MRS. BROWN testified that she had taken the second from front seat across the aisle from the driver when a white woman vacated it. The driver immediately ordered her to vacate it and move to the rear, she said.

The plaintiff testifed that she became thoroughly embarrassed and immediately started to leave the bus she had ridden only two or three blocks while going home from shopping.

The case had twice before come before Federal court here and, as many times, dismissed by Judge Timmerman, who held that the driver acted under color of state law in enforcing segregation.

He was twice overruled, instructed by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to use the school decision of 1954 as a guide rule and to try the case for its damages angle.

At one point, the case reached the U.S. Supreme Court which, following custom, declined to act on it pending further actions by lower courts.

Bus Boycott Leader Reports Phone Threats

Journal & Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

ROCK HILL, S.C., Aug. 3 (AP)— A Negro minister, leader of a boycott by Negroes of city-franchise buses here, said he had received three anonymous telephone calls, one saying that the caller "wanted to be sure you're there before it goes off."

The minister, the Rev. C. A. Ivory, said the caller did not specifically mention a bomb or otherwise explain the remark.

Ivory notified police and officers were in the area of the minister's home Saturday.

It was the first hint of violence.

The first caller, Ivory said, asked, "Are you the nigger preacher?" On the second call, apparently from the same person, Ivory added, the same question was asked and then the voice said, "I want to be sure you're there before it goes off."

* * *

THE MINISTER declared that another person called a couple of hours later and told him, "If you don't call off the boycott, there won't be a nigger working in town in three weeks."

The boycott, two weeks ago, started after Allene Austin, 23-year-old Negro woman, allegedly was ordered by a bus driver to leave a seat she had taken by a white woman. The Negro said that the seat was the only vacant one on the bus and that the white woman had invited her to take it.

CHATTANOOGA ENDS BUS SEGREGATION; FLORIDA CITY TELLS NEW TWIST

World Sat. 1-12-57

PUBLIC NOT INFORMED OF SEGREGATION'S END

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Chattanooga has voluntarily ended segregation bus seating. The city revealed Monday, however, it was done without the public being notified, and that most bus riders were not even aware of the change.

But over in Tallahassee, Fla., that city is apparently making a last ditch effort to maintain segregation. The Tallahassee City Commission, in a special meeting Monday unanimously adopted an ordinance which will provide a "reserved seat" plan for the city's buses.

The ordinance, obviously aimed at maintaining segregation on buses in the Florida capital, calls for seats to be numbered. The bus driver would give each passenger a number and assign him a certain reserved seat on the vehicle.

Under the ordinance, violators (those who would refuse to take the seat assigned by the driver) would be subject to a fine "not exceeding $500 or 60 days in jail, or both."

CHATTANOOGA ISSUE

In Chattanooga, Dyer Butterfield, vice president and manager of the city bus lines said Monday that all segregation signs had been removed — over a period of two months — while Negroes continued to voluntarily observe the segregation customs.

Butterfield said it was the first time in the history of the Intercivic bus service transit system that integration had become a reality.

George McInturff, commissioner of public utilities, said he had been notified by the bus company that it was removing the stenciled signs, but he said they never asked his permission. He said he had been "sitting on the bus company's notification" since he received it."

NO INCIDENTS

Butterfield said there had been no incidents or disorder of any kind since the sign removals. He said he didn't think the city had any special segregation laws, and indicated that the recent Supreme Court decision would nullify a segregation law if there was one.

A Negro dummy, hanged in effigy on a Chattanooga bridge was cut down by police Monday morning, and brought to light the fact that the signs had been removed.

The dummy bore a sign reading "all NAACP bus riding N.....s."

The bus vice president said that the removing of the signs had been done so "quietly" that most bus riders were not aware of the change.

TALLAHASSEE ISSUE

In Tallahassee Mayor John Y. Humphress declared:

"In taking this action, the city commission calls upon the citizens of Tallahassee to assist the bus company in discharging its duties under the ordinance when bus transportation is resumed. We urge the people of this community to refrain from any acts or demonstrations which will have the effect of increasing racial tension or which will cause violence, disorder or further breaches of peace in our city."

World P.8

Details of the ordinance, which amends the bus company's franchise, have not been completely worked out, according to city commissioners.

Meanwhile, two suits, one filed in circuit court and another filed by the bus company in federal court, were dismissed yesterday by mutual agreement of the parties concerned.

The bus company had asked $100,000 damage from the city in the wake of the squabbles concerning segregated seating and the city had filed a counter suit.

Bus service of cities Transit Inc., the Tallahassee Bus Company, has been suspended by Florida Governor Leroy Collins in the wake of recent segregation disputes. The governor was not immediately available for comment on the new ordinance.

One section of the ordinance reads:

"The company shall make and enforce reasonable rules and regulations governing the seating and placement in its motor buses of passengers transported by it for hire in such a manner as to insure:

"(A) Equal distribution, because of weight .....; (B) the maximum health and safety of the passengers being transported by it to the end that life, limb and person of said passenger will not be endangered or threatened by violence or overt acts of violence ....."

Charles S. Nabors Accused Of Slapping Girl, 12

Thurs. 1-10-57

A Negro soldier accused of slapping a 12-year-old white girl on a Greyhound bus just outside Memphis Monday night was bound to the state yesterday on two charges.

Memphis Tenn.

Charles S. Nabors, 29, of Munford, Tenn., was held for Prand Jury action by Judge Robert Hoffman on his not guilty pleas to public drunkenness on a public conveyance and to assault and battery. He also was fined $50 each on charges of drunkenness and disturbing the peace. Bond of $500 was set on each charge.

38 Pb

H. L. Murphy of 4397 Truman Road, bus driver, said his bus was en route to Birmingham on Highway 78 (Lamar) when a disturbance occurred near Getwell.

Lamar

Witnesses stated Nabors had first put his arm against the girl, then sat down beside her and slapped her. The girl, Lottie Mae Williams of Fort Bragg, Mo., was not in court. John Osites of Holly Springs, Miss., a bus passenger, also testified to the incident.

Mr. Murphy said he stopped his bus and called the sheriff's office. Deputies H. L. Parker and H. J. Beach said they found the Negro obviously drunk on a rear seat of the bus. They stated it was necessary to use force to subdue the Negro while transporting him to County Jail.

The Negro testified he believed he had been "drugged." He denied being drunk, saying he had only one bottle of beer before boarding the bus. He was reporting back for duty after a furlough, he testified.

Chattanooga quietly desegregates buses

Afro-American P. 3
Sat. 1-19-57

By PETER D. SIMMONS

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—The city of Chattanooga voluntarily ended segregation on all of its buses here on Monday without fanfare, incidents or even public notice because most of the bus riders were not even aware of the change.

Baltimore Md.

From all indications and from contact with bus officials, this was anticipated, since this reporter was informed that the bus company (Southern Coach Lines Inc.) had planned an easy approach to the problem here after a careful watch of trouble spots in other states.

The company has completed removal of all segregation signs from all of its buses.

This was reported here on Monday, but this reporter was also informed several weeks ago by alert riders that the signs were being painted over.

* * *

DYER BUTTERFIELD, vice president and manager of the company, said that there had been no trouble so far, even though the elimination of the signs has been under way gradually for over a month.

City Attorney Joe Anderson said, as he did after the Supreme Court ruling that segregation on buses is unconstitutional.

"The requirement for the seating of colored passengers from the rear to the front of the bus and white passengers from the front to the rear is a state law. The City of Chattanooga has no ordinance relative to the seating of passengers on buses."

George McInturff, city public utilities commissioner, said he had been notified by the bus company that it (the company) was removing the stencil signs, but had never asked his permission. He said he has been "sitting on the company's notification since I received it."

IT WAS A KNOWN fact that bus drivers were instructed not to interfere with passengers on city buses, regardless of where they were seated right after the Supreme Court's ruling. This, however, was attributed to the fact that the company was afraid of suits.

During that time there was but one incident in which a white passenger ordered a colored passenger to the back of the bus.

Police say no race angle in bus bombings

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—Two bottles of gasoline, both of which burst into flames, were thrown at a southern coach lines bus on its last run from Chattanooga to nearby Fort Oglethorpe Thursday night. P. 3

The incident occurred on Lafayette (Ga.) Road on U.S. Highway 27 between Rossville and Fort Oglethorpe, about 11:55 p.m. said the driver, Frank Bailey of North Chattanooga, who reported that no one was injured and that there was no damage to the bus.

The first bottle of gasoline struck the highway in front of the bus and burst into flame, he said, so he drove around it.

But the other bottle, thrown by a figure he saw lurking near a culbert on the highway, struck the side of the bus near the bumper, bounced off and burst into terrific flames that spread across the road.

IN A LAST MINUTE REPORT, Walker County (Ga) Sheriff John Brock of Lafayette, said a search of the area early Friday morning with bloodhounds lead to the door of a cabin and that he has the name of at least one suspect.

But said he did not wish to divulge the name of the suspected person at this time.

The sheriff added that the throwing of the fire bombs was definitely not tied in with any racial tension due to the voluntary integration by the bus company. He said it had nothing to do with malice toward any person or group of persons. However, he did not say why he was so positive.

Fort Oglethorpe is a deactivated government post, now a small town for civilians, located about 13 miles from Chattanooga, near Chickamauga National Park. The bus was on its last run for the night.

In Chattanooga proper, police report no incidents in the five-day-old integrated bus service.

Bus segregation in Tenn. facing death

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—The suit of R. Z. Evers, challenging the constitutionality of Tennessee's bus segregation laws, has been set for a three-judge hearing on Jan. 26 in Federal court.

Mr. Evers, a resident of Memphis, charged that while he was sitting in the front seat of a Memphis Street Railway bus he was told by police to "get to the rear, get off, or go to jail."

Afro-American

Mr. Evers left the bus and filed a suit, naming the City of Memphis and the Memphis Street Railway as respondents, asking that the state bus segregation laws be set aside.

Scheduled to hear the case are Judge Marion S. Boyd, Judge Robert D. Martin and Judge William Miller.

IN ANOTHER case involving Dixie bus segregation laws, U.S. Judge Hobart Grooms turned down a motion for a summary judgment against the City of Birmingham, Ala., on Thursday, January 3.

The case was that of 22 colored residents of Birmingham who were arrested last December 26 after they rode in front seats of Birmingham buses.

City Attorney James H. Willis argued during the brief hearing that the ordinances had already been ruled constitutional by Birmingham Recorder's Court Judge Ralph E. Parker.

Arthur Shores, lawyer for the 22 bus riders, argued that the Recorder's Court proceedings constituted a criminal action and had no bearing upon the current civil action.

Judge Grooms turned down Mr. Shore's motion for a summary judgment, but declined to give an immediate ruling on the validity of the Recorder's Court ruling.

Three-Judge Court To Hear Negro's Bus Challenge

Memphis Tenn.

INJUNCTION REQUESTED

Wed. 10-30-57

A three-judge court has agreed to begin hearing testimony Jan. 6 on a Memphis Negro's challenge of state segregation laws on public transportation.

Considering the case in Federal Court here will be Judge Marion S. Boyd, Circuit Judge John D. Martin Sr. of Memphis and Cincinnati, and Judge William E. Miller of Nashville.

Postal Employe

O. Z. Evers of 671 Lipford contends the segregation statutes are in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

The postal employe also has before the court a summary judgment. He claims no facts are at issue and that the United States Supreme Court already has ruled on such matters.

Evers' requests include an injunction forbidding enforcement of the segregation laws. Defendants are the City Commission as individuals; Memphis Street Railway Co.; its operator, Warren G. Alexander; Police Chief J. C. Macdonald, and two police patrolmen.

He Left Bus

The officers gave Evers the choice of moving to the rear of a MSR Coach, getting off or facing arrests when they found him sitting in an area for whites. He left the bus.

The incident occurred April 26, 1956. The suit, filed a month later, is sanctioned by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Judge Boyd indicated the jurists had trouble finding a common time to hear the case. Judge Miller has been caring for the Middle Tennessee District alone since the death of Judge Elmer Davies. Judge Miller also is recovering from a heart ailment.

Chattanooga Negroes Ignore Bus Integration

World-Telegram & Sun p.5
Mon. 1-7-56
New York

By the United Press.

ATLANTA, Jan. 7.—Segregated seating on city buses ended officially in Chattanooga, Tenn., today but Negroes apparently were continuing it voluntarily.

38b

In Baton Rouge, La., Negro leaders met with city officials to try to avoid the violence that has marked bus integration campaigns in Alabama and Florida.

City buses in Chattanooga operated for the first time today without signs calling for segregated seating, however, officials said there had been no instances of Negroes sitting in front with whites.

Dyer Butterfield, vice president of Southern Coach Lines, said the last of the segregation signs was removed over the weekend. They have been taken off quietly over a two-month period.

A cross-burning Saturday night at the home of the Rev. T. J. Jemison, Negro leader of the integration movement, marked the first lawlessness of a heretofore quiet Baton Rouge campaign.

Except for a minor incident in which teen-aged boys hurled spark plugs, damaging a city bus Saturday at Montgomery, Ala., relative quiet prevailed over the weekend at other so-called bus integration centers.

The Southern Regional Council in Atlanta reported that, during the turbulent deep-South bus integration campaigns, compulsory bus segregation had ended quietly in 21 cities in five states—Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Fort Smith and Hot Springs, Ark.; Charlotte, Greensboro, Durham and Winston-Salem, N.C.; Richmond, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Newport News, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg and Roanoke, Va.; San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Dallas, Tex., and Knoxville, Tenn.

Negro Accused Of Slapping Teen-Age White Girl On Bus

Advertiser Nov. 12-57

Montgomery Ala.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 8 (AP) — A Negro soldier, accused of taking a bus seat beside a 12-year-old white girl, putting his arm around her and slapping her, was ordered held for grand jury action today.

Charles S. Nabors, 29, of Munford, Tenn., pleaded innocent to charges of assault and battery and drunkenness on a public conveyance. He appeared in court with both eyes almost closed from blows which officers said were necessary to subdue him on the way to jail.

Nabors was arrested Monday night aboard a Birmingham-bound bus, as it pulled out of Memphis.

The driver, H. L. Murphy, Memphis, said he stopped the bus and called police after a passenger told him a Negro soldier was sitting with his arm around the neck of a young white girl. Murphy said the girl was crying.

Deputy Sheriff H. J. Beach, one of the arresting officers, said passengers told him they saw Nabors put his arm around the girl and slap her.

BOMBINGS PROBED IN BEAUMONT, TEXAS BUT MOTIVE IS WITHHELD

CHURCH, HOME, BUSINESS ALL HIT BY BOMBS

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 1-30-57

BEAUMONT, Tex. — (INS) — Possibility of racial trouble loomed in Beaumont Tuesday as authorities pieced together possible explanations of three dynamite blasts which shook the city Monday night.

Police declined to express an opinion on motive of the blasts as they continued to check possible clues and suspects. They said no arrests have been made and none are imminent.

Officials of the National City Lines, which owns the local bus service as well as those in Montgomery and Mobile, Alabama, said they expect to confer next month in Beaumont with U. S. Attorneys on the question of integrating City Bus Lines.

Meanwhile a Baptist minister, Rev. Eugene Dickey, appeared Tuesday before the city council urging that the council take a stand on integration.

He said that the bombings of a church, a storage company and a private residence Monday night was just a little preview of things to come if the race question gets any worse."

NOT FOR CHURCH

Dickey said he was speaking as an individual and not for the Baptist Church.

[illegible] mysterious calls from a woman [illegible] and the [illegible] and a short time later to the pastor of the damaged St. Michaels Greek Orthodox Church, warned that "this is no amateur. I'm sorry we missed on Magnolia (near the [illegible] parsonage). We wanted to get the foreigners."

C. R. Smith, owner of the blasted residence, expressed the opinion that the bomb was meant for him because he has taken "a middle of the road stand on the question of integration."

Alabama's Attorney General Says

Whites To Abandon Buses Rather Than Intergrate

Journal and Guide P. 14 Norfolk, Va.

By SHELBY SCATES

DALLAS (INS)—Alabama's attorney general says the white citizens of his state will abandon all public facilities, including schools, buses and parks, rather than accept racial integration.

2-2-57

Youthful, articulate John Patterson became Alabama's chief legal officer after his father, Albert, Democratic nominee for the post, was murdered in vice-ridden Phenix City in June, 1954. In an interview, Mr. Patterson declared:

* * *

"The rules of companies and private organizations will be used to enforce segregation of the races.

"We're going to solve the race problem ourselves within the law. The worst thing for us is the outside interference."

Mr. Patterson outlined his view while in Dallas to receive from the Junior Chamber of Commerce a citation as one of the Jaycees' 10 outstanding young men of the year."

The Alabaman was careful to point out that while his department would defend segregation "with every legal means available," he would not tolerate violence or disorder by either whites or Negroes.

Mr. Patterson said, however, that the preservation of order will be "difficult if not impossible if the federal government continues to push integration on Alabama."

* * *

Mr. Patterson blamed the recent wave of bombings and shootings in Montgomery on the Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation on the city's buses.

The Alabama state legislature has passed a number of bills designed to continue public school segregation, but none has yet been tested in court.

Loss bombs in Texas

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

BEAUMONT, Tex. — A church, a storage company and a private home were bombed in Beaumont last Monday night in what City Council members were warned is "a preview of things to come" if city bus segregation is not outlawed.

The latest places bombed were the home of a man who "took a middle of the road position on integration," St. Michael's Greek Orthodox Church and a storage warehouse owned by a State representative who voted to send a bill backed by segregationists to a legislative committee.

SEVERAL WEEKS ago dynamite was thrown into the yards of two colored Beaumont homes. Police, who have made no arrests in any of the bombings, denied that the incidents were connected.

The warnings to the City Council were made by a white Beaumont pastor and a Beaumont resident who appeared before the council to warn that abolition of bus segregation "would not be tolerated."

The Rev. Eugene Dickey, a Baptist minister, told the council that the bombings were just a little preview of things to come if the race question gets any worse."

* *

THE QUESTION of integration of Beaumont buses is slated for discussion next month by officials of the National City Bus lines and United States attorneys.

National City Bus Lines is also the owner of bus lines in Montgomery and Mobile, Ala.

At first the church was believed to have been bombed under the mistaken impression that it was the place of worship of Beaumont Mayor Jimmie P. Cokinos.

Mayor Cokinos drew the ire of the segregationists last September when he ordered police to halt picketing of Lamar State College by White Citizens Council members after colored students were admitted.

However, the pastor of St. Michael's, the Rev. Daniel Montgomery, said that he received an anonymous phone call Wednesday from a woman who warned him:

"This is no amateur run. I'm sorry we missed on Magnolia (where the residence was bombed). We wanted to get the foreigners."

A similar call was made to police.

African Student Is Hit, Fined in Texas Bus Row

Washington, D.C. Star 8-27

HENDERSON, Tex., Aug. 26 (AP).—A Negro ministerial student from Africa was hit with a blackjack, jailed several hours and fined $25 as a result of an altercation with a policeman trying to make him move to the rear of a bus.

Essin Essin of Nigeria, West Africa, was released Saturday night a few hours after the incident.

Roosevelt Sams, dean of Southwestern Christian College in Terrell, Tex., where Essin has been a theological student for a year, paid the fine and said he planned a full investigation.

Continued Journey

City Judge Barto Giles levied the fine after Essin pleaded guilty to charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest. The 30-year-old Negro continued his journey from Terrell to Houston.

Patrolman L. L. Boatright said he found Essin sitting in the middle of a Continental Trailways bus after the driver complained a Negro refused to move to the rear.

Patrolman Boatright said when Essin told him, in a crisp British accent, that he had not understood the driver's order, he grabbed the student by the arm and escorted him to a rear seat.

He said Essin refused to sit down.

"When he reached into his coat pocket, I had to tap him with a slapjack," the patrolman said. Essin later told the city judge he was reaching for his passport.

Bus an Intrastate Run

The officer said he returned a short time later and found the student had moved back to the middle of the bus and took him to city hall.

H. O. Hooker, superintendent of Continental's Houston division, said he had no report of the incident and could not comment.

Segregation on most buses still is practiced in most areas of East Texas, where Henderson is located. Some cities in the South and west part of the State abolished it after the Supreme Curt ruled segregation was illegal in interstate travel.

The bus was on an intrastate run.

Beating of African Student Being Investigated

Dallas Morning News

Washington (ANP) — The United States Department of Justice announced this week that it had taken under consideration the investigation of the alleged beating and jailing of an African student who refused to take the back seat on a Texas bus.

The incident which was reported from Henderson, Texas, Monday might result in international repercussions since the British Embassy and the U. S. State Department have expressed an interest.

Louisville Ky.

The Justice Department expressed its intentions immediately after it learned that Essin Essin, a theological student at Southwest College, in Terrell, Texas, had suffered abuse at the hands of the Henderson policeman.

Shreveport 9-5-57

The 30-year-old student was said to have been seated midway a Continental Trailway bus en route from Terrell to Houston, Texas. When he refused to take a back seat at the request of the driver, a policeman was notified. The patorlman, L. L. Boatwright is said to have grabbed the African by the arm and escorted him to the back of the vehicle. When he refused to sit down he was hit with a "slap jack" by the policeman. Boatwright claimed that he tapped the Negro when he reached into his coat pocket. Essin said he was reaching for his passport to show the officer.

The policeman claimed that Essin sat down but when he returned to the bus a short time later the student had taken a seat in the center of the bus again. He then arrested the young minister and carried him to City Hall. There he was fined $25 by the City Judge Barto Giles. He was placed in jail because he had only $14 with him. He was later released when an official of the college which he is attending paid his fine.

Dr. Benedict Njoku, executive secretary of the All African Students Union of the Americas said his organization would investigate the incident. The African Students organization was formed for the purpose of protecting the welfare of Africans studying in the Americas.

38b

He pointed out that this is the third or fourth case of this kind which has been brought to the attention of the Union from various areas.

The Institute of African-American Affairs said they had a humanitarian interest in the affair, but they have no authority to intervene since they are not a legal organization. Since this young man is not of the students which they are sponsoring in this country, they can take no action in the matter.

The State Department spokesman said he had been in contact with the Nigerian liaison officer who is looking into the situation. The British Embassy said they were checking to find out if he is the same young man whom they have listed under a name which is spelled slightly different from the one reported in the press.

Essin, who was en route from Terrell to Houston, told the city judge he was confused about the incident. To the charge of disturbing the peace, he said he guessed he had caused a disturbance.

Patrolman L. L. Boatright said he received a call from the driver of a Continental Trailways bus Saturday afternoon that there was a Negro aboard who refused to move to the rear of the bus.

Boatright said he found Essin sitting in the middle of the bus next to a vacant seat. The policeman said that when Essin told him in a British accent he did not understand his order to move to the rear of the bus, he grabbed the student by the arm and took him to the back of the vehicle.

'I Had To Tap Him'

Boatright said the Negro refused to sit down.

"When he reached into his coat pocket, I had to tap him with a blackjack," Boatright said. Essin said he was reaching for his passport to show the officer.

The policeman said Essin sat down, but when he returned to the bus a short time later he found the student in the middle of the bus again. He then took Essin to the City Hall.

Essin told the City judge he was confused about the incident. To the charges of disturbing the peace, he said he guessed he had caused a disturbance.

HENDERSON (Texas)— An African ministerial student, discovered sitting in the center of a bus, was hit with a blackjack by a white policeman, thrown in jail and held there until his fine was paid, although he was clearly not a citizen of the United States.

A $25 dollar fine was paid for Essin, who is a student of theology western College Terrell, Texas, Mr. Essin who is a student of Theology at the college had been struck by the policeman after the 30 year old African visitor to the United States was apparently unable to understand just what the officer desired of him.

Essin, whose home is in Nigeria, West Africa, has been a student at the small college for approximately one year.

He was fined by City Judge Barto Giles after allegedly pleading guilty to charges of disturbing the peace and resisting arrest. He was placed in jail because he had only $14 with him.

The officer involved, was identified as L. L. Boatwright. He said he received a call from a driver of a Continental Trailways bus that there was a Negro aboard who refused to get back to the rear of the commercial vehicle.

The policeman said he found Mr. Essin sitting in the middle of the bus, next to a vacant seat. Boatright said that when Essin told him in a British accent he did not understand his order to move to the rear of the bus he grabbed the student and took him back to the rear.

The policeman claimed Essin refused to sit down and added "when he reached in his coat pocket, I had to tap him with a slapjack."

The African said he only reached into his pocket to get his passport to show the officer.

Governor Daniels writes on African bus incident

WASHINGTON

"The bus incident did not involve state authorities. I have received no official report and am merely on newspaper accounts. However, I regret the incident and assure you good will between races is the primary concern of this office."

Pitts 8-29-57

This is the reply received Wednesday from Texas Governor Price Daniel by the Washington, D.C. African Student Union of the Americas in answer to a letter of protest forwarded to Texas over the beating of an African on a Texas bus last Aug. 24.

Essien U. Effenwan, executive secretary of the Student Union, told the AFRO Wednesday the Union also received a letter of regret from the U.S. State Department, reporting a current investigation of the bus incident by the Department of Justice.

Baltimore

THE INCIDENT, which is expected to result in international repercussions since the State Department and the British Embassy have expressed interest, took place at Henderson, Tex., when African student Essin Essin, a theological student at Southwest College, refused to take the back seat on a bus.

The following account of the incident was reported:

Essin, 30, was seated midway a Continental Trailway bus enroute from Terrell to Houston, Texas when he refused to take a back seat at the request of the driver, a policeman was notified.

The patrolman, L. L. Boatwright, is said to have grabbed Essin by the arm and escorted him to the back of the bus. When he refused to sit down he was hit with a "slap-stick" by the policeman.

Boatwright claimed that he tapped the "colored man" when he reached into his coat pocket. Essin said he was reaching for his passport to show the officer.

Virginian Rejects Invitation to Dinner Lashing 'Stench' of Stanley's Policies

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

A white Virginian has rejected Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's invitation to a dinner for distinguished Virginians with a blistering comment on the Governor's leadership in the racial issue.

Lambert Davis, director of the University of North Carolina Press at Chapel Hill, N. C., said in an open letter to Stanley:

"You have succeeded in making the leadership of the Commonwealth both a stench and a laughing stock in the Nation."

Davis is among 700 native Virginians listed in "Who's Who in America" invited by Stanley to the State Chamber of Commerce dinner on May 17 as part of the Jamestown Festival.

Three Virginia-born Negroes listed in "Who's Who" were discovered among those invited. This was a mistake, said the Chamber, and their invitations were withdrawn.

In his letter to Stanley, Davis said he watched "with increasing alarm, despair and anger" the course the Governor had chosen for Virginia in meeting the desegregation problem.

"When—as well I know—sober minds all over the South have looked to the Old Dominion for leadership," Davis wrote, "you have offered only the barren slogan of massive resistance, the tyrannical suppression of all local freedom, and a mass of witless obstructive legislation that is rightly doomed to the judicial scrap heap."

Davis pointed to the withdrawal of invitations to the prominent Negroes and stated:

"And now you find yourself, on a great and solemn occasion in the history of the Commonwealth, in the ridiculous position of asserting, in effect, that being distinguished is an accomplishment possible only for people of Caucasian ancestry.

You have succeeded in making the leadership of Virginia both a stench and a laughing stock in the Nation.

"I believe that I can best show my loyalty to the great traditions of Virginia by declining your invitation."

The Governor had no comment.

PROTEST SEPARATE SEATING--

Clerics Test Va. Law

WASHINGTON

"My own conscience won't permit me to accept segregation in any form, and I am a member of a church which is entirely against segregation in any way."

Thus spoke the Rev. Thomas A. Robinson, one of seven persons arrested Monday night in Arlington, Va., on charges of violation of the separate seating law of the state.

Two other ministers, three women, two of them white, and a fourth man were included in the seven arrested. On Tuesday, in Arlington county court, they were granted continuances so they may obtain counsel.

OTHERS ARRESTED were the Rev. John L. Winters, Route 1, Alexandria, Va.; the Rev. Columbus C. Wilson, 308 Shreve St., Falls Church, Va.; Galvester Crawley, 2447 S. Monroe St., Arlington;

Mrs. Marjorie Y. Taylor, 2005 N. Emerson St., Arlington; Mrs. Grace E. Oehser, 3119 N. Eighth St., and Mrs. Abbey A. Hadley, 5245 S. Tenth St., the latter two white, and both of Arlington.

The Rev. Mr. Robinson resides at 3813 Elbert Ave., Alexandria. He is the stated clerk of the Southern Virginia Presbytery, USA, and secretary of the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance of Washington and Vicinity.

* * *

THE REV. MR. WILSON is pastor of Galloway Methodist Church, Falls Church and the Rev. Mr. Winters, pastor of Woodlawn Methodist Church, Gum Springs, Va.

The case of the three women was set for Nov. 18 and the other cases continued until Nov. 25 by Judge Paul D. Brown.

The seven were arrested while attending a political meeting at Swanson Junior High School in Arlington. The clergymen were together at the meeting, but the others, acting on their own, were seated in different places.

A SPOKESMAN for the three ministers said they planned to use the arrest as a test case in light of the recent refusal of Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals to rule on a similar test case brought last year by a white Arlington woman.

The case of Mrs. Faith Bissell, 3007 N. Third St., Arlington, was rejected by the State Supreme Court because the warrant did not specify that she was a white woman sitting in a colored section.

This left the constitutionality of the law up in the air.

THE REV. MR. ROBINSON, told the AFRO "We went to the meeting to hear the speakers; we were particularly interested in what Candidate Dalton had to say.

"When we arrived," the minister continued, "we were handed some literature and told to take seats on the right side. The usher did not say the seats were reserved for colored or white, and there were no signs designating any seating by race.

"White people were seated in front of us and behind us. After about five minutes, another usher came and asked us to move.

"I told him that we were satisfied with our seats. Then he said the Virginia law required separate seating by race and if we did not move he would have to call the police.

* * *

"MY REPLY to him was that I was an American citizen; my church was against segregation of all kinds, and my own conscience would not allow me to accept segregation."

The Rev. Mr. Robinson further said a white man seated in front of him turned to him and said he had no objection to his sitting there. The man, whose identity he did not know, reportedly gave police his name as a witness.

After the arrests, the ministers were taken to the station, released on personal recognizance until the hearing the following morning.

THE TWO other pastors gave substantially the same story.

The other persons arrested were asked by ushers to move but declined and were taken out by police.

The three ministers were arrested before the meeting got under way, but the others were forced to leave the session after the speaking began. About 400 persons attended the meeting.

Blast Home Of Bessemer, Ala., Integrationist

BESSEMER, Ala. (AP-INS) A Bessemer Negro integration leader was blasted out of his home Friday as he slept on a couch with a rifle at his side for "protection."

David Hood Jr., a Negro lawyer leading a movement to have Bessemer's segregation ordinances declared unconstitutional, escaped with scratches as the explosive landed on his terrace shattering glass over him.

His wife and two children, in the rear bedroom, were not injured. The only property damage was a hole in the terrace and broken windows.

The Negro lawyer is handling a suit brought by two Negroes against a city ordinance which makes it unlawful for any Negro, "except a maid accompanied by white children," to go to the Bessemer parks.

Hood said he and his family had been threatened repeatedly since he accepted the case two months ago. He said he had hired three men to protect his home but had eventually dismissed them several days ago.

The Hood home is surrounded by spotlights and is at the end of a dead end street. City police have theorized, therefore, that someone on foot threw the explosive—probably dynamite. There are no other clues.

Three weeks ago two sticks of unexploded dynamite were found in the rear of Hood's house.

Last week Hood was convicted of carrying a gun without a permit. He was fined $100 and sentenced to 90 days in jail. He was freed so he could appeal the decision.

Negro House Is Shattered By 2 Blasts

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 7 (AP) —A house into which a Negro family was preparing to move was shattered by two dynamite explosions early today. No one was injured.

The blasts, heard over a mile-wide area, virtually wrecked the building. The dynamiting was one of a series since Negroes began moving into the former all-white Fountain Heights section in west Birmingham.

Two other Negro families recently moved into the section without being harmed. Earlier a house bought by a Negro widow was wrecked before she could move into it.

The section has become known as "dynamite hill" because of a succession of bombings which began with the Negro movement into the area.

Fire marshal A. Rosenfeld estimated 14 sticks of dynamite placed at the front and rear of the house were used to wreck it.

College Hills seeks to keep area all white

A committee of College Hills property owners has petitioned City Commission for help in drawing a dividing line between white and Negro residential areas.

J. L. Walker, chairman of the committee, told the commission that his group would go before the Birmingham Real Estate Board tomorrow with a petition signed by 500 to 600 College Hills residents asking the realtors' help in maintaining the proposed imaginary line.

MAYOR JAMES W. MORGAN pointed out that the city is under permanent injunction from a Federal Court to avoid creation of segregational zoning ordinances.

The mayor and Commissioners Robert E. Lindbergh and J. T. Waggoner explained they would "take every possible step" in helping white property owners to preserve the character of their neighborhood.

The result of Negroes moving into previously all-white neighborhoods, the protesting citizens said, is that real estate values drop more than half.

MOBILE BOMB CASE IS ENTERED BY FBI

Fifth Blasting Of Negro Home In City

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 19.—(UP) —The FBI Tuesday entered the investigation of Monday night's bombing of a Negro home to determine if any Federal laws were violated.

It was the fifth dynamiting of a Negro's home here recently, but it marked the first time Federal agents stepped into the investigation.

Fred Hallford, special agent in charge of the local FBI office, said his agents were gathering facts in the bombing to be sent to Washington where it would be determined if the small dynamite blast violated Federal statutes. Mr. Hallford would not elaborate further.

A bomb slightly damaged the home of 49-year-old Walter Johnson for the second time Monday night, and police sought a "white boy on a bicycle" in connection with the fresh outbreak of racial terrorism.

Johnson, who home was also the scene of a cross-burning last Nov. 28, blamed the incidents on the location of his house in "a mixed neighborhood." He lives in the suburb of Toulminville, which is composed mostly of white home owners.

Johnson said he saw a white youth on a bicycle ride into his backyard about 7:20 p.m., stop and straddle his bike, light the fuse and throw the bomb onto his back porch, then ride away.

FBI Is Looking Into Latest Mobile Bombing

MOBILE, Feb. 19 (U.P.) — The FBI today entered the investigation of last night's bombing of a Negro home to determine if any federal laws were violated.

Johnson said he saw a white youth on a bicycle ride into his back yard, stop and straddle his bike, light the fuse and throw the bomb onto his back porch, then ride away.

The blast blew a hole about the size of two fists in a corner of the back porch. The first bomb last month was a stick of dynamite encased in an iron pipe. It loosened the boards of the front of his house when it was thrown into his front yard Jan. 9.

Mrs. Johnson said the family had been "sitting and watching" nightly since the first explosion.

HOMES OF 2 NEGROES IN ALABAMA BOMBED

Birmingham Fringe Area Rocked By Blast

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 11. —(INS) — Birmingham police were investigating a block-shaking bombing Thursday of two Negro homes located in a white section of town.

Late Wednesday night the recently purchased homes of Rev. P. W. Dickerson and another Negro family were bombed by dynamite. The minister's home was occupied, but there were no reported injuries. Both homes were considerably damaged.

The homes, located on the fringe of a Negro neighborhood, were purchased this week.

The minister's home had a large hole blown out in the front of the house and the basement wall was demolished. The other home had a large hole in the floor of the house and a brick pillar knocked down. Police said the blast had smashed in windows and doors and rocked the neighborhood.

The fringe - area Fountain Heights section has been the scene of several bombings during the past two years.

More Ala. Bombings

BIRMINGHAM — Two vacant houses recently sold to colored owners in the Fountain Heights area were severely damaged Wednesday night by dynamite blasts which rocked the neighborhood.

One of the houses, at 1143 12th Pl., N., was reported to have been sold to a minister, the Rev. T. W. Dickerson. The other is located at 113[illegible]

The bombed houses are two of eight which line the street in a court in the middle of a predominantly colored neighborhood. The other six are occupied by white persons.

REAL ESTATE agents had experienced considerable difficulty in the past year in their efforts to sell the houses to white occupants because of the surrounding colored neighborhood.

Mrs. Eleanor A. Hurst, white, who lives at 1139, between the two bombed houses, said that she heard a noise at about 10:45 p.m. and shined a light out of her back door.

"I heard someone running," she said, "and then the blast went off. I ran to see about my children who were sleeping and then a second blast went off. It roared like thunder."

POLICE SAID that both bombs were placed in the basements of the houses. Siding was blown off of 1135, which is a corner house, and all of the floors were buckled.

The house at 1143 was more seriously damaged. A hole was blasted through the floor in the middle of the house and all of the windows were blown out. A door was blown off its hinges and it was left standing upright in the hole which was blown in the floor.

Investigating police said that the bombs had apparently been made up of two sticks of dynamite each. A police guard was left at the house for the rest of the night.

Residents of the vicinity said that colored persons began moving into the surrounding neighborhood about a year ago.

Probes Bombing Of Negro Home In Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(INS) — Birmingham police were investigating Monday the bombing of an unoccupied house in a former all-white neighborhood.

Police said that several sticks of dynamite were pushed through a ventilator of the house which was purchased by a Negro mother of seven children.

No one was injured in the blast. The bombing took place around midnight Saturday, but police were not informed of it until 18 hours later.

Mrs. Cleo Prince, purchaser of the property, told police that a white man told her last week that she "would not be happy" if she moves in.

Mrs. Prince said the man said, "they didn't want any 'undesirable people' in the neighborhood."

Two other bombings occurred in the same neighborhood last April.

Bomb More Homes

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — This city's third outbreak of racial bombings within five months occurred last week in Fountain Heights.

Two unoccupied homes that had been purchased the day of the dynamiting were blasted. Sticks of dynamite had been placed in the basement of one of the houses.

Prior to the late bombings, the Ku Klux Klan had staged a series of demonstrations in the Fountain Heights area. Robed, hooded and masked KK-ers assembled at the Martin School Park. Another detachment formed near a church.

At Martin Park, the KKK chased several Negro boys. Police appeared on the scene and the KKK demonstrators fled. Police said the Klansmen were grouped in the neighborhood to attend church services.

Klansmen returned to the Fountain Heights area the night after the bombing.

The bombed homes had been purchased by two Negro families. White families are leaving the neighborhood and Negro families are sprinkling in.

SCENE OF BOMBING—Detective L. E. Parker points to the spot where several sticks of dynamite were exploded under a Northside house late Saturday night. Negroes had planned to move into the house Thursday.

Woman Owner Planned To Move In Next Thursday

BY JERRY UPTON

A Fountain Heights house was damaged heavily Saturday night by explosion of several sticks of dynamite in the basement.

The house was purchased recently by a Negro woman, who was planning to move into the house this week. It is located in a former all-white residential area.

"If I had known I was going to have all this trouble I wouldn't have bought the house," the buyer, Mrs. Cleo Prince, mother of seven children, said yesterday.

The house is located at 1149 12th-pl. n. near the scene of two bombings last April. One of the other bombed houses still is vacant.

Most all the houses in the 1100 block of 12th-pl now are vacant or occupied by Negroes.

Mrs. Prince bought the house about a month ago and had planned to move in Thursday.

Several sticks of dynamite were shoved through a ventilator on the north side of the house.

The blast ripped up the floor in a rear bedroom, blew a large hole in the brick foundation and tore apart the northeast corner of the house.

The explosion also knocked loose fixtures, cracked plaster, and shattered most of windows.

A door to the basement was blown out and glass was scattered 20 feet.

Detective Sgts. Tom Cook and C. E. Pitts, who made the initial investigation, said several pieces of dynamite were found in the debris in the basement.

Yesterday, Det. L. E. Parker found a complete stick of dynamite and a piece of black tape which apparently was wrapped around the dynamite.

The explosion was heard for several blocks and was reported to police at about 11 p.m. Saturday.

"I was at the house cleaning up last week when a white man told me they didn't want any undesirable people in the neighborhood," Mrs. Prince said.

"I hadn't heard anything of the previous bombings because if I had, I wouldn't have bought the house," she said.

"The white man told me, while I was standing in the yard, that I wouldn't be happy if I moved into the house," she remarked.

"At the time I didn't understand what he meant, but I sure do now," Mrs. Prince said.

One of the boys of the Prince family looked at the damaged corner of the house and said, 'I don't guess we'll move into it now."

Birmingham Home Bombed

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 20 (AP) —An unoccupied house which a Negro family had purchased in a former all - white neighborhood was damaged heavily by a bomb last night.

Two other houses in the same section were bombed last April after being sold to Negroes.

"I hadn't heard anything of the previous bombings because if I had, I sure wouldn't have bought the house," said Mrs. Cleo Prince.

Mrs. Prince said that while she was cleaning the house preparatory to moving in a white man told her she wouldn't be happy if she occupied the house.

Police said several sticks of dynamite were shoved through a ventilator on a side of the house. The blast ripped up floor boards in a rear bedroom, blew a large hole in the brick foundation and opened a hole in a corner of the frame building.

Explosions Shatter Birmingham Home

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Two dynamite explosions shattered a Negro family's future home here Saturday, police said.

The house had been purchased by Robert Greer who was asked to wait until city officials completed an inspection of the premises as required by law before he moved into the frame building.

The dynamiting was one in a series which have occurred since Negroes began moving into Fountain Heights, a former all-white section.

The Greer residence was virtually wrecked, police said.

Blasts Rip House Sold to Negroes

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 7 (AP) — Two dynamite blasts today ripped a vacant house which had reportedly been purchased by Negroes in a white neighborhood. Some nearby residents said they were almost thrown from their beds.

Fire Marshal Aaron Rosenfeld said the dynamiters apparently set one charge at the front part of the house and another in the rear. Mr. Rosenfeld said all but one room was demolished.

Dynamite blast rips Negro home

Police searched for clues today in the bombing of a Fountain Heights home purchased by a Negro woman in a former all-white Fountain Heights residential section.

The house, at 1149 12th-pl. n., was heavily damaged by several sticks of dynamite tossed into its basement late Saturday night.

It is near two other homes on the street which were dynamited last April.

Mrs. Cleo Prince, mother of seven children, purchased the home last month. She had planned to move in Thursday.

POLICE SAID the bombers apparently shoved several sticks of dynamite through a ventilator on the north side of the house.

The explosion tore up the floor in the rear bedroom of the house, knocked a big hole in the brick foundation and tore loose the northeast corner of the home. Windows in the home were shattered, plaster was loosened and fixtures were damaged.

Detectives making the initial investigation found several pieces of dynamite in the basement. Yesterday, Det. E. L. Parker found a full stick of dynamite which had failed to explode.

Mrs. Prince said she had not heard of the previous bombings on the street. "If I had, I would not have bought the house," she said.

She said that when she was cleaning the house last week a white man warned her "they didn't want any undesirable people in the neighborhood." The white man told me, while I was standing in the yard, that I would not be happy if I moved into the house. At the time I didn't understand what he meant, but I sure do now."

Flames swept through a Fountain Heights residence early Saturday causing damage estimated at $1000.

The house, recently purchased by a Negro woman, was the house that was dynamited Oct. 19.

FIRE MARSHAL A. Rosenfeld said the fire was "definitely an act of arson."

The house is owned by Mrs. Cleo Prince, Capt. J. W. Garrison said.

There was no one in the house at the time of the fire.

A can containing lighter fluid and paint thinner was found in the back yard of the house at 1149 12th-pl. n.

"The fire began in the basement and spread throughout the entire house," Rosenfeld said.

"After lighting the fluids, the arsonist apparently ran from the basement through a door leading into the back yard where the intruder dropped the can," Rosenfeld said.

NEIGHBORS SAID they saw no one around the house before the fire.

Firemen battled the flames for nearly 30 minutes.

The only reason the blaze didn't spread to the front of the house was because there were no air holes to fan the flames," Rosenfeld said.

The fire gutted the basement area, worked up into a rear bedroom and then spread throughout the back section of the frame structure.

MRS. PRINCE had planned to move into the house Oct. 24, but was delayed when the dynamite weakened several beams.

The Negro woman told detectives at the time of the dynamiting that a white man had approached her and said they "didn't want any undesirable persons in the neighborhood."

The tense Council meeting was held Monday night. An angry discussion centered around the possibility the fire was the work of an anti-Negro individual. New York N.Y.

Councilmen and Mayor Con Miller expressed regret at the fire, which they termed unfortunate and expressed sympathy for the family. Territorial police today said the fire appeared to have been set deliberately while the family was away from home.

Group To Move Negroes North Ready For Fight On Curbs

ATLANTA, Nov. 2 (UP)— The American Resettlement Foundation announced today it is looking for homes in exclusive neighborhoods of the non-south for at least 50 Negro families.

The group warned it is prepared to fight in court any effort to stop the purchases or the occupancy of the homes by Negroes.

This latest plan in the Deep South cold war against forces promoting racial integration evolved as the idea of a Georgia chicken farmer. It is now in full bloom as a going corporation.

Although cloaked in words that do not include anywhere the word "Negro", it's easy to read between the lines of its charter and discover its real purpose: To pressure liberal elements into soft pedaling further attempts to desegregate the South.

SPOTS SINGLED OUT

The sponsors contend there are numerous fashionable residential areas of the non-South where either in writing or by agreement Negroes are excluded. Those spots will be singled out for the resettlement. If a nationally-prominent figure lives nearby, so much the better for the foundation's purpose.

This non-profit corporation was chartered less than a month ago "to assist underprivileged persons to obtain adequate housing."

But the real intent behind the foundation is to hurl the charge of racial discrimination right into the faces of prominent white non-southerners who have been active in the civil rights campaign.

At this stage of the organization, the strategy of the founders appears to be: To encourage rumors that they are buying property for Negro resettlement in exclusive non - southern neighborhoods and, on occasion, actually plank down money for options.

$3,000 RAISED

So far the group has raised only about $3,000, not even enough to pay the customary 5 per cent earnest money for an option on a really-swanky layout.

The foundation was chartered Oct. 10, listing three founders in the front lines of Georgia's segregation camp:

Alpha Alsbury Fowler, Jr., legislator, former adjutant general and guiding spirit of the movemen. He first came into prominence in Georgia as a wartime B17 squadron commander who nursed his plane home from Vienna with two engines shot out. He raises chickens and runs theaters for a living.

Alan Kemper, professional politician now serving as state welfare director; also weekly newspaper editor.

Roy V. Harris, long known as a governor-maker in the state; current president of Georgia States Rights Council; publisher of a private paper playing up his racial views.

"This is as good as Little Rock," Harris said as the headlines grew bigger over published reports the group had optioned a $75,000 home near Vice President Richard Nixon's and would move in a Negro family with 15 children. The report was later denied, but only after it had a full day's buildup.

Although not averse to publicity, the resettlement bosses are not in it just for that.

"One of the great tragedies of race relations is the fact that many advocate integration and practice segregation," Flower said. "We intend to point up the hypocrisy and low state to which both political parties are sinking on this subject."

Fowler said the intent of his movement is to expose real estate covenants in non-southern cities that forbid Negroes to buy homes certain areas although state laws prohibit segregation.

He contends such covenants are in force in disregard to the Supreme Court decisions outlawing such covenants.

"We intend to go into the northern courts whenever the chance arises and fight to the finish to gain the admission of Negroes to white areas," he said.

He claimed at least 50 Negro families have applied to the foundation for "resettlement."

Plan To Move Negroes North 'Snow Balling'

ATLANTA, Aug. 31 (AP)—State Rep. Alpha A. Fowler Jr. said here his play to set up a special commission to resettle Southern Negroes in predominantly white neighborhoods in the North is "snow balling."

Fowler expressed surprise at the response he got from outside the South. He estimated he has received between 200 and 300 letters, cards and telegrams from New York to California as a result of a story on his proposal.

He said, too, that members of the Georgia Legislature have shown a great deal of interest. "From the response I've heard from members of the House of Representatives, I predict the measure will have 103 signers when it is introduced in January," he said. That number would almost automatically insure its passage in the lower chamber.

That other Southern states might follow suit in organizing a commission similar to that proposed for Georgia was indicated by State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Tuskegee, Ala.

PLANS RESOLUTION

Engelhardt said he plans to offer a resolution in the Alabama Legislature tomorrow to set up a committee to study Fowler's plan. He said it is too late now to offer a bill creating a real estate commission because there are only four legislative days left in this session.

Fowler, a Democrat but an independent in Georgia's political factions, proposes to create a state real estate commission that would be empowered to send agents into the North to buy up property which would be leased or sold to "carefully screened worthy and qualified" citizens or former citizens of Georgia. He said they would be Negroes, but this is not mentioned in the proposal.

The young legislator said the proposal is not designed as "hate legislation," but rather to show those in the North advocating racial integration that "it could happen to them."

DONATIONS OFFERED

Among the letters he received in response to his proposal were several offering donations.

Fowler said no contributions were wanted "at the present time, but after the commission is set up by the Georgia Legislature and becomes an official state agency, I'm sure it would welcome all contributions from patriotic citizens in the South, North and West."

Only one of the letters expressed opposition to the plan Fowler said, and it was unsigned. The writer, from New Bedford, Mass., asked if Fowler did not "think it would be rather underhanded to 'quietly buy up property' in the North to send your Negro population up here."

NEGRO BALLPLAYER BUYING $37,500 HOME: The house, on Miraloma Drive San Francisco. Its owner, Walter A. Gnesdiloff agreed yesterday to sell it to Willi Mays. Earlier he had declined to sell, saying he was under pressure from neighborhood

WILLIE MAYS, world-famed center fielder of the New San Francisco Giants, signs purchase papers for swank home with his wife, Marghuerite, as the builder, Walter A. Gnesdiloff, looks on. Mays was first told he could not buy the home, located in a plush residential section of San Francisco. INP

Negro Athlete Arranges to Buy Coast Dwelling After Race Issue Cancels Deal

By The Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 14—Willie Mays, Negro baseball star, arranged to buy a $37,500 house today after pressure from white neighbors had apparently canceled the deal.

Mr. Mays is the center fielder for the Giants, the National League team that has moved from New York to San Francisco.

The house that the athlete and his wife will occupy is in the Miraloma section of San Francisco. Miraloma adjoins St. Francis Wood, an exclusive community in the western hills of the city.

MODEL HOME near exclusive St. Francis Wood section of San Francisco, for which Giants' outfielder Willie Mays offer of $37,000 was first refused. Neighborhood pressure was blamed for rejection of Willie's offer, which was the asking price on the house. Mays was sold the house after San Francisco Mayor Christopher invited the Mays family to live with him until they found a home.

Walter A. Gnesdiloff, who owns the property, said:

"I had several other offers, but Willie's was the first and I decided it should be 'first come, first served.'

Neighbors' Pressure Cited

"The opposition from neighbors is practically all over. Some people just don't understand."

Mr. Gnesdiloff said earlier that he had turned down Mr. Mays originally because of heavy pressure that had been put on him by the neighborhood.

"The people of San Francisco want him to live here, so we decided to let him have it," Mr. Gnesdiloff declared.

Only thirty minutes earlier Mrs. Gnesdiloff said that she and her husband were undecided. She said that they had had two other firm offers.

The San Francisco branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People estimated that San Francisco's population of 810,000 included 60,000 Negroes.

After today's disclosure that Mr. Mays' offer to buy the house had been rejected because of his color, civic officials moved hastily to try to help him.

Edward Howden, executive director of the San Francisco Council for Civic Unity, announced that Mr. Gnesdiloff had agreed to sell the house to Mr. Mays and his wife.

Feared a Boycott

Mr. Gnesdiloff had said he was afraid that if he sold to a Negro in the all-white neighborhood he might be denied work. He is a home builder.

When he heard of Mr. Howden's report, Mr. Mays said that he hoped to complete the deal at once. He said he planned to return to New York with his wife in a few days to dispose of the home they own there.

"It's a nice place, with a good view and we want to live here," Mr. Mays said of the home he is buying. It is a new dwelling on a high hillside.

Mrs. Mays said the original rejection by Mr. Gnesdiloff had been the second such incident in San Francisco since the Giants moved to the West Coast.

Mayor George Christopher expressed his personal regrets to Mr. and Mrs. Mays. He invited them to stay as guests in his home until they found suitable housing.

But Mr. Mays said he and his wife would continue to stay with Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Henderson until they left for New York. Mrs. Henderson is Mrs. Mays's cousin.

Not Even an American

Mrs. Mays said she had been told that one of the neighbors most strongly opposed—to the transaction was "a foreigner—not even an American.

"We were born in the United States and this is our country, yet this man raises objections to us," Mrs. Mays said.

The other rejection they encountered occurred about two weeks ago. Mrs. Mays said she had advanced $100 as a binder, but that the deal had fallen through. She said that she had put up $500 and had a signed contract with a realtor for the Miraloma property.

Before the issue was resolved, Mr. Mays had some strong comments about concealed race prejudice in Northern and Western cities.

"It is worse than down South, where you know where you stand and there are signs to go by," he said. "Here you walk into these things blindly and have no signs to guide you."

At City Hall, Supervisor Francis McCarty, who campaigned for years to bring major league baseball to San Francisco, said:

"I think it's a shame that an incident such as this has arisen in San Francisco. I don't believe it typifies the feeling of the overwhelming majority of our people."

Mayor Christopher concurred

Jackie Robinson Comments

Jackie Robinson, the first Negro to break major league baseball's color barrier, said yesterday that the episode would "hurt America overseas and unite the Negro at home."

"We've got to wake up here in America," Mr. Robinson said. "In India and in the Communist countries this is going to be played up. It's going to hurt."

Mr. Robinson, now an executive in the Chock Full o' Nuts restaurant chain, said he and his family had had "a few similar housing problems out in Stamford [Conn.], but they were ironed out because the thinking people of the town went out and found a place for us."

Water Service Cut Off

CHICAGO, Nov. 14 (AP)—A Superior Court judge told the village of Maywood today to supply water to a Negro family until the court settled the question of whether the water had been turned off because they are Negroes.

The Superior Court suit was brought by Mr. and Mrs. Jessie Carmichael. They contend that officials of the suburban community denied them water because of their race.

But the village counsel, Louis Ancel, said that violations of ordinances governing new dwellings—not the race question—were at issue.

Mr. Carmichael told judge Norman C. Barry that he and his family had moved in to the house, in a racially mixed section, Saturday night and had had water service until Monday.

Mr. Ancel said city ordinances required that applications for a building permit and water service be made by the "person who will receive the service and who will be billed for it."

Mr. Ancel said that applications for the building permit and water service at the Carmichaels' house had been made by Joseph R. Willens, president of the Builders Supply and Lumber Co., which constructed the home.

TALE OF COAST BIAS AIDS CEYLON WOMAN

Times

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 23—For almost three years, racial prejudice prevented a Ceylonese woman physician from finding an apartment here. Her story was printed in local newspapers today, and she was overwhelmed with offers of apartments.

Dr. Ritasarini Moises, 24-year-old daughter of a physician in Ceylon, was graduated from the University of California at Berkeley. She returned home for her medical degree. In 1954 she came back to work under a pathology fellowship at the University of California Medical School.

Because of her color, Dr. Moises said, she could find no decent housing. Recently she had been staying in a room at the American Academy of Asian Studies.

"We in Ceylon," Dr. Moises said, "think of America as utopia, where everyone has freedom and equality of opportunity. I knew there were racial problems here but I did not think they would apply to me.

"I confess that now I have mixed feelings about liberty and equality, feelings I try to control, but it is difficult to be philosophical when you are in trouble."

A secretary of the Council for Civic Unity, said telephones had rung all day with offers of housing for the physician. "Some of the callers offered room and board without charge," she said.

Mob In California Forces Negro Out Of Neighborhood

Advocate

Los Angeles, Jan. 29—A Negro Air Force officer, reportedly a graduate of West Point, and his expectant wife, were discouraged from buying a home in Garden Grove, mushrooming new town of some 50,000 residents in Orange county, last Friday night by a mob which gathered on the street corner, near the house to sign a petition against the sale.

Courageously, young Lieut. Harold Baudoit went out to Garden Grove with his wife to confront the group apparently in an effort to persuade his prospective neighbors that he wouldn't be a bad neighbor.

Happy Ending!

• Negro Airman and Wife, Rebuffed by Hate Group, Welcomed to New Home By White Neighbors in Los Angeles

Pittsburgh Pa.

LOS ANGELES—The case of the Air Force lieutenant who was rebuffed by a band of white racists in Garden Grove had a happy ending when he was welcomed in his new home by his Nordic neighbors.

Lieut. Harold Budoit and his wife Martie moved into their recently purchased $16,000 home despite efforts of white supremacists to scare them away.

"Once we were undecided on what we would do," Lieutenant Budoit explained. "I guess they assumed we were frightened when we saw the opposition. But they were wrong.

"We only want to be a part of the community," he added. "We're not interested in pioneering or crusading. We just want to live here quietly and peacefully . . . and we have no bitterness against anyone for anything."

WHEN THE news leaked out that the Budoit family had purchased a home, a group of race-haters held a protest mass meeting. But most of the community was unimpressed. They had once felt the rebuff of the whole U. S. when they opposed the moving-in of Olympic champion Sammy Lee . . . and repented.

So this time the neighbors welcomed the Budoits. Five neighbors united to cook a dinner in honor of the newcomers. Another baked a cake. Many well-wishers, including pastors of local churches, visited their home and also placed an ad in the local paper which read:

"We believe we are not to harass, vex or oppress a stranger who comes to live in our midst as a law-abiding citizen!"

Racists protest, Navy officer gives up home

Afro-American Sat. 2-2-57

LOS ANGELES — (ANP) — Following a weekend of violent protest by white racists over their occupation of a newly-purchased home in Garden Grove here, a young naval officer and his expectant wife gave up their home without ever moving in.

Baltimore Md.

Air lieutenant Harold Baudoit had purchased the home from a white naval officer he was succeeding in a recruiting assignment at Long Beach, but decided not to occupy the house after whites gathered in a mob on a street corner near the house to petition against the sale.

The young Navy officer faced the mob and tried to persuade his prospective neighbors that he wouldn't be a bad neighbor, but to no avail.

AN ORANGE COUNTY sheriff's spokesman said the Lt. Baudoit had arranged an amicable settlement with Captain Eugene Schwartz, the officer from whom he bought the house. The spokesman said Lt. Baudoit would withdraw from the sale and buy closer to the Long Beach Air base.

The incident was the second racial disturbance in Orange County in the past five months. Last August, the home of Gerald Harris, in Placentia, was bombed by racists. No one was hurt and the Harris family is still in Placentia.

Hectic Day in Frisco

Mays Obtains Home, Averts Racial Snub

By Herald Wire Services

SAN FRANCISCO — Negro baseball star Willie Mays got his $37,500 home Thursday after a hectic day in which the race issue raised by neighbors was overcome.

"I had several other offers, but Willie's was the first and I decided it should be 'first come, first served.'" Walter A. Gnesdiloff said as he accepted a check to close the deal.

"The opposition from neighbors is practically all over. Some people just don't understand."

Gnesdiloff said he had turned down Mays originally because heavy pressure was put on him in the neighborhood.

The area adjoins exclusive St. Francis Wood in the western San Francisco hills, with a fine view looking out over the Pacific Ocean.

Only 30 minutes before, Mrs. Gnesdiloff said she and her husband were undecided. She said they had had two other firm offers.

After Thursday's disclosure that Mays' offer to buy had been rejected because of his color, civic officials hastily moved to straighten out the baseball player's difficulties.

Willie and Mrs. Mays
. . . relax at last

Edward Howden, executive director of the San Francisco Council for Civic Unity, announced Gnesdiloff had agreed to sell the house to the Mays.

Gnesdiloff had said he was afraid that if he sold to a Negro in this all-white neighborhood he might be denied work. He is a small-scale home builder.

Mays and his wife had been badly upset by the incident, which she said was their second such turndown in San Francisco since the Giants moved to the West coast.

"But I'm not mad at anyone, and I don't want to cause any trouble," Willie said.

Mays' wife, Marguerite, who had one son by a previous marriage, said she felt "very relieved.

"Down in Alabama, where we come from, you know your place. But up here it's all a lot of camouflage. They grin in your face and then decieve you."

Mayor George Christopher acted quickly when he heard of the incident and invited Mays and his wife to stay at his mansion until they could find suitable quarters.

The Mays had been staying at the home of Dr. Herbert B. Henderson since the Giants were transferred to Frisco.

Willie Mays Buys White Area Home

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 14 (UP)—Outfielder Willie Mays of the San Francisco Giants, with an assist from the mayor, succeeded today in buying a home in an all-white community.

The Negro baseball star had been rebuffed earlier when he agreed to pay the asked price of $37,500 for a three-bedroom house near the swank St. Francis Wood area. The owner, Walter A. Gnesdiloff, said pressure brought by neighborhood residents had forced him to reject Mays' offer.

Mayor George Christopher heard of the incident and acted quickly. He invited Mays and his wife to stay at his mansion until they could find suitable quarters. Then Gnesdiloff, a builder and contractor, reversed his stand and agreed to sell the house to Mays.

"I'm glad it's all over," Mays commented today. He said he never had been through anything like this before.

"But I'm not mad at anyone, and I don't want to cause any trouble," he said.

Mays' wife, Marguerite, who had one son by a previous marriage, said she felt "very relieved."

Earlier she had said, "Down in Alabama, where we come from, you know your place. But up here it's all a lot of camouflage. They grin in your face and then deceive you."

Christopher said he felt "deep personal regret at this occurrence."

The outfielder and his wife had been staying at the home of Dr. Herbert B. Henderson since the baseball team was transferred from New York to San Francisco at the end of the past season.

Willie Mays Hits Racial Snag In Buying Frisco Home

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 14 (AP)—Unrelenting pressure from neighbors kept Negro Baseball Star Willie Mays from closing a deal today to buy a $37,500 San Francisco home, despite all efforts of civic officials.

When it was disclosed that the San Francisco Giant outfielder's offer to buy the home had been rejected because of his color, civic officials hastily tried to straighten it out. At mid-day, Edward Howden, executive director of San Francisco's Council for Civic Unity, announced:

"The property owner (Walter A. Gnesdiloff) has agreed to sell the house to the Mays. He himself never had actually opposed the sale but neighbors had put so much pressure on him that he acted as he did."

Momentarily, it was thought that this settled the issue. Mays, interviewed at a relative's home, commented with relief that he hoped to complete the deal at once so he could go back to New York and dispose of a home he owns there.

"It's a nice place with a good view and we want to live there," Mays said, referring to the new three-bedroom home high on a hillside overlooking the fine residence districts of Western San Francisco, with the blue Pacific in the distance.

But it was a different story at the Gnesdiloff home, where Mrs. Gnesdiloff declared:

"We still are being pressured by the neighbors not to sell to the Mays."

She said she and her husband had had two other firm offers for the property.

"We don't know how it will come out," she said.

"The Village Realty Co. (the firm whch says it has exclusive sales rights on the property) is working on it now."

Mays and his wife were badly upset by the incident. Mrs. Mays said it was their second turndown in San Francisco since the Giants were moved to the coast.

Mayor George Christopher, outraged and embarrassed, expressed his personal regrets to the Mays and invited them to stay as his guests in his home until they find suitable housing.

But Mays said he and his wife will continue staying with Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Henderson until they leave for New York in a few days. Mrs. Henderson is Mrs. Mays' cousin.

Mrs. Mays said she put up $100 as an earnest money binder, but the deal fell through. She said she had put up $500 and had a signed contract with a realtor for the Miraloma property concerned in today's dispute.

"It is worse than down South, where you know where you stand and there are signs to go by," Mays said emphatically. "Here you walk into these things blindly and have no signs to guide you."

Survey Finds Negroes Fail to Win Acceptance in Former White Areas

Thurs. 2-7-57

By RICHARD H. PARKE

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Feb. 6—The Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights reported today that Negroes in the state failed to win complete acceptance when they moved into white neighborhoods.

In a study of 219 Negro families who purchased homes in predominantly white areas, the commission found that the Negroes were "snubbed, insulted or ignored for a considerable length of time."

"Gradually, as the stereotype becomes replaced by the reality of the individual," the report said, "there is some gradual acceptance. But while the original 'annoyance' at having a Negro family disappears, white neighbors make it clear that they would again be annoyed if another Negro family moved in."

Seventy-five per cent of 390 white neighbors interviewed reported they engaged in no activities whatever with Negro neighbors within the home. Only 2 per cent of the whites said they ever had dinner with the Negroes and activities, such as bridge or other parties, were virtually non-existent, the study disclosed.

The survey, which was made here and in twelve other communities, found that developers "simply do not sell lots or houses to Negroes in new, private residential developments."

If a Negro wants a new home, the commission said, he must either build it for himself or purchase it through an intermediary.

"According to the Negro families interviewed," the report said, "their troubles were not over when they purchased their homes.

"Thirty-seven per cent met some kind of opposition; 15 per cent were subjected to insulting remarks and 14 per cent were the object of petitions.

"There were, however, few acts of violence. Three per cent reported that windows were broken or fires set on the premises. There were no attempts at personal violence.

"There were few if any instances where Negro families were forced to leave because of intolerable opposition from the neighborhood, even though there were many instances of continuing opposition from individual neighbors."

Connecticut Integration Held Faulty

STAMFORD, Conn., Feb. 6—The Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights reported today that Negroes in the state failed to win complete acceptance when they moved into white neighborhoods.

In a study of 219 Negro families who purchased homes in predominantly white areas, the commission found that they were "snubbed, insulted or ignored for a considerable length of time."

"Gradually, as the stereotype becomes replaced by the reality of the individual," the report said, "there is some gradual acceptance. But while the original 'annoyance' at having a Negro family disappears, white neighbors make it clear that they would again be annoyed if another Negro family moved in."

NO HOME ACTIVITIES

Seventy-five per cent of 390 white neighbors interviewed reported they engaged in no within-the-home activities with Negro neighbors. Only 2 per cent of the whites said they ever had dinner with the Negroes and activities such as bridge or other parties were virtually non-existent, the study disclosed.

The survey, which was made here and in 12 other communities, found that developers "simply do not sell lots or houses to Negroes in new, private residential developments." If the Negro wants a new home, the commission said, he must either build it for himself or purchase it through an intermediary.

"According to the Negro families interviewed," the report said, "their troubles were not over when they purchased their homes. Thirty-seven per cent met some kind of opposition; 15 per cent were subjected to insulting remarks and 14 per cent were the object of petitions.

BUT LITTLE VIOLENCE

"There were, however, few acts of violence. Three per cent reported that windows were broken or fires set on the premises. There were no attempts at personal violence. There were few if any instances where Negro families were forced to leave because of intolerable opposition from the neighborhood, even though there were many instances of continuing opposition from individual neighbors."

Dr. Allen F. Jackson, commission chairman, commented that the survey showed that Connecticut "is still far removed from perfection in its treatment of Negro families and that the same element of suspicion, the same belief in stereotypes that hamper desegregation in the South are also present here in impeding integration of Negroes."

Nixon Role Is Denied In Racial Restrictions

38 c to c

Washington, Nov. 7 (UP)—A spokesman for Vice-President Nixon denied Thursday a Georgian's charge that Nixon was a party to an agreement barring Negroes and Jews from buying or renting property in his neighborhood.

The charge was made last week by Georgia Representative A. A. Fowler, Jr., of the American Resettlement Foundation. The all-white group says it wants to "relocate" low-income Southern Negro families in swank white sections of Northern cities.

Negro, Jewish Bars Charged

Fowler said his group had hoped to buy a house in Nixon's neighborhood, the fashionable Wesley Heights section of Washington, to give the Vice-President a chance to "practice what he preaches" about racial integration.

But he told newsmen that Nixon's neighborhood was covered by a "binding covenant" that forbids use of property in the area by Negroes or Jews. Fowler chided the Vice-President for entering into such an agreement.

P. 16

Herald 11-8-57

Charles K. McWhorter, Nixon's legislative assistant, replied in a statement Thursday that "there is no restrictive covenant in the deed or in the contract of purchase" signed by Nixon when he purchased his $75,000 home earlier this year.

Some 'Run With Land'

McWhorter conceded that "certain restrictive covenants purport to run with the land in the area of the Vice-President's home, as in many other areas of Washington."

But he said that "the effect of these covenants (which were not signed by the Vice-President) was nullified since their enforcement was outlawed by decisions of the United States Supreme Court in May, 1948."

At that time, the high court held that the courts cannot be used to enforce these racial covenants. It subsequently ruled in 1953 that persons who violate these agreements cannot be sued for damages.

REFUSAL TO SIGN A RACIAL COVENANT COSTS GEN. HOUSE

Covenant 'Illegally' Bars Negroes, Jews And Asiatics

B'ham, Ala.

BY RUTH MONTGOMERY

International News Service Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther currently is homeless because he has adamantly refused to sign a covenant barring re-sale to Jews, Negroes and Asiatics.

An unimpeachable source told this correspondent that this is the sole stumbling block which has held up sale of a $70,000 house to the American Red Cross for the residence of its new president.

38c

The 14-room French provincial type house is located in Washington's Spring Valley suburban area which boasts such distinguished residents as Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Nixon's defeated rival Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee and Kefauver's unsuccessful 1952 vice presidential contender, Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama.

SIGNED COVENANT

Those three politicians not only signed the controversial covenant which the Supreme Court has since declared unconstitutional, but had their signatures aired to public view during the '52 and '56 presidential campaigns. Mrs. Perle Mesta, party hostess and former minister to Luxembourg, also owns a house in Spring Valley.

Gruenther, who is flatly opposed to putting his name to a covenant which he regards as "outrageous," currently is living with packed suitcases and rolled-up rugs. He had planned to move from Ft. McNair to Spring Valley this week, when the W. C. and A. N. Miller development company suddenly slapped an injunction on the sale.

ANOTHER REASON

James E. Earnest, an attorney for the Realtors, insisted that the company halted the deal because of a policy against "approving a sale to a corporation."

An informant, pointing out that several other corporations already own Spring Valley residences for their executives, declared that the real reason was Gruenther's aversion to the covenant.

"Al simply does not believe in racial and religious discrimination," he said. "When he was handed the covenant to sign, he made it abundantly clear that he would never put his name to it."

He said the question is purely legalistic, since the Red Cross has no intention of putting the house up for re-sale in the foreseeable future.

"People kept telling Al that the covenant doesn't mean anything," the source said, "but it does to Al. Even though it wouldn't hold water in court, the General refuses to become a party to such a discriminatory covenant."

COVENANT PLEDGES

The covenant pledges the owner to refrain from selling his house to any but approved members of the white race and christian faith.

This correspondent learned that a similar case arose a few weeks ago when General Motors Corp. purchased a $60,000 house in Spring Valley for the use of a Washington representative.

A company attorney, however, in reading the fine print discovered the covenant agreement and turned a firm thumbs-down.

Nixon, who has recently purchased a $75,000 house in the Wesley Heights section of Washington, presumably had to sign a similar covenant, since that area is also restricted against Jews, Negroes and members of the yellow race.

A top source disclosed that Gruenther, before agreeing to purchase the Spring Valley residence belonging to Henry W. Beardsley, a Pan American Airlines executive, also had shopped in Wesley Heights and discovered the identical restrictions there.

James E. Earnest, an attorney for the realtors, insisted that the company halted the deal because of a policy against "approving a sale to a corporation."

An informant, pointing out that several other corporations already own Spring Valley residences for their executives, declared that the real reason was Gruenther's aversion to the covenant.

"Al simply does not believe in racial and religious discrimination," he said. "When he was handed the covenant to sign, he made it abundantly clear that he would never put his name to it."

The covenant pledges the owner to refrain from selling his house to any but approved members of the white race and Christian faith.

Nixon, who has recently purchased a $75,000 house in the Wesley Heights section of Washington, presumably had to sign a similar covenant, since that area is also restricted against Jews, Negroes and members of the yellow race.

A top source disclosed that Gruenther, before agreeing to purchase the Spring Valley residence belonging to Henry W. Beardsley, a Pan American Airlines executive, also had shopped in Wesley Heights and discovered the identical restrictions there.

He said Gruenther will live in an apartment before he will agree to such discrimination. The Red Cross which welcomes money from all sources, also would refuse to sign a restrictive covenant, he added.

Covenant 'Illegally' Bars Negroes, Jews And Asiatics

Daily World Fri. 2-1-57
Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

BY RUTH MONTGOMERY

International News Service Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther currently is homeless because he has adamantly refused to sign a covenant barring re-sale to Jews, Negroes and Asiatics.

An unimpeachable source told this correspondent that this is the sole stumbling block which has held up sale of a $70,000 house to the American Red Cross for the residence of its new president.

The 14-room French provincial type house is located in Washington's Spring Valley suburban area which boasts such distinguished residents as Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Nixon's defeated rival, Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, and Kefauver's unsuccessful 1952 vice presidential contender, Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama.

SIGNED COVENANT

Those three politicians not only signed the controversial covenant which the Supreme Court has since declared unconstitutional, but had their signatures aired to public view during the '52 and '56 presidential campaigns. Mrs. Perle Mesta, party hostess and former minister to Luxembourg, also owns a house in Spring Valley.

Gruenther, who is flatly opposed to putting his name to a covenant which he regards as "outrageous," currently is living with packed suitcases and rolled-up rugs. He had planned to move from Ft. McNair to Spring Valley this week, when the W. C. and A. N. Miller development company suddenly slapped an injunction on the sale.

ANOTHER REASON

James E. Earnest, an attorney for the Realtors, insisted that the company halted the deal because of a policy against "approving a sale to a corporation."

An informant, pointing out that several other corporations already own Spring Valley residences for their executives, declared that the real reason was Gruenther's aversion to the covenant.

"Al simply does not believe in racial and religious discrimination," he said. "When he was handed the covenant to sign, he made it abundantly clear that he would never put his name to it."

He said the question is purely legalistic, since the Red Cross has no intention of putting the house up for re-sale in the foreseeable future.

"People kept telling Al that the covenant doesn't mean anything," the source said, "but it does to Al. Even though it wouldn't hold water in court, the General refuses to become a party to such a discriminatory covenant."

COVENANT PLEDGES

The covenant pledges the owner to refrain from selling his house to any but approved members of the white race and christian faith.

This correspondent learned that a similar case arose a few weeks ago when General Motors Corp. purchased a $60,000 house in Spring Valley for the use of a Washington representative.

A company attorney, however, in reading the fine print discovered the covenant agreement and turned a firm thumbs-down.

Nixon, who has recently purchased a $75,000 house in the Wesley Heights section of Washington, presumably had to sign a similar covenant, since that area is also restricted against Jews, Negroes and members of the yellow race.

A top source disclosed that Gruenther, before agreeing to purchase the Spring Valley residence belonging to Henry W. Beardsley, a Pan American Airlines executive, also had shopped in Wesley Heights and discovered the identical restrictions there.

He said Gruenther will live in an apartment before he will agree to such discrimination. The Red Cross which welcomes money from all sources, also would refuse to sign a restrictive covenant, he added.

3 Prominent Residents Of Spring Valley Balked Over Racial Covenants

Post & Times Herald
Washington, D. C.
Sat. 2-2-57 P. 1-B

By Jean White
Staff Reporter

Three prominent residents of the exclusive Spring Valley section have taken stands against racial covenants on their properties, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said yesterday.

The League's statement came after the W. C. and A. N. Miller Development Co., developers of the plush residential area, temporarily blocked sale of a 14-room Spring Valley house.

The American National Red Cross wants to buy the $70,000 home at 4915 Glenbrook rd. nw. as a residence for its new president, Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther.

Both the developers and the Red Cross have said the racial convenant — ruled unenforceable by the Supreme Court eight years ago—did not kick off the controversy.

Only Issue

A. N. Miller, president of the Miller Company, emphasized again yesterday that the only issue is another covenant clause requiring prior approval of the developers of any sale. Such approval was skipped in the Red Cross transaction, he said.

General Gruenther, who flew back to Washington yesterday from Miami, told reporters he would sign a "valid covenant." A Red Cross spokesman later explained that this would mean a covenant legally recognized, ruling out racial and religious clauses declared unenforceable under the Supreme Court decision.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon took a similar stand in a letter to the Anti-Defamation League last October. Nixon, who came under fire in the 1952 campaign along with Democratic Senators Estes Kefauver and Sen. John Sparkman for living in covenant covered property, wrote the League:

"I have never considered that the covenant was binding on me or my neighbors. The whole idea of segregation and restrictive covenants is repugnant to the American concept of equality."

Why Nixon Signed

Nixon said he signed the standard deed form used by the developers for his Spring Valley home at 4801 Tilden st. nw. No deed has yet been filed on the Nixon's new home, 4308 Forest lane nw. This is in the Wesley Heights area and presumably also is covered by a racial covenant.

The Anti-Defamation League said both Senator Kefauver and Oscar Chapman, former interior secretary, refused to accept the standard deed form until the racial clause was dropped.

Mrs. Chapman filed an affidavit in the Office of the Recorder of Deeds, rejecting the racial and religious clause held "unenforceable as violative of the public policy of the United States."

The high court ruled in 1948 that home owners could make private agreements among themselves, but could not call upon the courts to enforce them. Although unenforceable, the clause still is carried on the deeds.

What Clause Says

The racial and religious clause forbids renting or selling property to any person of Negro blood or the Semitic race, which includes "Armenians, Jews, Hebrews, Persians, and Syrians," except domestic servants.

Attorneys failed to reach a settlement on the Red Cross sale yesterday. Gen. Gruenther was busy preparing to take off this morning to fly over the flood-ravaged areas of Kentucky, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Miller said he has a policy against selling a house to a "corporation." This, he said, prompted the company to seek the temporary injunction halting the sale.

The Red Cross has emphasized that no public funds will be used to purchase the home. The money comes from a fund set up 28 years ago by 70 businessmen.

Nixon doesn't want the question raised

WASHINGTON

The daily papers have been mutely silent about it. But one of the reasons Vice President Richard Nixon bought a new house was the restrictive convenant clause in the deed of the one he sold.

The Vice President doesn't want this question raised as a campaign issue when he makes his big bid for the White House.

But there are a number of high governmental officials in the area where Nixon formerly lived. All homes there are covered by the agreement, which bars residents on a basis of race, color and religion.

However, the restrictive covenant issue may rate some headlines anyway. Among others interested in it is an influential person in the office of Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, of New York.

At Negro Home in White Section

Kasper Aide, Three Others Arrested At Cross-Burning Attempt in Miami

MIAMI, Feb. 24 (UP)—A White Citizens Council official, described as an associate of segregationist Frederick John Kasper in recent Tennessee racial troubles, was arrested with three other men here last night while attempting to erect a kerosene-soaked cross at the home of a Negro family living in a white district.

Fred B. Hockett, 51, an official of the Seaboard Citizens Council at Clinton, Tenn., and described by police as Kasper's "right hand man," was putting up the 7-foot cross when arrested.

Also taken into custody were three Miamians — Frank L. Foster Jr., 29, an aircraft mechanic, James N. McSweeney, 45, a plumber, and Hampton E. Shaver, 47, an unemployed baker.

The men were charged with disorderly conduct and trespassing and released on $500 bond today. Further charges were expected either by the city or state.

The four men were found with the kerosene-soaked cross just before midnight. They were attempting to burn it at the home of a Negro, Frank Legree, who had recently moved into a white district in northwest Miami.

Hockett told police he took an active part in the recent trouble at Clinton and said he was an official of the Seaboard Citizens Council.

Kasper, 27, executive secretary of the SCC, was instrumental in fanning the racial fires in the Clinton episode.

The Washington, D. C., segregationist is now free in $10,000 bond pending an appeal to a sentence for criminal contempt. Kasper twice was acquitted on charges of inciting to riot in the Clinton outbreaks.

Hockett, who has been speaking at neighborhood rallies here where there has been tension over the Negro family's move to a white district, said he is now a "permanent" resident of Miami. He is living in a house trailer here.

The arrests occurred shortly after a daylong picketing at the home of the Legrees. Legree is an entertainer.

Racial Picketers Given Continuance Of Trial In Miami

Daily World Fri. 3-29-57 P.1 Atlanta Ga.

MIAMI, — (INS) — The attorney for six white persons arrested while picketing the home of a Miami Negro entertainer won a continuance of their trial Thursday to April 12.

Municipal Judge Henry L. Balaban granted Attorney J. T. Gordon a request for continuance in the case. The six defendants were arrested for picketing the home of Frank Legree, who had moved into a previously all-white neighborhood.

Segregationist Fred P. Hockett was also arrested for demonstrating in front of Legree's home and his trial will be held April 9 in Municipal Judge Mitchell Goldman's courtroom.

Judge Orders Pickets Away From Negro Home

Miami Fla. P. 1-B

Six white persons were told Friday to stay away from the home of Frank Legree, Negro entertainer who lives in an all-white district, or face jail sentences and fines.

City Judge Henry L. Balban found the six defendants, three men and three women, guilty of disorderly conduct by picketing in front of Legree's home at 1455 NW 55th St.

Found guilty were Mrs. Elsie Foster, 28, 2710 SW 80th Ave.; Mrs. Rosa Lee Campbell, 45, 5621 NW 13th Ave.; Mrs. Willa W. Chaple, 51, 1136 NW 55th St.; Cornelius Willard, 34, 33 NW 51st Pl.; Russell W. Brown, 50, 2351 NE 46th St.; and Jerry E. Sollenberger, 29, 4211 SW 117th Ave.

Balaban suspended 60-day sentences on condition they stay away from Legree's home.

Judge Balaban said he realized many people in the South are reluctant to accept social changes but that laws must be upheld.

Balaban added that no one has the right to take the law in his own hands.

The six were arrested on March 24 by Lt. C. Buddy Kindred and Sgt. K. E. Fox on a complaint by Legree.

Color Line Break Hit

David I. Hawthorne, staunch Dade County segregationist, led another protest meeting Thursday night against a Negro entertainer and his family who have moved into a white section.

Herald 1-25-57

About 400 Northwest residents discussed the explosive topic at a meeting at Manor Park.

Hawthorne told the group the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People "is directly behind the situation in which Frank Legree and his family moved into a house at 1455 NW 55th St."

Hawthorne said the Dade County Property Owners Assn., of which he is president, will attempt to show that the movement of the colored family into the white section "is Communist-inspired."

Whites as Well as Negroes Phoned Objections to Plan, Woman Says

THONOTOSASSA, Fla., Sept. 29 (AP) — A white woman said that whites as well as Negroes made objections to her family being shunned, for moving into a Negro neighborhood.

Mrs. Elton S. Van Riper said she got 25 threatening and obscene calls from white people, three of whom she said had threatened to dynamite her automobile and rip her clothes off.

A Florida spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said the NAACP considers . . . action by Negroes ill-advised but one of the prime factors against racial segregation has been the right for individuals to live where they choose.

". . . The Tampa branch has been advised to correct the thinking of individuals who have used the tactics of the Ku Klux Klan and the White Citizens Councils against innocent persons who seek to live by the Constitution of the United States," NAACP field secretary Robert Saunders said in a statement.

Mrs. Van Riper said white callers were critical of her and her husband for having considered moving into a Negro section in the first place.

Shots Strike Negro House

SEBRING, Fla., — Bullets were fired into an isolated Negro home near here Saturday night. The family was away and no one was hurt.

Sheriff Broward Coker said the bullets apparently came from a rifle or pistol. He said the occupant of the Negro house, whose last name is Hansen, a Sebring insurance agent, had moved into the house recently.

The home, built by a White man, is on a ranch eight miles south of here off highway U.S. 98. No other homes are near it.

Coker said he has no idea who did the shooting but is investigating.

Florida Community Negroes Object to Whites

THONOTOSASSA, Fla., Sept. 28 — County Commissioner Elbert Moore said here a white couple has decided against building a home in a Negro community after the Negroes objected.

Moore said he advised Mr. and Mrs. Elton S. Van Riper to change their plans after a group of Negroes protested to him.

Mrs. Van Riper said an anonymous man, who she is convinced is a Negro, told her over the telephone: "I just wanted to tell you not to build on that ground."

She said the man made no threat but was "positive sounding."

"I was a nervous wreck after that," she said.

She and her husband, a truck driver often away from home, then decided to put the property up for sale, although the foundation for the house had been poured.

They came here about a year ago from Kansas City, Mo., and are living in this little town about 20 miles northeast of Tampa.

Mrs. Van Riper said she is originally from Houston, Tex.

Moore said the Negroes came to him as commissioner for that section. He said he couldn't tell the Van Ripers to move but he was willing to help those Negroes stay segregated if that's what they want."

He said the Negroes "made it plain they didn't want any race mixing."

Hockett Convicted With Two Cronies In Race Incident

Herald Thurs. 3-7-57

Miami, Fla. P.1

By JAMES BUCHANAN
Herald Staff Writer

Professional race agitator Fred B. Hockett got a verbal lashing in Miami City Court Wednesday plus a $1,000 fine and a 120-day jail sentence for an attempted cross burning.

Hockett, sent here by the Seaboard White Citizens Council, was sentenced along with two of his aides while their boss, John Kasper, was on the outside looking in.

Kasper, executive secretary of the SWCC from Washington, rested in an automobile alongside the Municipal Court building while his Miami henchman was on the grill before Judge Mitchell M. Goldman.

Found guilty of unlawful assembly and also on a breach of the peace charge, Hockett drew a 60-day jail sentence and a $500 fine on each count.

Drawing the same sentences were Frank L. Foster Jr. and James N. McSwiney.

A fourth defendant, Hampton E. Shaver, was fined $100 and given 30 days in jail on each charge, but his sentence was suspended. He had turned police informer.

Hockett, McSwiney and Foster spent less than five minutes in jail.

They were freed on $1,200 appeal bonds supplied by a professional bondsman, Ed Stanton.

Their attorney, James T. Gordon, said the verdicts will be appealed as soon as possible.

Judge Goldman punctuated signing of the court orders with the statement:

"It is regrettable that the charter only lets me go so far.

"You men had complete disregard for feelings of others. This was an heinous offense.

"There is enough trouble in the world now without things like this going on."

Goldman was referring to the abortive cross-burning engineered by Hockett which was to have taken place Saturday night, Feb. 23.

The efforts of Hockett, McSwiney and Foster were stymied by their partner Shaver, who tipped off Assistant Chief of Police James Youell.

Youell was on hand with several policemen and nabbed the men as they placed the cross in the yard and sprayed it with lighter fluid.

The cross was to have been burned in the yard of the Frank Legree home at 1455 NW 55th St., where the Negro entertainer and his family had bought a home in a white neighborhood.

Kasper himself made only a brief public appearance. He arrived at 8 a.m. with Hockett and talked with reporters outside the Municipal Building. He did not enter the courtroom.

Kasper, after hearing of the judge's decision, commented, "What can you expect, the judge being a Jew. These people haven't learned that it's preposterous to let a Jew pass judgment on a Christian."

Kasper made the remarks to reporters at the home of Mrs. Rosa Campbell, 5621 NW 13th Ave.

Judge Goldman, reached at home by telphone, said he would not lend dignity to Kasper's remarks by commenting. An investigation is being made to determine if Kasper's statement constitutes contempt of court.

The court trial, expected to be a brief affair, was drawn out by repeated efforts of Gordon to have each defendant tried separately; to quash the charges against them; to get a directed verdict of acquittal; and to have the action declared a mistrial.

Gordon came closest to success when Chief Youell took onlookers by surprise by asking that charges against Shaver be dismissed.

"He cooperated with the police department," Youell said after detailing Shaver's tipoff, "and we told him we would do what we could to see that he was not prosecuted."

City Prosecutor Patrick Brady moved that the charges be dismissed, and then called Shaver as a witness.

Defense attorney Gordon protested that his clients were about to be "trapped." Judge Goldman overruled the city's motion and said Shaver would continue to stand trial.

FHA tightens anti-bias rules in New York.

FHA has stiffened its procedures to compel compliance with New York state's laws against racial discrimination. Under the old regulations, builders were just told they must conform by a rider to the mortgage insurance application form. Now, FHA will warn builders that failure to conform may bring blacklisting. Experts predict the order will further cripple FHA rental housing.

Sun 3-10-57

New York gets bill to bar bias in private housing.

A precedent-shattering bill to prohibit racial segregation in most privately-financed housing appears headed for passage by the New York State Legislature.

The measure would be the first of its kind in the nation. It would place under the state's existing "anti-discrimination" laws all multiple dwellings with three or more families and all new private homes built in developments of ten or more units. One- and two-family houses would be exempt, except where they form part of subdivisions of ten or more homes.

New York already has laws prohibiting racial segregation in publicly-aided housing (include FHA and VA projects of ten or more units on contiguous land). But up to now, conventionally financed housing has been exempt.

The new mesaure was introduced in mid-January by the authors of the existing law, Sen. George R. Metcalf (R., Auburn) and Assemblyman Bertram L. Baker (D., Brooklyn). It has the support of Gov. Averell Harriman, Mayor Robert Wagner of New York and a wide range of civic leaders and churchmen.

Backers also claim the support of home-builders. This rests on a comment by Emil Keen, last year's chairman of the Long Island Home Builders Institute and secretary of the New York State Home Builders Association at an anti-bias meeting (November, News). Keen, complaining that the existing Metcalf-Baker law hobbles volume builders while the rest of the building industry "may do as it pleases," declared: "We will be happy to support an amendment to cover all housing in New York state, in all prices, for all groups. We believe integration is here and we are in favor of it, but we don't want to be the policemen."

Public housing is building Negro ghetto, says experts.

Site selection for public housing is "perpetuating" a Negro ghetto which will "accentuate community problems."

So says an advisory committee of the Welfare Council of Metropolitan Chicago after months of studying the effect of subsidized housing on the city.

As a remedy, the committee proposed a state law eliminating the City Council's power to veto sites. It complained that the City Council rejected six of 11 sites proposed last year by the Chicago Housing Authority. Five of the rejects were in outlying (i.e., predominantly white) neighborhoods. But the committee admitted: "The City Council position stems in large part from local and neighborhood objection to public housing (in) new areas."

Chicago's 14,205 public housing units are now 76% Negro-occupied and 80% of current applicants are Negro. The report noted: "Approximately 1,700 Negroes per week are estimated to be moving to Chicago, a fair proportion of which become public housing applicants after the one-year resident requirement."

Chicago cops stop guarding scene of 1953 race riot.

Chicago police have removed the last of their round-the-clock police detail from embattled Trumbull Park Homes.

It was three and a half years ago that a clerical mistake sent a Negro family to the then all-white public housing project on Chicago's far South Side. To suppress the resulting race riots, as many as 1,200 police were detailed there to guard a handful of Negro families, 28 of whom now live in the 454-unit project.

Alabama home owners rap sale of houses to Negroes.

In Birmingham, Ala., an organization representing between 600 and 700 residents of the College Hills suburb began a drive to discourage sale of white homes to Negroes.

A petition to the Birmingham Real Estate Board asked it to "exercise some restraint on real estate people" and to let College Hills residents try to find a white buyer when a house goes up for sale.

Survey Finds That Interracial Housing Produces More Positive Approach

Y. Tm. 3-8-57

By EMMA HARRISON

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, March 7—Negroes living in racially integrated housing indicate a more positive attitude toward life and seem generally better adjusted than those in unintegrated housing, a psychological study has shown.

This tendency was shown in a preliminary survey of attitudes of 150 families in two New York City middle-income housing projects, one integrated, the other not. The result was reported by Dr. Kenneth Clark, Associate Professor of Psychology at City College, at a meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Association.

The results of this study are intended to show clinical evidence of psychological factors in segregated housing. Dr. Clark said it was part of the present effort to study effects of one type of racial segregation in a given social institution, apart from that existing in the total society.

Seventy-five families in each project were questioned on general attitudes toward jobs, neighbors and aspirations. They had been carefully selected so that their economic, educational and social backgrounds would be similar. They were not told that the questioning had anything to do with race.

Families in an integrated project in the Bronx were more satisfied with their present living conditions, with themselves, their employment and income.

In an all-Negro project in Harlem, the survey found a tendency toward frustration. Although jobs and incomes were comparable, those interviewed tended to be more preoccupied with economic security, less satisfied with their jobs and more unrealistic in their aspirations for themselves and their children.

In answer to a question about income needs, 22 per cent in the unintegrated project set unrealistically high figures; only 9 per cent in the other group did the same, the survey noted.

The survey was undertaken by the New York Area Research Council at City College with the New York Schoo of Social Work, Columbia University. It will be expanded, Dr. Clark said.

Successful integration of a mental hospital in Kansas City, Mo., was described by Dr. Milton E. Kirkpatrick of the Greater Kansas City Mental Health Foundation.

Dr. Luther E. Woodward, in his presidential address to the thirty-fourth annual meeting, stressed the group's increasing concern with social health. He said it had become increasingly clear that group behavior was basically similar to that of individuals.

Orthopsychiatry, a term meaning "straight-minded," approaches human behavior through combined medical, psychiatric, psychological and sociological treatment. The association has 1,321 members from these fields.

Housing Is Segregated In The North

Reprinted elsewhere on this page today are several sections under "Segregation" in the March, 1957, issue of House & Home magazine. This is a Henry Luce publication.

We think the facts as reported by this journal pretty well speak for themselves. They say nothing startling. They do specifically document the fact that when Negro and white housing begin to run together, or otherwise to meet, a problem in hard building dollars does arise.

We have italicized certain parts of the accompanying reprinted piece. We would draw especial attention to these:

(Editors' note: A major problem involving segregation includes the matter of housing. The adjacent section is reprinted by special permission of House & Home magazine, March issue, 1957. See editorial on this page entitled "Segregated Housing—Dixie and Yankee).

Note in the first section that if FHA requires stricter conformation with laws in New York against racial discrimination in mortgage insurance applications it will "further cripple FHA rental housing." In brief, in New York whites still resist rental housing adjacent to Negroes.

In the second section of this reprint, note that there is a proposal in a New York bill to use state authority to bar or restrict private housing which involves the matter of Negro-white relationships. For a state to enter the field of private building, and to regulate racial considerations, building involving presumably no federal aid, seems to be going very far indeed.

In this section, too, it is to be noted that Emil Keen, last year's secretary of the New York State Home Builders Association, nails down the fact that if certain parts of the home-building industry are to conform to "anti-bias" legislation, then all segments of the industry should have to conform to it.

The statement about the industry not wanting to have to be the policeman for this development seems also to be significant. We need draw no conclusion here; it is obvious.

As for the two sections in this reprinted piece dealing with Chicago, the lessons seem apparent. They are (1) that Chicago housing has been segregated, which is no surprise; the City Council obviously has been vetoing certain housing developments because they were intended to include Negroes, and now an advisory welfare committee is proposing that such veto power be eliminated.

Fact: The issue of segregation already has been prominent in decisions of the Chicago City Council in okaying projected housing sites for whites and Negroes.

The withdrawal of police in the Chicago Trumbull Park Homes area after three and a half years speaks for itself. We, however, are all but amused at the statement that it was a "clerical mistake" which first sent Negroes into that Chicago housing development. The clear deduction is that there was a studied program of excluding Negroes up until the time of this "mistake." So this Chicago development was, it follows, segregated until a "mistake" occurred.

A Birmingham news note follows. It is at the end of this summary by the magazine. That is the proper place for the item, in view of the geographical and social paramountcy of the other items. Segregation is no strictly Southern problem.

Blandtown Votes To Seek Re-Zone Of Home Section

Daily World. Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 3-30-57

The Blandtown Civic League voted Thursday to petition the City Planning Board to change the area from a M-1 business zoning to A-1 residential. The area was re-zoned from residential to business several years ago "without the knowledge or desire of th estimated 1,500 familis in the area."

The move to petition the City Planning Board was made during a meeting of the leagu at St. Peters Baptist church on Huff Road. Homeowners and residents expressed a fear of eventually being forced out of the area by the establishment of business structures if the area is not rezoned to residential.

It was also revealed at the meeting that property owners have been unable to obtain building permits to construct dwellings in the area. Several cases were cited where property owners have been dnied building permits to replace homes which had been destroyed by fire.

The league members were also urged to register to vote before the April 8th deadline by Thaddeus T. Stokes, an editorial member of the Atlanta Daily World, who spoke briefly on the merits of being a registered voter, on behalf of the "All Citizens Voters Registration Committee."

T. C. Hector, president of the Blandtown Civic League announced that the league was planning a Voters Registration dirve for the area in the immediate future.

Many Whites, Negroes Neighbors, Survey Shows

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 6-11-57

NEW YORK, — Undeniable proof that white and Negro families are living as friendly neighbors in many American communities was presented here by Dr. John A. Morsell of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Dr. Morsell, who is assistant to the NAACP executive secretary, presented a study on open occupancy housing, which he had helped to prepare, before a meeting at the New York School of Social Work. The meeting, on June 5, was sponsored by the Committee on Civil Rights in Manhattan.

The results of the nationwide housing study clearly indicated that Negroes can move into formerly all-white neighborhoods without the unfortunate consequences so often predicted; panic selling, an exodus of white residents, depreciation of market values, deterioration of property, or mob violence.

The study was conducted in 73 communities by means of a questionnarie submitted to 275 informed persons in localities where open occupancy housing was known or believed to exist. Both old and new neighborhoods were survived. Some areas were made up of multiple dwellings while others consisted of single-family homes. The proportion of Negro residents varied from small to large.

Two Houses Burn

Fire Guts One House; Arson Felt At Second

Daily World Sat. 1-19-57
Atlanta, Ga. P. 1

The two-story home of two Tatnall Street families Friday were completely destroyed and several other houses were damaged as fires from overheating and the torch of an alleged arsonist blazed in various sections of the city.

Fire struck twice at one of the damage dwellings where police said fires apparently were ign ted by an arson'st. The house occupied by Negro tenants, is located next to the home of a white family.

Police said arson is suspected in fire at 476 Windsor St. SW. The first of the two blazes at this location occurred at 10 a. m. and at that time appeared to have resulted from someone trying to thaw out water pipes. The second f re at the same house caused officers to alter their first theory.

AWAKEN BY SMOKE

Ptl. E. B. Lyle and J. T. Mitchel said the first fire was reportec during the morning by Mrs. Ruby Tucker who said she was in bed and awoke to find the house full of smoke.

Another blaze was reported by another occupant of the house Burrel Milner, 40, who said he smelled kerosene during the fire. Lt. Roy Parker of the fire department launched an invest gation to determine if the house was set afire.

TWO STORY HOUSE

A more serious fire completely destroyed a two-story frame dwelling at 554 Tatnall St., SW. The victims were identified as 65-year-old Mrs. Marie Jackson and Mrs. Mattie Turner. The idenity of other persons living there was not revealed.

The two women said they were in the rear of the house and did not know about the fire until someone came to alarm them. They started through the front but, unable to get through the flames, escaped a fiery death by way of a back door. The building was listed as the property of Elizabeth Baptist Church. It was a total loss.

Ptl. K. L. Barnes and C. E. Strickland said the fire occurred shortly before 8 p m.

General Gruenther Balks On Purchase of House Having Restrictive Covenant Clause

Black Dispatch P. 1
Oklahoma City, Okla.
Jan. 5, 1957

WASHINGTON.—(ANP)—Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther has been congratulated for voicing an objection to racial covenants on property being considered for purchasing by the American Red Cross.

The controversy arose over the proposed purchase of a Spring Valley house by the Red Cross, for use by its new president, Alfred M. Gruenther. The house was to become the property of the organization and would be used to house each of the succeeding presidents.

Gruenther, who was in Florida at the time negotiations were made public, stated that he did not think the organization should purchase a house covered by a racial covenant.

The 14-room provincial-type home for Gen. Gruenther and future Red Cross presidents was to be sold for $70,000.

James M. Earnest, attorney for the W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co., admitted that a racial clause is included in the 14 covenants covering the property in the Spring Valley subdivision, but he pointed out that the Supreme Court ruled, in 1948 such covenants unenforceable.

Spokesman for the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rinth described the Spring Valley restrictive coventnts as an agreement that owners will not resell their property to members of the Semitic race or to Negroes.

Three purchasers of property in that area declined to recognize restrictive covenants in their deeds according to the league. They were Vice President Richard Nixon ,Sen. Estes Kefauver and former Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman.

Nixon told Milton S. Kronheim sr., chairman, Washington regional advisory board of the league, that he never considered the covenant binding on himself or his neighbors.

Kefauver and Chapman refused to accept the covenants, and the offensive clause was dropped from the deeds. In addition, Mrs. Chapman is alleged to have filed an affidavit with the Recorder of Deeds, specifically repudiating the covenant that had been filed originally with the plat.

Money for the purchase of this home does not come from any publicly-donated funds, but from a privately-contributed fund given the Red Cross in 1919. This special fund was set up by Henry P. Davison and a group of other leading businessmen and philanthropists of that day for the express and sole purchase of purchasing a home for presidents of the Red Cross organization. The donors explicitly stipulated that this money could not be used for any other purpose.

Segregation Suit Thrown Out of Court

Courier Savanna, Ga. Sat. 7-13-57

BRUNSWICK, July 9 (AP)—The suit of a Negro woman against racial segregation at the Fred Wessels Homes in Savannah today was thrown out of court by U.S. District Judge Frank M. Scarlett.

The judge held that Queen Cohen had never made application for an apartment at the public housing project and was not entitled to preference since she was not displaced from the project site.

Originally the action was brought by 18 Negroes represented by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. All but the one withdrew on May 20.

They alleged that they were displaced from their homes by construction of the white housing units and were denied admittance to the apartments because of race.

Stoning Negro Home Nets Stay In Jail

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sun. 6-27-57

ATLANTA, June 26 (AP)—A white man was ordered today to serve six months in jail of charges of throwing a rock and paying to have another rock thrown into a Negro's home in a white neighborhood.

Police said one of the rocks bore a note saying "there will be dynamite next."

Criminal Judge J. Everett Thrift found Baskle L. Griggs, 51, guilty of charges of malicious mischief and of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

The delinquency charge accused Griggs of paying a minor to throw a rock through the window of a house in southwest Atlanta last month.

Youth Admits Being Hired To Rock Changing Area House

Daily World Thurs. 5-16-57
Atlanta Ga. P. 1

Police, investigating an alleged scare attempt against a family which recently moved into a predominantly white community, quoted a teenage youth Wednesday as saying he had been hired to hurl rocks into the house.

Officers said they were informed Wednesday that the last rock thrown through a window at 346 Central Ave., S. W., had a note tied to it, declaring, "There will be dynamite next."

The youth was quoted as saying a man, partially identified as a resident of the community, offered him a dollar to throw the rock through the window of the house occupied by Mrs. Lula Mae Bradley and her family.

Patrolmen D. H. Byrd and D. Harris reported they were first informed of the trouble by Mrs. F. H. Rose White, 1062 Bellvue Dr., N. E., who told them she rented the house to a Negro family last Thursday.

They quoted her as saying at least three rocks had been thrown through windows of the house since then, with the note tied to the last one.

The rock with the note attached to it was allegedly hurled last Saturday night. Officers said when the rock broke the window Mr. Bradley got a gun and fired through it. A case was made against him, but was later dismissed, the officers disclosed.

The youth, who police interned at the Juvenile Detention Home, was further quoted as saying the man who told him to throw the rock again talked with him Sunday night at approximately 9:30 p. m.

During this conversation the man allegedly informed the youth he was going to throw a rock through the front door of the house this week.

Mob erupts in Chicago

Afro-American Baltimore Md

CHICAGO — Peace has returned to Trumbull Park, but Tuesday, racial violence erupted several miles to the North in Filmore where a howling mob of 250 white persons gathered for the second straight night at the home of a colored family which recently moved into the community.

Police were on hand, however, to prevent any more damage to the property. As police reinforcements arrived, the crowd was dispersed. During the height of the melee, two men were put into the patrol wagon, but there were no arrests.

Heading the police detail was Deputy Commissioner James Hackett who directed a complete dispersal of the crowd and by 10:30 p.m. had all of the belligerent people off the street.

CAUSE OF the mob resentment is the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clem who occupy the second floor of the building at 344 S. Hamlin. Protests also are aimed at the Harry Gaynors, owners of the building, who live on the first floor.

In spite of harrassment and tension the Clems have vowed to stay in the seven-room apartment. They moved in April 7, and April 11, began receiving threats and demands that they leave the area.

* * *

EARLY SUNDAY morning two youths pelted the area with rifle shots and on Sunday night a crowd of over 250 gathered and threw rocks and bricks, breaking 13 windows.

Observers say that the mob is made up of persons of all ages and that they are predominantly foreign born.

Integration in housing helps group attitudes

Afro-American Baltimore, Md Sat. 3-16-57

CHICAGO — Colored people living in racially integrated housing indicate a more positive attitude toward life and seem generally better adjusted than those in unintegrated housing.

This opinion was expressed after a psychological study had been made of the attitudes of 150 families in two New York City middle-income housing projects — one integrated, the other not.

THE RESULT was reported by Dr. Kenneth Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College, at a meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Association.

The results of this study are intended to show clinical evidence of psychological factors in segregated housing.

Dr. Clark said it was part of the present effort to study effects of one type of racial segregation in a given social institution, apart from that existing in the total society.

Put Negroes Out, Orders To Realtor

Defender Chicago Ill, Sat. 7-20-57

Charges that Julian Levi, director of the South East Chicago Commission which is headed by Chancellor Kimpton of the University of Chicago, personally ordered a landlord to oust Negroes from his property, were flatly denied by Levi Thursday.

The charges were made by Robert David Golden, vice president of the Liberty Building Management Co. The property involved is located at 6126-28 S. University ave.

In a signed statement to the Chicago Defender, Golden stated: "On or about June 18, 1957, John F. Golden, president of Liberty Building Management Co., the agent for the building, received a telephone call from Julian Levi, director of the South East Commission, warning us that unless the building at 6126-28 University ave., was converted back into white or Puerto Rican tenancy, this building would be subject to harassment from the Mayor's seven man crew of inspectors working in the Woodlawn neighborhood. . ."

Levi denied talking with Golden, but admitted his organization received a complaint about the property at 6126-28 University.

He said Don H. Blackiston, of the South East Commission investigated the complaint and submitted a report in December, 1956, which alleged the building had a number of small kitchenette apartments sharing one bathroom.

Commenting on the charge he wanted Negroes ousted from the building, Levi asserted:

"I don't care who lives there. It doesn't make any difference to us. The charge of racial prejudice is frequently made as a smoke screen by owners of substandard property.

"The South East Commission is completely color blind."

However, Levi was further quoted by Golden as saying that "through his connections with the board of trustees of the University of Chicago and the city . . . he is in a position to intimidate owners and operators of Negro buildings regardless of their condition or conformity with the Housing Code."

In answer to this, Levi said: "We never forward a complaint to the Building department unless the facts have been proven."

Continuing, he said, "when we have information in our file which indicates a violation of the ordinance of the city, we view it as our responsibility to report those matters to the appropriate authorities."

Negro Says Town In Ill. Cuts Off Water To Force Him Out

Courier 11-14

CHICAGO, Nov. 13 (AP)—A Negro machine operator and his wife have charged suburban Maywood officials cut off the water supply in their new home in an effort to force them out of the village.

The charge was made by Mr. and Mrs. Jessie Carmichael in a suit filed in Superior Court asking that the village be ordered to provide water for the home they moved into last Saturday.

The Carmichael home is in a mixed neighborhood, inhabited by Negroes as well as white families.

The suit contends August Christenson, building inspector acting for Building Commissioner Harvey Heyer, ordered the village's department of public works to shut off the water.

Christenson, Heyer and the village of Maywood were named defendants.

The suit charges the action was part of a plan and conspiracy to keep the Carmichaels from living in their property and to keep them and other members of the Negro race out of the neighborhood in which the property was situated.

Christianson denied the racial discrimination charge. He told reporters his action was prompted by the village code which prohibits occupancy of an unfinished house. He said the Carmichael house was as "unfinished shell."

Officials of the Builders Supply & Lumber Co., which built the Carmichael house, said the village refused to prvoide water for construction purposes even though the company offered to pay for it.

The company said many of its customers in the Maywood area are Negroes.

U. S. CRITICIZED OVER HOUSING SEGREGATION

Official Urges Private Project Rule

The federal government lacks "guts" in failing to demand racial nondiscrimination in privately developed housing projects built with federally approved loans, Philadelphia Mayor Richardson Dilworth asserted yesterday.

In a televised interview, Dilworth said he believes such a rule legally feasible and that it would provide a means of getting racially integrated suburbs.

Daily Tribune

Raps Suburb Residents

Dilworth criticized suburbanites declaring that they want major cities to be centers of entertainment and culture, provide rapid transit to outlying areas, and build auto expressways, but do not want to pay their share of such costs and want to keep low income families in the city.

Mon. 10-21-57

The Democratic official said that Philadelphia derives about 20 to 25 million dollars annually from suburbanites thru a payroll tax, but that this is not enough.

Admits Race Conflict

Dilworth said the suburbs have established a "white noose" around major cities in the nation.

The mayor admitted his city also has been the scene of racial disturbances, citing one instance where 500 policemen were kept on duty at one location for about a month.

But Philadelphia housing officials thus far have not encountered too much trouble in erecting public housing units about the city, he said. Only the so called "silk stocking" wards, he said, have resisted public housing.

Reports Wide Support

"We expect to crash one silk stocking neighborhood next year with a project," he added.

Dilworth reported the urban redevelopment and public housing plans of his city have had the support of civic and business groups and that Philadelphia's small, 17 member city council has aided such efforts. Seven council members are elected at large.

Wades Finally Get Title To Home That Was Bombed

Defender Sat. 5-18-57 Chicago, Ill. P.6

38c

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV have gained clear title to their dynamited home in suburban Shively after a struggle that lasted three years.

The Wades, who are Negroes, had been unable to repair the damaged property because money to do the work was held up by lawsuits over two mortgages on the house. They were unable to get new mortgages because of severe damage to the home, which is in a segregated neighborhood.

The problem was solved when Mr. and Mrs. David Simonson, Chicago, loaned the Wades $12,326 to pay off the old mortgages, accumulated interest, and court costs. The court costs resulted from suits filed by South End Federal Savings & Loan Association and James I. Rone, builder of the house, to foreclose on the mortgages.

HEARD APPEAL

The Simonsons said in describing their role in the settlement: "We first read about the Wade case while living in Paris, France. Shortly after our return to the United States last year, we heard Wade make an appeal for aid on a radio program sponsored by the United Automobile Workers and conducted by Guy Nunn.

"We decided then that we would help in whatever way we could. When we learned recently that the court had ordered full payment of the mortgages on the bombed property, we offered to loan the Wades the money. We felt they had a right to the property. We also thought it was a crime to let the house sit and rot while the money to repair it was held up by the dispute over ownership."

The bank and the builder sued to foreclose on a technicality soon after a while couple, Carl and Anne Braden, transferred the house to the Wades in May, 1954. The Bradens had bought the house from the builder at the Wades' request after the Negro family was unable to make the purchase.

The house was 60 percent destroyed by a dynamite bomb in June, 1954, and has lain in ruins ever since. An insurance company paid $5,800 to restore the property, but Circuit Court held the money pending outcome of the mortgage suits.

SEVEN INDICTED

Meantime, the Bradens and five other white supporters of the Wades were indicted by the county grand jury on a variety of criminal charges, including advocating sedition. Braden was given 15 years in prison on that charge. His conviction was reversed last summer after he had served eight months behind bars. Two of the others spend five and six months in jail before all charges were dropped without trial last November. All those involved were fired from their jobs.

Settlement of the long dispute was announced by the co-chairmen of the Wade Defense Committee — Dr. M. M. D. Perdue, pastor of Emmanuel Baptist church here, and Rt. Rev. C. Ewbank Tucker, presiding bishop of the Tenth Episcopal District of AME Zion church.

Bishop Tucker, who is also an attorney, represented the Wades, the Bradens, and others in civil and criminal proceedings growing out of the house purchase. Conrad J. Lynn, New York civil liberties attorney, was associated with Bishop Tucker in fighting the mortgage suits. They were among 19 attorneys employed by the defendants in various phases of the case.

Dynamited Ky. couple finally gets possession of home

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade, IV have gained clear title to their dynamited home in suburban Shively after a struggle that lasted three years and became known all over the world.

Kentucky Governor To Guard Home Of Louisville Family

Courier-Journal P. 38

FRANKFORT, Ky. — (AMP)— Gov. Chandler announced publicly here last week that he will provide state police protection "if needed" to Andrew Wade IV if he returns to his home in a white neighborhood.

The governor's statement was in reply to a letter received from C. Ewbank Tucker, president, Kentucky Bureau of Negro affairs, who wrote that Wade plans to reoccupy the home, if he is unable to sell it.

Wed. 9-25-57

The home had been partially destroyed by dynamite June 27, 1954 when the Wades first moved in. Now the damage has been repaired.

Tucker wanted assurance of state protection in case local, or county officials failed to give it. Though the governor said he did not anticipate any failure of the Jefferson county law enforcement body to give Wade the protection he needed, but added that the state would watch the situation "very closely" and be prepared to assign troopers if needed.

Sell Bombed Home In Ky.

38c

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Mr. and Mrs. Andrew E. Wade IV announced that they have sold their home on Rone Court because the County Police Department failed to arrest and convict those who dynaitmed the house in June, 1954.

They said the recent indictment of top officials of the police department convinced them that the department is so corrupt and inefficient that it would never provide adequate protection.

Courier-Journal P. 28 Sat. 11-30-57

The residence is just outside suburban Shively in a segregated area where there is no city police protection. It was 60 per cent destroyed by a dynamite explosion about six weeks after it was occupied by the Wades, who are Negroes.

The house lay in ruins for three years as a result of court suits over the ownership. Last spring Mr. and Mrs. David Simonson of Chicago lent the Wades $12,326 to pay off mortgages, accumulated interest, and court costs.

Negro Subdivision Wins Zoning Reversal in Court

Evening Star Washington D.C.
Wed. 1-30-57

The Prince Georges Circuit Court has overruled a County Commissioner zoning decision denying subdivision classification for a proposed Negro community because the petitioners refused to build on a lot size not required by law.

After a two-hour hearing in Upper Marlboro yesterday, Judge John R. Fletcher ordered the county heads to grant a R-55 (single-family home) classification for a 126-acre tract bordering on George Palmer highway just south of Glenarden, a Negro community. The land had been zoned rural-residential.

Judge Fletcher said William L. Kahler, counsel to the commissioners, did not have enough evidence to justify the county heads overruling the R-55 recommendation of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Required Larger Lots

The commissioners denied the petition last fall because the landowners refused to subdivide on 6,500 square foot lots with 65 foot frontages. The zoning requirement for R-55 tracts is 5,500 square foot lots. The case was appealed to circuit court on November 2.

For nearly a year, the commissioners have granted R-55 zoning only if petitioners have agreed to subdivide on the larger lot size. The request, they explain, is an attempt to keep additional high-density, low-cost housing out of the county.

The court order for zoning approval, in accordance with the planning commission recommendation, means 11.2 acres will be reserved for a school site and 10.1 for a playground.

Attorney Hervey G. Machen, in his suit, argued that denial based on the larger lot size was "arbitrary, capricious and unreasonable."

Commissioner Quoted

Mr. Machen further stated in his suit that "the only reason" for the zoning denial was the proposed use of the land. The suit quoted one commissioner (not named) as saying he would "do everything in my power to prevent the use of the land for a colored housing development."

Additional arguments by Mr. Machen contended his clients had been granted commercial zoning in 1955 on adjoining property with the understanding a subdivision could be built under an R-R classification. The County Commissioners early last year discovered, and began to enforce, a zoing requirement that subdivisions can be built only on land zoned R-55.

Herbert W. Reichelt, president of the county commissioners, said last night the county heads would continue asking subdivision developers to build on the larger lot size. He said Mr. Machen represented the only group who has refused to comply.

Plaintiffs listed in the suit are Mr. and Mrs. Lester M. Lewis of 5131 Linnean terrace N.W., and Mr. and Mrs. Willard J. Hall of 2745 Chesapeake street N.W.

Call for End

Calling for an end to governmental support of racial restrictions in housing, the NAACP official charged that 14 leading institutions which control assets of 55 billion dollars have the full cooperation of the federal government in building entire communities for whites only.

Federal housing officials are so cautious on the segregation issue that in some instances they will not permit speech-making subordinates to quote anti-segregation statements made by President Eisenhower, Mr. Mitchell said.

He further charged that when slum areas are cleared for urban renewal projects, approximately two-thirds to three-fourths of the people displaced are Negroes while the occupants of the new buildings are three-fourths white.

Existing Racial Practices In Housing Cause Trouble For Negro - White Tenants

Bystander Thurs. 6-13-57

Baltimore, Md.—Existing practices of racial segregation in housing cause trouble for both Negro and white home seekers. White persons flee to cracker-box, suburban housing which is built with monotonous uniformity and which frequently has sewer water in the basement. Negro property-owners discover that their new neighborhoods are manipulated by absentee exploiters who want to "open a poolroom on the corner, a tavern across the street from a church, and a junk shop in any vacant garage."

These views were expressed here on May 25 by Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington Bureau, at the annual banquet of Real Estate Brokers of Baltimore, Inc. Mr. Mitchell was guest of honor at the affair.

THIS IS 4512 White Oak Ave., a house which War Veteran Earl W. Jackson and wife say they were given to understand they could purchase.

Veteran can't buy this house for sale

Afro American P.8
Sat. 11-30-57

BALTIMORE

"It is a beautiful house. We have watched it from the time the ground was broken. We were led to believe that we could buy it."

"In fact, the builder told us on October 31, we could sign the contract. We have been calling trying to close the deal but now the word is that they want to make a survey among the other residents to see if they object."

Earl W. Jackson, 1639 N. Monroe St., postal employee, was telling the AFRO what had happened to him and his wife, Melvina, in connection with the purchase of a new, brick home at 4512 White Oak Ave. in the Forest Park section.

Mr. Jackson is a much-decorated veteran of 14 years Army service in Europe and Korea and was discharged with the rank of warrant officer.

The house in question is located off the 3900 block Dolfield Ave. near Penhurst. There are only three houses in the block.

It is listed at $14,500 with a ground rent of $120 a year and features a unit kitchen and semi - club basement.

* * *

A FOR-SALE sign on the house lists a Hal Schoolnick Realty Co., as the agent.

Mr. Schoolnick told the AFRO on Thursday: "I understand there has been a little opposition from the people who attend the Synagogue. . .it's not the rabbi, but the people who go there.

"They feel if one family comes in, more will come in. You see they just built the Synagogue about three years

Mr. Schoolnick identified the owner of the house, as Benjamin Lerner of the 3900 block N. Rogers Ave.

Mr. Schoolnick added: "You see Mr. Lerner's in a peculiar position. He built the house that's for the sale, but he also built the Synagogue. So it is up to Mr. Lerner."

* * *

MR. SCHOOLNICK also said that when he was given the house to sell "we never entertained the thought of selling to colored people." He quoted Mr. Lerner as saying he had talked to Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, but there were several other people also interested in the property.

Efforts to get Mr. Lerner to comment proved futile.

Rabbi Ephraim Shapiro of the Tiferth Israel Anshe Sefard Synagogue located at 3925 Dolfield Ave., a half block away from the White Oak Ave. home, told the AFRO he had not been approached by any residents opposed to occupancy of the house by colored people.

"He said he didn't feel it would affect the Synagogue and added that 'so far as my personal feelings are concerned, it makes very little difference to me who the people are so long as they are decent, respectable people."

MR. JACKSON outlined this sequence of events which led up to the state in which he and his wife now find themselves:

In the summer of 1956, a friend who knew he was house-hunting, showed him the house under construction, said it would be a lovely modern home and advised him to contact the builder as it was understood there were no racial restrictions.

"In March of this year, I talked with the builder and he said as soon as it was painted and finished, he would talk about selling it.

"When the for-sale sign went up in April, I got in touch with a real estate agent who talked with Mr. Schoolnick, whose sign was on the house.

"THEN WE talked with the builder and owner, Benjamin Lerner — that was one day in the latter part of September. Mr. Lerner told me then, it makes no difference to me. I'll sell to anyone and you can see it in half an hour.

"In a half hour, he did meet us, showed us the house, gave us the cost and said we could sign the contract on October 31. We went to him on that day to sign the contract and pay a deposit and he said, he wanted to wait a week and make a survey and see if there were any other colored people within a block.

"We called him the last time on November 17. He said he would call back."

Mrs. Michele Whyte, who has been acting on behalf of the Jacksons confirmed the sequence of events. She added that during one conference she was advised that if she sold another colored family a house within the White Oak Ave. area, the sale would be consummated sooner.

THE ONLY other two houses in the block where the Jacksons desire to buy are 4508 and 4510.

At 4510, a lady who identified herself as Mrs. Anna Caloyro anticipated a reporter's question before it was put and hung up the phone after stating: "I've talked to one man. I don't want those people... those n...rs to live by me and that's all I've got to say."

Mrs. Caloyro is listed in the city directory as a widow. Also listed as residing at the same address is a Frank H., whose occupation is given as diemaker at a venetian blind firm.

The occupant at 4508 is listed as William W. Russell, bookkeeper at a downtown firm. Efforts to reach him proved futile at presstime.

An Alabamian Residing At 12339 Cherrylawn, Detroit

Observes Integration Among Soapy Williams' Constituents

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 2-22-57

P. 4-A

By Alan McConagha
Of The Advertiser Staff

A NATIVE of Wetumpka, Ala., where race relations are peaceful, discovered that he had to go to Detroit, in the heart of uncharted Askelon, to get a front seat amid a mob of demonstrating racists.

McCONAGHA

We placed a call to Herbert A. Jones, a 48-year-old Detroit machinist, who lives at 12339 Cherrylawn in a northwest section of Detroit.

The mobs gathering nightly on his street are near riot in protesting a Negro resident in the district, Jones reports.

It had not been that way when he lived in Alabama 20 years ago, he remembered.

But there in Detroit, the trouble all began when a Negro moved into that long-time white residential area and there was no homeowners association to block the move.

All Detroit is divided into homeowners associations, Jones says. The entire neighborhood belongs. When you sell your home, you have got to go through the association "and everything has got to be okay." Keeps undesirables out.

"We didn't have an association," he says. "We didn't think it could happen here. There are no Negroes for over a mile. But we're organizing a neighborhood group now."

In the meantime, members of other Detroit associations are helping to demonstrate.

"Where we made our mistake in the first place," Jones says, "is in not forming an association."

IT ALL BEGAN—

It all began, he says, when two Negroes moved into the house across the street from him. A white negotiator told him that there were two Negroes there at 12356 Cherrylawn. They are brother and sister, Jones says.

(Associated Press reports say the house belongs to a 30-year-old Negro seamstress, Mrs. Ethel Watkins.)

Every night the brother and sister huddled in their $11,000 brick home and every night Detroit citizens paraded in front of their house and demanded that the unwanted Negroes move to other parts.

The Negroes moved in about Feb. 1, Jones says. But it was Feb. 11 before the local residents were certain that their new neighbors were actually colored. When they found out, the whites "were sick."

"You know how it is when Negroes move in and nobody does anything about it? Pretty soon they are all coming in and everybody panics and starts selling their property," Jones says.

DEMONSTRATION EVERY NIGHT

Jones says the neighbors wasted no time. "They are really hot about this thing. They don't feel any colored person should jump over into a white section like that."

Everyone got together at a meeting. "There were 1,500 people there" and a demonstration has been held every night since.

Jones doesn't think the Negroes are still there. The house looks vacant now, he says. But that hasn't stopped the demonstrations. At this very moment, Jones reports, there are 150 persons outside milling around the house of the widow who sold the property to the Negro intruders.

(The Detroit Commission of Community Relations says Mrs. Watkins has decided to stay in the neighborhood.)

ECONOMIC REPRISAL

The widow, Mrs. Eugenia Nowak, "moved into the next block and they're demonstrating up and down the street where she lives now . . . she lost her job, too."

Actually, he adds, there have been no real outbursts of violence, "just a few windows knocked out." But the police are there night and day. There is a squad car in front and behind the house after sundown and a police car on the street during the day.

A negotiator had been sent over to talk to one of the Negroes. Jones says the spokesman returned saying that it looked like a plant and that the woman was ready to turn the property back to the real estate company.

"Yes, it is a bridgehead. They put them here on purpose to see if there would be any resentment They sold the house to them for $11 900. It's well worth $14,000 . . . has more rooms than they need . . . It's scarcely furnished."

"Negro real estate company owns the house and he wants $1,600 more than he put into the place. The association doesn't want to pay that much money," Jones adds.

Detroit, Feb. 21—Mrs. Ethel Watkins, 30, peers through a broken pane of door at her new home. The glass was broken by a rock thrown from the street. Crowds of 100-150 persons have gathered nightly in front of the house, protesting the presence of Mrs. Watkins, a Negro, in the previously all-white neighborhood. (AP Wirephoto)

READ ABOUT IT IN MONTGOMERY

The following is a fact sheet set forth by the Detroit Commission on Community Relations on the Cherrylawn incidents. The facts presented here are as yet unpublished (when last we checked) by any major Detroit newspaper

Feb. 1 — Mrs. Watkins, a divorcee, moved into the Cherrylawn house after buying it on a land contract from Mrs.

Nowak, an elderly widow. The police department was notified prior to the time of the move and scout cars patrolled the area but there was no disturbance.

Feb. 6—A window was broken in the front door of Mrs. Watkins' house.

THIS WOULD BE 'VIOLENCE' IN MONTGOMERY

Feb. 8—More stones were thrown at the house and another window was broken.

Feb. 9-10—A door-to-door canvas of the neighborhood protested Mrs. Watkins' occupancy and Mrs. Nowak's sale of the property.

Feb. 11—At 7:15 p.m. a crowd of about 50 including many teen-agers gathered in front of the Watkins house, "talking loudly and shouting abusive remarks." Police dispersed the crowd.

Feb. 12—At 7:30 p.m., a crowd of 100 formed before the Cherrylawn house. This demonstration was orderly and police moved most of the people off the street "although some took refuge on the porches of neighbors." Police also dispersed a crowd that gathered on the front lawn of Mrs. Nowak's property.

BOMBS IN DETROIT?

Feb. 13—Demonstrators gathered in a wet snowfall at both properties and police again dispersed them. A delegation from the neighborhood called on Mrs. Watkins to find if she would sell the house. She referred them to her broker.

Feb. 14 — Mrs. Watkins reported "frightening threats to bomb her house." A relative who had been staying with her moved out and she spent the night with a sister in another part of the city.

'TECHNIQUES'

"Outside organizers" conducted a meeting of home owners in a church hall with about 700 attending. A vote showed they favor organizing an "improvement association" along the lines of other associations in northwest Detroit. "Techniques of getting Mrs. Watkins out of the neighborhood were discussed." Block officers were elected.

Feb. 15—The commission checked a report that Mrs. Watkins had moved out of the neighborhood and found it to be false.

Crowds kept up nightly demonstrations. Police said they dispersed from 100 to 150 last night in the vicinity of Mrs. Watkins' house. Police said there have been no daytime demonstrations and no violence reported since the start of mass demonstrations at night.

'GROWING PATTERNS OF INTIMIDATION'

The commission's acting director said Mrs. Watkins has decided against selling the property and that she will stay in the neighborhood. She is away from home at work during the day.

After summarizing what it has been doing to solve the problem, the commission said, "our next task is to seek the cooperation of all constructive forces in the community in a long-range program of education and of establish[illegible] safeguards against the growing patte[illegible] of intimidation revealed in this incident."

Defiant Negro says she will stay in white area

News 2-23-57
Birmingham, Ala.

DETROIT, Feb. 22—(AP)—A Negro seamstress who moved into a white neighborhood says she is going to stay in her $10,900 house despite demonstrations against her and the white woman who sold her the property.

Ethel Watkins, 30, told newsmen last night, "I am a firm believer in prayer and I pray God that everything will be all right."

Nightly demonstrations against Miss Watkins and the former owner of her house, Mrs. Eugenia Nowak, were called "a disgrace to our community" by the Rev. John E. Coogan, chairman of Detroit's Commission on Community Relations.

Father Coogan issued a statement criticizing "area leaders" after Mrs. Beulah Whitby, acting director of the commission, reported the demonstrations were "beginning to take on serious proportions."

Miss Watkins bought the house on a land contract and moved into the neighborhood Feb. 1. At first there was no trouble.

Miss Watkins said she noted the first sign of hostility Feb. 4 when a woman yelled at her, "Oh those damn niggers."

Then on Feb. 6 a stone smashed the window of her front door. More stones were thrown at her house two days later.

MASS DEMONSTRATIONS started 11 days ago in front of the homes of both Miss Watkins and Mrs. Nowak, who lives two blocks away in the neat, middle-class neighborhood of mostly two-story brick houses.

A front door window at Mrs. Nowak's home was broken. But police said the demonstrators were for the most part orderly.

Miss Watkins said she became alarmed a week ago when she was told of a threat "they are going to put something in the fuel oil tank" of her house.

"I was about to give up," she said.

But she said she thought it over and she began to pray.

"I certainly intend to stay here," she said. "I'm expecting proper protection from the police."

MISS WATKINS SAID she had no idea of causing trouble when she moved into the neighborhood.

"I was taken by surprise," she said. She said the real estate broker did not tell her it was an all white neighborhood. Her home on Cherrylawn is about six blocks from homes in the area occupied by Negroes.

She was born in Macon, Ga., and her family moved to Detroit when she was an infant.

Detroit crowds protesting Negro in white area grow

News 2-23-57
Birmingham, Ala.

DETROIT, Feb. 21—(AP)—Nightly crowds demonstrating before the home of a Negro woman who moved into a white neighborhood, Feb. 1, have jumped back to 100-plus on Detroit's Northwest Side.

Police said 100 to 150 were dispersed last night in the vicinity of 12356 Cherrylawn, a house recently purchased by Mrs. Ethel Watkins, a widow seamstress.

The City of Detroit's Commission on Community Relations said demonstrations began Feb. 11 and have continued nightly since, with most participants now also demonstrating before the home of a white woman who sold the home to Mrs. Watkins.

THE COMMISSION identified the white woman as Mrs. Eugenia Nowak, who now lives two blocks away on Cloverlawn, and police said they had established an around-the-clock two-man guard there, as well as at Mrs. Watkins' home.

Police usually dispatch around 25 men to the neighborhood to disperse demonstrators and at times have barricaded Cherrylawn, turning back anyone who could not establish he lived there.

There have been no daytime demonstrations and no peace breaches during the night gatherings, police said. Two windows in the Watkins home have been broken, but both before mass demonstrations began.

DAVID GRACIE, field representative for the Commission on Community Relations, said several demonstrators have been hauled into the precinct police station and talked to, but none has been arrested.

First crowds of demonstrators ranged around 200-250, but dwindled to 35-40 over the weekend, then shot up again last night and the night before.

Police declined comment on future action, except to say: "We will continue to maintain the peace."

Community Relations Leader Scores Detroit Race Strife

DETROIT, Feb. 21 (AP)—The Rev. John E. Coogan, chairman of Detroit's Commission on Community Relations, said today that demonstrations set off when a Negro woman moved into a white neighborhood of the city are "a disgrace to our community."

Father Coogan, who is head of the department of sociology at the University of Detroit, issued on behalf of the comission a statement attacking what he termed "gangsterism in race relations" in a neighborhood on Detroit's Northwest Side.

At the same time, Mrs. Beaulah Whitby, acting director of the commission, said the demonstrations gainst the Negro woman and against a white woman who sold the house were "beginning to take on serious proportions."

Officials of the commission referred to nightly crowds that have demonstrated at 12356 Cherrylawn, a house recently purchased by Ethel Watkins, a 30-year-old Negro seamstress.

Crowds also have gathered at night in front of the home of Mrs. Eugenia Nowak, 12105 Cloverlawn, two bloks from the Cherrylawn address. Mrs. Nowak is the white woman who sold the property to the Negro.

Police have posted around-the-clock guards at both houses since the demonstrations began 10 days ago. No arrests have been made.

In a statement criticizing "area leaders," Father Coogan sid:

"The Detroit Commission on Community Relations is in business to do everything reasonably possible to secure for every element in our community equality before the law.

"Gangsterism in race relations is not wrong only south of the Mason-Dixon Line. It is the more intolerable in proportion as it is unprovoked.

"The continued molestation and threat to the personal liberty shown to Ethel Watkins at 12356 Cherrylawn and to Mrs. Eugenia Nowak at 12105 Coverlawn is a disgrace to our community.

"Perhaps the most humiliating phase of the situation is the slowness of the area leaders to show the social responsibility called for to oppose and rebuke such ganging up against decent citizens."

DETROIT STIRRED BY HOUSING BIAS

New York Times

Community Groups Examine Problem of 'Gangsterism' in Racial Relations

Sun. 3-3-57

By DAMON STETSON

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, March 2—Negroes have generally regarded this a good city in which to live. But those seeking to break the barrier of segregated private housing still face what a responsible community leader has called "gangsterism in race relations."

The situation was accented in the last month by the case of Mrs. Ethel Watkins, 30-year-old Negro seamstress, who bought a house in a previously all-white neighborhood.

As a result of demonstrations, molestation and threats directed toward her, responsible citizens have begun to re-examine the city's approach to one of its most serious problems — segregated housing.

The non-white population has grown from 150,790 in 1940 to about 360,000. It is still growing. There is continual pressure for expansion.

Some Cooperation Shown

Much expansion has been achieved without incident. In fact, Detroit can boast of neighborhoods where Negroes and whites live side by side with a minimum of friction, and in many cases with friendliness and cooperation.

However, Negroes still find it almost impossible to move into certain sections, notably the northwest and extreme eastern areas of the city. Among the obstacles they encounter are tacit neighborhood agreements against selling to them, difficulties in getting mortgages, unreasonable sale prices and general hostility.

The case of Mrs. Watkins is an example of the pattern of pressures that has been utilized to prevent what real estate men call "block-busting" by Negroes.

On Feb. 1 Mrs. Watkins moved into a two-story brick house on Cherrylawn Avenue. The houses on this tree-lined street are close together but are attractive.

Mrs. Watkins bought the house for $11,900 from Mrs. Eugenia Nowak, a white woman, who is an elderly widow. The new owner was pleased with the purchase. She bought new furniture.

"I've always wanted a home of my own," Mrs. Watkins said. "I had good parents, but we never had very much money and it always seemed crowded."

Police Patrol Area

The police, notified in advance that Mrs. Watkins had bought the house, patrolled the area the day she moved in. But there was no disturbance.

Six days later, after the word had spread, a window was broken in the front door. A few days later another window was broken.

For nearly two weeks demonstrators or the curious, ranging in number from ten to 200, appeared in front of the house evenings. A group demonstrated at least once in front of Mrs. Nowak's home near-by on Feb. 14, Mrs. Watkins reported she had received a bomb threat.

Meanwhile, a notice was circulated in the neighborhood, announcing an emergency meeting in the Temple Baptist Church of home owners and business men in the area.

About 500 residents of the Cherrylawn section attended. The possibility of buying the house from Mrs. Watkins was discussed. It was decided to continue peaceful demonstrations. A motion pledging no further sales to Negroes was carried overwhelmingly.

Through the last month the police have kept a watch on Cherrylawn. Edward S. Piggins, Police Commissioner, said the department had not entered the controversy but had preserved peace. Groups are kept moving and large crowds dispersed as quickly as possible, he said.

Ssveral demonstrators have been taken to police headquarters; a woman was arrested for disturbing the peace. Since then the demonstrations have dwindled.

The Rev. John E. Coogan, chairman of the Commission on Community Relations, has denounced the treatment of Mrs. Watkins and Mrs. Nowak as a disgrace.

"Perhaps the most humiliating phase of the situation is the slowness of the area leaders to show the social responsibility called for to oppose and rebuke such ganging-up against decent citizens," he declared.

"Fortunately, the police and city government can be relied upon to do all that is legally possible to repress violence, but in the absence of a rebuke against the molestation from an outraged citizenry of the neighborhood, municipal forces are fighting only a rear guard action.

However, this action will be continued until the community becomes conscious that the threat to the liberty of one is a threat to the liberty of all."

Responsible community forces are now beginning to go into action. Six Protestant churches in the area are planning a joint meeting of all families in the Sherrylawn vicinity. The Ministers will discuss the Christian approach to the situation.

The Commission on Community Relations, the Catholic Interracial Council, the Jewish Community Council and the Y-Teen group have also approached the problem, and are seeking ways to reduce tension and promote understanding.

There appears to be an increasing realization that the Cherrylawn incident and others like it are symptoms of a basic problem here.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Watkins said she intended to stay in the house she had bought.

"I'm a firm believer in prayer," she said, "and I've been praying. If they give me time, I think they'll find out what kind of a person I am. This is the lesson the people here need to know."

Police Guard Home Of Detroit Negro

Star P. 30-a

DETROIT, Feb. 13 (AP).—Police maintained an around the clock guard yesterday at the ome of a Negro who moved into an all-white Northwest Detroit neighborhood February 1. Posting of the guard followed the dispersing of a protesting crowd at the home Monday night.

Police said Mrs. Ethel Watkins, a widow seamstress, was undisturbed for some five days after she moved into the home. A window was broken by a stone last Wednesday and another Saturday.

Police estimated 200 white persons gathered at the home Monday night, but said they dispersed quietly and without incident when ordered to do so. No one was arrested and no one injured.

The house, in a neighborhood of $11,000 to $12,000 homes, was sold to Mrs. Watkins by a real estate firm operated by Negroes.

DETROIT— (ANP) — The Detroit NAACP branch is supporting "to the limit of its resources" an action for injunctive relief brought on behalf of a Negro woman against several persons who have been active in leading opposition to her occupancy of the home she purchased in a white neighborhood here.

Atlanta, Ga.

In making this announcement, NAACP branch officials noted that they have secured a counsel for the woman, Mrs. Ethel Watkins.

A bill of complaint filed on behalf of Mrs. Watkins in the Wayne County Circuit Court specifically charges that various persons in the neighborhood have conspired in the use of mob intimidation tactics to force her from her home.

Commenting on the case, Edward M. Turner, branch president, called it "significant" because "the incident brings to the surface the sinister forces which make it difficult to achieve any real degree of democracy in the field of housing."

"The NAACP down through the years has attempted to alert the entire community to its responsibility in this field," Mr. Turner added. "The Watkins incident indicates that we have much work to do."

DETROIT. — (ANP) — An all-white jury of six women deliberated only 34 minutes Thursday before Recorder's Judge Paul E. Krause before finding a 38-year-old housewife guilty of disturbing the peace in connection with a racial disturbance of Feb. 24. She is Mrs. Rose Marie Petransky.

Nine witnesses testified she shouted insulting remarks, "N— Lovers" to four white persons as they left the home of Mrs. Ethel Watkins, a colored seamstress who moved into the white neighborhood at 12356 Cherrylawn.

Mrs. Petransky's attorney, Donald W. Sergeant, said he would appeal the verdict. Judge Krause set April 25 for sentence.

Arrest Women For Disturbance At Housing Project

Des Moines Iowa

Thurs. 4-25-57

Detroit, Mich.—Police last week arrested two Herman Gardens women and an 18-year-old youth, son of one of the women, following a racial disturbance at the housing project.

Mrs. Mary T. Head of 8457 Woodmont, and Mrs. Mary E. Passino of 8455 Woodmont, were charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor. They are charged with inducing Mrs. Passino's son, Gerald, to throw marbles through the windows of a home which a Negro family had just moved.

Gerald Passino pleaded guilty before Judge John P. O'Hara to malicious destruction of property and admitted breaking the windows in a home at 8454 Woodmont. A student at Cody High School, admitted to detectives that he broke four windows of the Brooks' home with marbles. The boy stated that the women urged him to break the windows because "it's a good way to get rid of the Negroes."

Brooks, a social worker, moved into his home on April 1st. Windows were broken the first night. He said he was surprised at the action because there were three other Negro families living in the project. The family has been under 24 hour police protection.

No doubt you remember Hizzoner Mayor Orville Hubbard of Dearborn, Mich. Not a single Negro citizen is allowed to reside in Dearborn. Mayor Hubbard gave The Advertiser a remarkably frank interview on the subject of total Negro exclusion from Dearborn, despite the fact that thousands work their by day. This total exclusion may have seemed somewhat rigid to Montgomerians, for here Negro citizens reside in peace just two houses removed from the mansion of the governor.

Anyhow, Mayor Hubbard is now campaigning for reelection. He has sent The Advertiser two remarkable campaign documents—two full page newspaper advertisements reproducing an article from the July 26 edition of U.S. News & World Report.

The article? "When Federal Bayonets Did Rule The South."

It is a vivid historical account of the hideous crimes committed against the South by the Washington government during Reconstruction.

Mayor Hubbard's campaign ad bore the injunction, "Now Open Your Eyes W-I-D-E And Read This!"

It is not clear to us why this indictment of the Washington federals has appeal in Dearborn, but we do know that Mayor Hubbard is an able, victorious politician and that we should not look the gift horse in the mouth.

DETROIT—"I pray that God will make everything all right," said 30-year-old Ethel Watkins, who vowed to remain in her new $10,900 home despite nightly intimidation and threats from crowds of whites.

Miss Watkins, a seamstress, and Mrs. Eugenia Nowak, former owner of the house, have been subjected to humiliating demonstrations since Miss Watkins moved into the all-white suburb.

The first sign of hostility was noted when an unidentified woman yelled at Miss Watkins: "Those damn Negroes."

A Negro family moved into a home on Riopelle. It was stoned. The home was smeared with paint. The plumbing was plugged and the furnace was nearly wrecked. The family moved.

A colored family moved into an address on Chalfonte, and mobs gathered. The home was stoned. The family moved.

On Cherrylayn, a lone Negro divorcee moved in, all was quiet for a while, then a letter from a white realtor denying sale of the home to the woman was circulated.

Stones were hurled, mobs gathered, the woman was forced to flee her home. She has returned now, with promises of police protection.

THROUGH ALL OF THIS passes a thread of similarity, the hand of some central organization or organizers. But who is it or they?

In the ugly mob gathered in front of the widow on Cherrylawn the name "United Northwest Realty Association" cropped up. Some bigot declared it it would buy the home.

Again the name of a Rodney Redpath, a notorious but shadowy figure who figured in the infamous Chalfonte case, was mentioned. He was supposed to organize a meeting at the Temple Baptist Church, 10100 Grand River.

But The Courier's investigation of the meeting which took place a few nights later at the church, did not turn up Redpath. His trusted lieutenant, a Carl Gray, was present, however. But he was not on the rostrum. And the role he played, if any, was strictly a behind-the-scenes one.

On the rostrum sat Dennis Duggan, chairman, of 12301 Cherrylawn, a neighbor of the Negro widow, and two outside "organizers," Bob Simpson, of 12316 Ilene, and Theodore Freeborn, of 12151 Steel. Duggan was nabbed by police last week in mob action on Cherrylawn. Two others were also arrested.

These two, The Courier learned, were instrumental in organizing a huge area from Myers to Wyoming. They held their first "organizing meeting" in the Veterans Foreign Wars Hall, Lasure and Grand River, Oct. 15, 1956.

A SECOND such meeting was held in Temple Baptist Church, Oct. 25, 1956. And while they were busy this year organizing the huge area of Wyoming and Greenlawn, and Plymouth and Fullerton, the Negro widow was sold the Cherrylawn house.

Redpath, who is extremely active in the infamous Dewitt-Clinton Association, was a guest speaker, Sept. 20, 1956, at the Fitzgerald Public School. The Puritan Park Association was the sponsor, and a prominent woman Detroit councilman was also a speaker.

She said her piece (explaining zoning laws) and then took a powder before the rabble-rousing started.

Redpath, an ubiquitous fellow, is the chief organizer of the Lyndon-Fenkell, Livernois-Wyoming area.

Some people at these various meetings have mentioned Redpath in connection with the United Northwest Realty Association, an organization with perhaps a collection of 150 real estate companies which uses a multiple property listing.

AND SOME MENTION has been made at meetings that "if you list your house with United, it will not sell it to a Negro unless two or more live in the area."

The pattern then seems to be one of a tough-shelled organization comprised of "professionals" such as Relpath (who, incidentally, was supposed to have operated a store in Hastings St. at one time); realty firms and influential politicians "whipping" the people into line and keeping the neighborhoods free of "n——rs."

And the central "front" is the Improvement Association. Although what it seeks to "improve" is not so much physical property, but "improve" out Negro and other "undesirable" elements.

Most associations disclaim any identity with the infamous white citizens' councils. But they do the work of the citizens' councils. There isn't much difference.

Defies Mob—Miss Ethel Watkins refuses to give up her new home in all-white suburb of Detroit despite nightly attacks by mobs. Window in house was broken. Home was stoned several times. Police are on 24-hour detail.

Rocks St. Louis Home Put Up For Sale

St. Louis Post-Dispatch 3-16-57

ST. LOUIS — (INS) — A full-scale investigation is underway into the bombing of a southwest St. Louis home which had been posted for sale with a Negro realty firm.

Police reported that the bomb was planted under the rear porch of the home of Emerson Lloyd Diveley Friday night, March 8.

The resultant blast shattered glass remaining the rear porch, blew off the basement door and damaged part of the foundation. Windows in two adjoining homes of the white-settled neighborhood were shattered.

Diveley, in the bedroom when the bomb went off, escaped injury.

Authorities quoted him as saying he had decided to sell the one-and-one half story brick house about two weeks ago and put it up for sale with the P. C. Robinson Realty company.

"Will Sell To Anyone"

Diveley told police he would sell his place to anybody who had the money to pay for it.

Robinson, operator of the realty firm, said that while his company could be described as "a colored real estate company," sale of the Diveley residence would not be limited to Negro clients.

Diveley, operator of an auto repair shop, told authorities that he had received an anonymous telephone call about two weeks ago warning him not to sell his house "like that."

New Jersey Realtors Accused Of Discrimination By Negroes

Advertiser Wed. 6-5-57

Montgomery, Ala.

RED BANK, N.J., June 4 (AP)—Two Negroes, a lawyer and an engineer, charged last night that realtors in Monmouth County are discriminating against members of their race.

One of the men, Richard L. Johnson, a mechanical engineer employed at Ft. Monmouth, said "a well-organized gentlemen's agreement" is in operation to keep Negroes from getting "suitable housing even when they have the money for it."

Both Johnson and Merrill Richardson, an Asbury Park attorney, alluded to these charges in the course of a public hearing before the borough council. The hearing was called on creation of a Red Bank Housing Authority to get federal aid for housing here. An ordinance creating such an authority was passed at the meeting.

Pressed by newsmen after the hearing, both men bluntly charged housing discrimination in the county.

Johnson said that when he came here in 1951 from Greensboro, N.C., he was "shown ramshackle houses for sale at high prices." He said all the agents he contacted were polite, but none showed him suitable housing, even though he said he could afford it.

Johnson added: "I have no money to fight the country club city hall. Besides, I'm just not the belligerent type, and many others have the same temperament."

Richardson said he knew of no Negroes living in any of the new housing developments in this booming country. He said most Negroes were silent on the subject because "we want housing, not lawsuits."

PROTESTS HALT ANTI-BIAS HOUSING

Times P.1-E

By CHARLES G. BENNETT

New York city fathers suddenly found last week that the Wagner Administration's bill prohibiting discrimination in private apartment housing was too big a mouthful to swallow, all at once, in so short a time.

The resulting indigestion caused some political spasms that may force further consideration of the Administration bill under conditions of super-charged emotion rather than calm legislative debate.

Unexpectedly, the anti-bias housing measure, introduced only last May 21, became stalled in the City Council when a Council committee decided to lay the bill over indefinitely for further study.

Herald Tribune 6-23-57

The action, considered a victory for the city's real estate groups and others in militant opposition, touched off recriminations among the bill's proponents, largely civil rights, church and educational groups.

Many of them, who over-confidently had thought triumph to be within easy grasp in a city election year, began regrouping their forces for a new drive for the measure

The tensions and strains inherent in most legislation dealing with minority groups were largely blamed for a flurry that broke out almost immediately within the ranks of the City Council's top-heavy Democratic majority.

Councilmen Disagree

Councilman Earl Brown, Harlem Democrat and one of the anti-bias bill's three sponsors, accused Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, Brooklyn Democrat and another sponsor, of having thrown a "monkey wrench" into Council efforts to pass the bill by urging his colleagues to "go slow" in weighing the measure. The third sponsor is Stanley M. Isaacs, the Council's Republican-Liberal minority leader.

Policy spokesmen in the Council insisted the bill was not dead. With a weather eye on the torrent of mail opposing the legislation, they said the measure was too important to rush through so fast. They needed more time, they said, to consider changes and "safeguard" improvements. But they promised that a bill of some kind would be passed "well before election."

In the face of the Council's cautious stand, much of the steam has gone out of the Administration's drive for early enactment of the bill.

While reiterating his complete support of the legislation, Mayor Wagner asserted that "of course" the Council was entitled to consider changes and improvements.

An argument that appeared to weigh heavily with many of the Councilmen was the warning that mortgage loans would be curtailed if the bill was enacted —that savings banks, insurance companies and trustees would be reluctant to invest in properties likely to "deteriorate."

The contention regarding mortgage money was dealt with, one way or the other, by both proponents and opponents of the anti-discrimination bill in a City Council public hearing June 7. It has been further expanded in the heavy flow of mail both to the Mayor's office and to the Councilmen since the hearing.

Harold J. Treanor, counsel to the Real Estate Board of New York, for instance, says that if the state or municapility dictates the tenants you must take, it controls the investment.

Appeal to Public

More specifically — on the same side of the fence and on behalf of the same organization —James Andrews, executive of a property management concern in the city, implores the public to realize that most real estate bears a heavy mortgage debt.

"These mortgages usually are held by savings banks, insurance companies or trustees of private accounts, all of whom are concerned more with the safety of their investment than with the annual return," Mr. Andrews says.

"Since these trustees are responsible for the money of people which has been entrusted to them, they are wary of keeping it in property that is in danger of deterioration. Under the anti-bias law the withholding of mortgage funds would probably become critical.

"Mortgages would become payable when due and would be renewed only at more onerous terms. The ownership of property under such conditions would become much less attractive. The tendency under such conditions is for property to deteriorate physically. The city would be adversely affected by the physical deterioration of its real estate which is, after all, the first asset upon which it bases its credit."

On the other side of the investment argument, however, James H. Scheuer, chairman of the executive committee of City and Suburban Homes Company and a recognized economist, declares that there is no evidence that builders will not construct buildings that they know must be integrated or that responsible lending institutions will not provide necessary mortgage financing for these projects.

He points to some $880,000,000 in middle-income slum clearance housing construction now under way in New York City. Sponsors, he notes, have a $50,000,000 cash equity in this amount.

Several of these projects in so-called less desirable locations, Mr. Scheuer says, are being financed by leading banks and insurance companies with the assistance of Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance. Other developments, he says, are being financed without Federal help.

"Because these projects will be built at low densities with a great deal of open space and to high standards of design, they will be attractive places in which to live and their desirability should be in no way be affected for better or for worse by minority occupancy," the economist holds.

No Statistics

Because New York City, if the anti-bias law is adopted, will be a trail-blazer in applying such a policy to private rental housing, there are no hard-and-fast mortgage and loan statistics from other cities to indicate to New York just what the investment situation is likely to be here.

But Mr. Scheuer points to the view of Earl Schwulst, president of the Bowery Savings Bank, the largest savings institution in the United States. He has reiterated the willingness of his bank to insure any residential project, either multi-dwelling or single-family, which is well-planned and conceived, in a stable neighborhood, and which, therefore, is a good "housing buy" regardless of the racial background of the prospective renters or purchasers.

41-city survey shows races can live together in peace

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 6-22-57

NEW YORK The fact that colored and whites are already living together in neighborly harmony throughout the country refutes the myth that segregated housing is the "inevitable pattern." P. 16

This was the conclusion revealed in a report filed by the Committee on Civil Rights in Manhattan last week.

Indeed, the Committee presented at a special meeting at the New York School of Social Work evidences of successful "open occupancy" in private housing gathered from 41 cities.

THE COMMITTEE had also studied a mixed neighborhood in the Bronx section of this metropolitan area.

The result of the study substantiated the conclusion that colored and whites can live as good neighbors "without flight of tenants, property deterioration, decline of values or withdrawal of mortgage money."

With respect to the Bronx, 44 white residents were interviewed.

The committee reported: "The area is one where colored and whites have been living for 50 years, not only without overt friction . . . but with a substantial measure of cooperation on common community problems."

In fact, many whites have moved into the neighborhood with the prior knowledge that colored people were already living in the same neighborhood. Property values, according to the committee report, have not dropped.

* * *

THE COMMITTEE likewise placed the onus for the maintenance of segregated housing upon real estate interests.

"There is no question," it was pointed out," but that the real estate industry bears the major responsibility for maintaining the conditions under which most housing is reserved exclusively for either white people or colored people.

"The responsibility is exercised, for the most part, in a spirit of helpless conformity with 'the ways things are; a spirit which lends itself to the perpetuation of a host of shibboleths regarding bi-racial residence."

MAYOR REAFFIRMS BIAS BILL SUPPORT

Times P.31-C Thurs. 6-20-57

But Says Housing Measure May Need Modification— Favors Full Discussion

BROWN ASSAILS SHARKEY

Harlem Councilman Accuses Majority Leader of Trying to Undermine Legislation

38c

Mayor Wagner reiterated yesterday his support of the controversial measure barring discrimination in private apartment housing. But he conceded that his early unqualified endorsement might have been too sweeping.

At the same time, Earl Brown, Harlem Councilman and one of the bill's three sponsors, accused his Democratic majority leader, Joseph T. Sharkey, of having thrown a "monkey wrench" into efforts to pass the measure.

Mr. Sharkey was another sponsor of the bill. The third was Minority Leader Stanley M. Isaacs, Manhattan Republican-Liberal.

The bill, which had been put into the Council May 21 under "full-steam-ahead" support by Mayor Wagner, became stalled on Tuesday when the Council's General Welfare Committee laid it over indefinitely for further study.

Mayor Wagner told City Hall reporters yesterday that his Administration was not trying to "jam anything down anybody's throat" in pushing for passage of the housing bill. If improvements and changes are suggested, Mr. Wagner said, they should get consideration. The bill was designed to extend an existing ban on discrimination in housing rentals here.

Mayor See Modification

Earlier, in a radio interview with Martha Deane, over WOR, the Mayor conceded that the legislation probably would be modified because in some quarters the proposed penalty of $500 for violation of the bill's provisions might be "too severe."

"The bill has my backing," Mayor Wagner said, "and I believe in all fairness to the City Council they want to have it fully discussed by all people who are interested in it."

Mr. Brown's attack on Mr. Sharkey, considered unusual for a Democratic Councilman to make against his own Council party leader, was voiced at a luncheon of the forty-eighth annual meeting of the Urban League of Greater New York at the New Yorker Hotel.

The Harlem Councilman charged that Mr. Sharkey had told the General Welfare Committee that he had read the bill only two day's before Tuesday's committee meeting, and that the Council should "go slow" in acting on it.

Also noted by Mr. Brown was Mr. Sharkey's assertion that his name was on the bill as a sponsor only at Mayor Wagner's request.

Mr. Brown told the Urban League that the City Concil would take further action on the bill within four to six weeks "unless more gimmicks and Mickey Finns are slipped to Mayor Wagner, Mr. Sharkey or Tammany Leader Carmine G. De Sapio."

Bill's Future Tied to Politics

The Councilman did not amplify the statement or explain his view of Mr. De Sapio's connection with the bill. At another point, Mr. Brown said the future of the bill depended more on politics than on ideals.

"I steel feel we are going to get a good bill through," Mr. Brown declared, "but sometimes I doubt the virtue of some of the other members of the Council."

Mr. Brown said there was no uprising against the bill from New Yorkers generally, but "it was a slick job done by the New York City Real Estate Board."

The Council committee's action Tuesday was considered to be a victory for the real estate boards of the five boroughs and others who had been conducting an all-out campaign against the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs measure.

Another factor was the heavy mail opposing the bill received by the Mayor's office and the Councilmen. The mail ran between 3 and 4 to 1 in opposition.

Charles H. Silver, president of the Board of Education, told the Urban League he was disappointed over the Council committee's action on the bill. Another luncheon speaker, James Felt, chairman of the City Planning Commission, said he endorsed the bill "with some minor modifications."

HOUSING BIAS CASE APPROVED BY COURT

Times P.35-M

Wed. 6-5-57

The Appellate Division in Brooklyn yesterday reversed a State Supreme Court order prohibiting the State Commission Against Discrimination from holding its first public hearing on a housing discrimination case.

New York

The hearing, involving a complaint by Norris Shervington, a Negro, against Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., of New Rochelle, was rescheduled for 10:30 A. M. tomorrow.

Agreement on the new date was reached at a conference by Commissioner Ward B. Arbury and Joseph R. Pisani, attorney for the private housing corporation. Mr. Arbury will preside at the hearing in the commission office at 270 Broadway.

The corporation is also challenging the Constitutional right of the state to prohibit racial and religious discrimination in Federally aided private housing. Mr. Shervington complained that the corporation had denied him an apartment in a development it operates that was built under a mortgage loan insured by the Federal Housing Administration. Dates for argument on this phase of the action were changed yesterday from Friday to June 19 in Albany Supreme Court.

New York State Anti-Bias Agency Rules In Favor Of Negro Barred From Pelham Hall Apartments

Call Times P.17-12-57

Kansas City, Mo.

By Samuel P. Perry, Jr.

NEW YORK.— (ANP) — As was expected, the State Commission against Discrimination (SCAD) has voted unanimously that Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc. of New Rochelle, N. Y., had violated the state anti-bias law by refusing to rent an apartment to Norris G. Shervington, office manager for Associated Publishers, Inc., advertising representative.

Prior to the public hearing, the Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., operators of the Rochelle Arms, the apartment house in question, had stated publicly that they would take the case before the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary, rather than admit a Negro.

The decision of SCAD was rendered by Commissioners Ward B. Arbury, Nicholas H. Pinto and J. Edward Conway.

The commissioners found that the landlord had failed to "deny" the charge of flagrant discrimination brought against it and had rebuffed efforts by Commissioner Charles Abrams, chairman of SCAD, to "conciliate" the case without a public hearing.

Joseph R. Pisani, the attorney for the respondent, contended at the hearing that the state as such had no right to prohibit racial and religious discrimination in private housing backed by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) or the Veterans Administration (VA). He further argued that his client had received a commitment for FHA insurance June 30, 1955, one day before the provisions of the state law went into effect, on July 1, 1955.

However, the panel of commissioners of SCAD asserted:

"We must proceed on the assumption that the (state) law is valid in all respects and that (we have) no legal authority to question the constitutionality of this or any other act of the Legislature under which (we) may be acting.

"The issuance of a commitment by the Federal Housing Administration does not constitute the insurance by the Federal Government or any agency thereof of a loan to finance the construction of the premises in question.

In such an instance the commitment is only a statement of terms upon which the mortgage will be insured if all details of the proposed structure comply with the rules of FHA and meet the approval of the Federal Housing Commission, according to the SCAD commisioners.

Further, the panel took the position that the actual loan was obtained on November 18, 1955, thus bringing Rochelle firms within the orbit of the law.

The next step is an order from SCAD directing the Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., to "cease and desist from such unlawful discriminatory practices." The order normally issued within ten days following public hearings at which the charge of discriminatory practices is found by a panel of commissioners. Following receipt of the order, the respondent may file its exceptions to the order.

(Although the respondent has indicated the court action will follow the decision of the SCAD panel, it is likely that in a case before a federal court the U.S. Attorney General would file a brief as amicus curiae supporting the State Commission Against Discrimination.)

HOUSING RACIAL BAN CHALLENGED

Times-Picayune Fri. 7-5-57

Apartment Owner Told to End Discrimination

New Orleans La.

NEW YORK, July 4 (AP) — The state commission against discrimination has ordered a New Rochelle apartment owner to stop discriminating against Negroes.

The ruling is the first under new provisions of the state law. A commission spokesman said an expected court test of the ruling would be the nation's first of such a law.

The case was brought against Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., owners of an apartment development at New Rochells known as Rochelle Arms, after Norris G. Shervington, a Negro, complained he was denied an apartment because of his race.

The new provisions of the anti-bias law forbid discrimination because of race, color or creed in private housing which receives public assistance, in this case federal mortgage insurance.

The housing firm admitted refusing to rent Shervington an apartment, and based its defense on two allegations of the law's alleged unconstitutionality, and on a technical ground involving the statute of limitations.

City Council Shelves Bill on Housing Bias

Herald Tribune P.15

The politically explosive anti-bias housing bill that would outlaw racial discrimination in private housing will be shelved until after election day, it was indicated at City Hall today.

Wed 9-25-57

Despite a plea by Councilman Earl Brown (D., Man.), one of the bill's sponsors, for speedy action on the measure as "a moral shot in the arm" for the whole nation, the City Council put off action yesterday.

Wed 9-25-57

Democratic Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, another of the bill's sponsors, told reporters he didn't know when action would be taken on the anti-bias measure.

Letters to

To Ban Bias in Housing

Pro-Segregation Position Declared Based on Erroneous Notions

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Charles G. Bennett's article in your issue of June 23, "Protests Halt Anti-Bias Housing," is apparently an effort to present the arguments pro and con the Wagner administration's bill prohibiting discrimination in private housing in the City of New York.

Mr. Bennett's article presented forcefully the point of view of some of the city's bankers and real estate brokers against the measure. Unfortunately, Mr. Bennett omitted some well-known and often-repeated rebuttals which conclusively point up the fact that the whole pro-discrimination case of the real estate-bankers group is based on a series of erroneous notions.

First, the myth that the occasion of Negro occupancy necessarily leads to housing deterioration must be rejected not only as incorrect but as bigoted. As for interracial communities, the bulk of the evidence reveals that when a Negro moves into a neighborhood from which he was formerly excluded, and that neighborhood remains stable, the Negro tends to expend proportionately more capital and energy than his neighbors in an effort to disprove myths about him.

Causes for Deterioration

The most contradictory aspect of the pro-segregation position is that the same bank-real estate forces who oppose the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs measure own the overwhelming proportion of the deteriorating property. Deterioration in these segregated areas has occurred through the overloading of existing facilities, the subdividing of single dwelling units and disinterest in proper maintenance, normally precipitated by white owners motivated by the lure of short-run high returns.

Secondly, the dire prediction that passage of the measure would lead to loss of real estate revenue is equally fallacious.

Segregated neighborhoods are almost invariably located in those parts of the city "in transition," which are also the most expensive for the city to maintain. This is a pathetic fact in the face of the inadequate services that these neighborhoods receive. Further, if the opponents of the anti-bias measure who masquerade in the archaic clothing of Smithian laissez-faire really believed in their own premises they would, on the contrary, be arguing that the investment picture would be enhanced by desegregation in housing because it would render available in the market place the tremendous demand for housing by groups now restricted by pro-segregation real estate and bank policies.

Since the opponents of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill speak of losses, let us consider the losses to the City of New York if the measure is indefinitely tabled. Chief Justice Warren's statement in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, "Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal," is even more applicable to housing.

Without the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill there is denied to a numerically important segment of New York's population the right to choose not to live in some of the least desirable housing areas of the city. Further, the failure of passage of this anti-bias measure will frustrate the process of integration in New York City's education system and, more important, will postpone the achievement of healthy human relations.

Political Aspect

Finally, at the level of political expediency, the Wagner administration and the New York State Democratic organization might lose vital popular support. The 1956 election provided emphatic evidence of the growing disenchantment of the Negro voter with the Democratic party both nationally and locally. The dissidence of Congressman Powell, the Prayer Pilgrimage to Washington and the declining percentages of the Democratic party returns in Harlem are all signs of this tendency.

The anti-bias legislation now before the City Council is in keeping with the spirit of our times and the necessities that we face in our efforts to sustain world leadership. It is a start toward meeting the pressing needs of the Negro and Puerto Rican. But its anti-bias nature is much broader and encompasses other groups suffering similarly from discrimination.

In the enactment of any public policy the Legislature must of necessity consider the balance of forces. In this instance the blatant denial of human rights to a major segment of the population is arrayed against the erroneous analysis of the property rights of a few.

Housing Barrier Is Broken

New York—White and Negro Americans are living as neighbors in complete harmony in many communities where the racial barrier in housing has been broken down, a country-wide survey by the committee on Civil Rights in Manhattan shows.

A report on the survey's findings was released by the committee at an open meeting at the New York School of Social Work. It showed that more than 73 communities in 20 states have broken through the so-called "open-occupancy" barricade in housing.

"This survey, which is an extensive accumuation of facts dealing with open occupancy experiences, provides positive evidence that white and Negro people can live together in peace and security," Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, minister emeritus of the Riverside Church here, declared in a foreword to the study.

Negro Pastor Ends Anti-Bias Housing Trek

NEW YORK, July 30 (AP)—A Negro tent preacher walked nine miles from Harlem to City Hall yesterday carrying a sign calling for "no compromise" on a pending City Council bill aimed against discrimination in private housing.

The Rev. Milton Perry, 22-year-old former pastor of the Deliverance Temple Church in Jersey City, N.J., set out at 10 a.m. from a vacant lot at 135th St. and Lenox Ave. where he has been conducting revival meetings in a tent for several weeks. He arrived at City Hall at 4:50 p.m.

He carried a Bible and wore a sign which read: "I am walking from Harlem to City Hall calling for a no compromise on the housing bill on discrimination now before City Hall. No Munich."

When he arrived at City Hall, the preacher complied with a policeman's request that he remove the sign because Park Department regulations forbid signs or religious displays in City Hall Plaza. Then he stayed in the Plaza for a short time to pray for passage of the anti-bias bill without compromise.

Last May, he had walked 220 miles from Jersey City to Washington, D.C., to attend a prayer pilgrimage for freedom.

Blame Realtors For Jim Crowism

NEW YORK (ANP) — Harlem leaders stated this week that powerful real estate interests in greater New York have sounded a warning they intend to keep battling to keep segregation and discrimination in housing in this, the world's greatest city.

Court Test Of New York's Anti Bias Law Slated

NEW YORK—(ANPA)— The way was cleared Tuesday for a court test of the housing provisions of the state anti-bias law when the New York State Commission Against Discrimination ordered a New Rochelle, N.Y. apartment house to rent an apartment to a colored person.

Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., operators of the Rochelle Arms—the apartment house involved in the complaint—have said they would take the case to the United States Supreme Court before complying with the order.

The charge of discrimination was brought in December by Norris G. Shervington, office manager of a Chicago business firm. He charged that the firm refused to rent him a $158-a-month apartment in a New Rochelle building because he is colored.

The commission held public hearings on the complaint and Tuesday said it will order Pelham Hall "to cease and desist from such unlawful discriminatory practices."

A spokesman for the commission said Pelham Hall did not deny the charge but contended that the state has no authority to prohibit racial and religious discrimination in private housing. The corporation also contends that a clause in the law making it retroactive to July 1, 1955,, is unconstitutional. The building was completed early this year.

The corporation also contended that the state may enact housing laws with state mortgage guarantees but not those insured by the Federal Housing Administration or guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration.

But the commission ruled that the issuance of a commitment by the FHA does not necessarily mean that the Federal Government will insure the loan. The commitment if only a statement of the terms upon which the mortgage will be insured if the proposed structure complies with FHA rules and meet the approval of the Federal Housing Commissioner, the commission said.

Rental Bias Bill Revised, Drops Fine

Would Screen All Complaints

By David Wise

A revised bill to bar racial bias in private housing here that eliminates criminal penalties for landlords and sets up machinery to screen tenant complaints will be presented to the City Council's general welfare committee today. It appeared headed for passage next month.

It was learned that legal aids to Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, Brooklyn Democrat, were preparing the amendments yesterday in time for presentation to the committee at 11 a. m. at City Hall.

The changes are essentially those favored by both Sen. Jacob K. Javits and Charles Abrams, chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination.

The amendments are also favored by Mr. Sharkey, one of three co-sponsors of the bill in its original form, who modified his stand when the measure ran aground in a storm of opposition by real estate groups and individuals. The original bill, despite the backing of Mayor Wagner's administration, failed to come out of committee last month.

A spokesman for Mr. Sharkey said yesterday that the "tentative timetable" calls for final passage of a revised bill in August.

At today's closed meeting, the general welfare committee, which has the matter before it, will consider the Sharkey amendments and any other amendments put forward by Council members. Eric J. Treulich, Queens Democrat, who is committee chairman, has announced he will propose an amendment to exempt co-operative apartments from provisions of the bill. Mr. Sharkey is reportedly against any such exemption.

To Eliminate Fines

As the measure now stands, $500 fines are provided for landlords who violate the proposed law, and there is no machinery provided to "screen" complaints against landlords. These are two factors that drew the most violent opposition.

The Sharkey amendment, it was understood, eliminate all criminal penalties, including the $500 fine, from the bill. The courts could still impose civil penalties on violators.

The amendments would also designate the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations as the agency to hear complaints of discrimination. If found valid, the case would then be referred to the Corporation Counsel, the city's legal arm, who would go into court.

The procedure would not stop a tenant from going directly into court, but, it was said, might act to "discourage" those without valid claims from pressing their complaints.

On the basis of amendments approved at today's committee session, it was said, a proposed revised bill will be printed. This in turn will be the subject of a committee hearing later this month, at which the spokesman for Mr. Sharkey said a cross-section of groups and individuals both for and against the bill will be invited to appear.

Further changes could be made in the bill after that, with final passage slated for next month.

TENANT AID SOUGHT IN ANTI-BIAS FIGHT

Tenants in privately owned apartment houses will soon be asked to support the Metropolitan Association of Real Estate Boards in its fight against the City Council's anti-bias housing bill.

Robert D. Wagner, president of the association, said yesterday that "hundreds of thousands" of leaflets setting forth arguments against the measure would soon be distributed among such tenants.

The association, whose membership includes the real estate boards of the five boroughs, urged all persons opposed to the measure to express their opposition in letters to Mayor Wagner and Joseph P. Sharkey, vice chairman of the City Council. Mr. Sharkey is one of the bill's sponsors. The others are Councilmen Stanley M. Isaacs and Earl Brown.

Arguments for and against the measure will be heard by the Council's General Welfare Committee at an open meeting next Tuesday at 11 A. M.

HOUSING BIAS CASE AWAITS A RULING

The State Commission Against Discrimination yesterday ended its first hearing on a complaint of discrimination in housing. A decision is expected early next week.

A three-man panel heard a complaint by Norris Shervington, a Negro, that a $158-a-month apartment had been denied him by a New Rochelle landlord, Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., because of his race. The apartment house was built last year with a mortgage loan insured by the Federal Housing Administration. State law prohibits discrimination in this type of housing.

The development did not deny that it sought to exclude Mr. Shervington. It contended instead that the Federal aid provisions of the state anti-discrimination law were unconstitutional.

The landlord also contended that the apartment house was not subject to the Federal aid provisions because the mortgage arrangements were made before the provisions went into effect on July 1, 1955.

Sponsors of Bill

The anti-bias bill is sponsored by Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, Democrat of Brooklyn; Councilman Earl Brown, Democrat of Harlem, and Minority Leader Stanley M. Isaacs, Republican-Liberal of Manhattan.

The measure would make it a misdemeanor to refuse to rent or sell dwelling space in apartment houses, residential hotels or tenements for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

The Interracial Council's meeting was held for the purpose of presenting the sixteenth annual James J. Hoey Awards for Interracial Justice to George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations, and to James W. Dorsey, chairman of the Wisconsin Industrial Commission's Fair Employment Division Advisory Committee.

The silver-medal award, conferred each year upon a Negro and a white Catholic layman who have made outstanding contributions to interracial justice, was established in 1942 y the family of the late James F. Hoey, first president of the Interracial Council.

Mr. Meany was not present at the meeting, but his award was accepted for him by William Collins, New York regional director of the A.F.L.-C.I.O.

In an acceptance message read by Mr. Collins, Mr. Meany said American labor believed that "interracial justice can be achieved in our time."

SPELLMAN BACKS ANTI-BIAS HOUSING

Cardinal Endorses Principle of Bill in Council—Two Get Interracial Awards

Cardinal Spellman endorsed yesterday the principle of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs housing anti-bias bill now before the City Council.

In a message to the Catholic Interracial Council of New York, the Cardinal said it was not his practice to make statements concerning any particular piece of legislation, this being the province of legislators rather than churchmen.

He went on to say, however, that as many of his previous remarks would indicate, he and the church he represented were opposed to any discrimination, particularly when it affected basic human needs such as shelter. Therefore, he said, he fully supported the principle of the housing anti-bias bill and hoped the City Council would pass a "good, just and workable law."

The Cardinal's message was conveyed to a meeting of the Catholic Interracial Council at the Cathedral High School, 560 Lexington Avenue, by Msgr. Cornelius J. Drew, pastor of St. Charles (Negro Mission) Church at 211 West 141st Street.

N. Y. asks order forcing rental to Negro

NEW YORK, Nov. 21—(AP)—The State Commission Against Discrimination will apply next Tuesday in State Supreme Court at White Plains for an order directing a New Rochelle landlord to accept a Negro applicant for an apartment as an alternative to contempt of court charges.

Henry Spitz, general counsel for SCAD, announced the move yesterday.

LAST JULY, the landlord, Pelham Hall Apartments Inc., was held by the commission to have violated the state anti-bias law in refusing to rent to Norris Schervington, an office manager, a $158-a-month apartment in its Rochelle Arms development.

It was built last year under a mortgage loan insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

SCAD filed a motion in State Supreme Court last month indicating it would ask the court to order the landlord to comply with its directive to accept Scervington.

IN ANSWER, the corporation challenged the commission order holding it guilty of discrimination, and also the constitutionality of the law prohibiting racial discrimination in housing developments, including those insured by federal mortgages.

Meanwhile, it was announced by Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz that his office will petition the court for permission to intervene in defense of the law's constitutionality.

Anti-Bias Housing Bill Due

NEW YORK — Moving into the state-wide picture, the debated anti-bias housing bill, that caused Mayor Wagner many pre-election headaches, now comes up in the state legislature when on January 7, an anti-bias housing bill will be proposed.

Irate legislators are aware of the need for the bill, but they are particularly incensed over the fact that Charles Abrams, chairman of State Committee Against Discrimination and the Liberal Party have their version of the bill they are anxious to push through the legislative body.

It is reported that Mr. Abrams has a Democratic and a Republican sponsor for the legislation, which as yet, has not been passed in New York City where the troublesome Issacs-Brown bill is being bandied back and forth with adoption of the measure still far distant.

Long before the election got under way, Mayor Wagner declared he favored the bill; then his political advisers warned his honor that it would be little short of suicide to advocate elimination of racial bias in housing and the Mayor listened.

Now the Brown-Isaacs bill has become a football for the City Council and in a recent report, a watered down version was offered although several months had been spent in making the investigations leading to the report.

Housing Bias Bill Hearing on Tuesday

World-Telegram + Sun 7-24-57

A bill to outlaw racial and religious discrimination in New York City's private housing is due for accelerated action by the City Council.

Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, co-sponsor of the bill introduced last May, said yesterday that an open meeting on the measure has been scheduled by the Council's General Welfare Committee for 11 a.m. next Tuesday. Modifying amendments to the bill will be introduced at that time.

The Sharkey-sponsored amendments would eliminate the penalty provisions of the original bill which would have made it a misdemeanor, punishable by $500 fine, to refuse to rent space in apartment houses for reasons of race, color, religion or national origin. They also designate the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations as the screening agency for complaints with complainants having the right of appeal to the State Supreme Court.

Realty Men Find Joker In 'Bias' Law

World-Telegram + Sun P. 11 Tues. 7-26-57

Leaflets to Ask Tenants' Letters

New York

Robert D. Wagner, head of the Brooklyn Real Estate Board, speaking for the Metropolitan Assn. of Real Estate Boards, of which he also is president, said today that the association is printing several hundred thousand leaflets objecting to the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs anti-discrimination bill now in the City Council.

The leaflets, which are to be distributed to tenants in private apartments throughout the city, will urge that letters in opposition of the proposed law be written to Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Council Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey.

The realtors find a "joker" in the proposed housing law that would force anyone leasing an apartment who rented out a room to accept whoever applied for such shelter. "The tenant would not be able to control the type of person who might wish to rent their rooms," Mr. Wagner warned.

"We believe that this bill, if it should become law," the association spokesman added, "will stir up more racial tension than ever has existed in this city. We also believe that before voting on the measure, members of the Council should hear from the people how they feel about it.

"Further, as real estate men we believe that the adverse economic effects of such legislation upon the city are bound to be very serious indeed, since property values will be affected which are the base of the city's main source of revenue and credit," he concluded.

Luxury Co-ops Called Bias Core

World-Telegram + Sun P. 1 Tues. 7-30-57

By THOMAS FUREY, Staff Writer

Luxury cooperative apartments form "the hard core of residential anti-Semitism in New York City," a spokesman for the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations charged today at a hearing on revisions in the proposed anti-discrimination rent law.

Dr. Frank S. Horne, executive director of the commission, told the City Council's general welfare committee that the proposed exclusion of luxury apartments from the provisions of the law would give legal sanction "to the very evils we are seeking to eliminate."

He cautioned the council against accepting any compromise that would exclude existing cooperatives and cover new ones.

Graphic evidence of the feeling aroused by the controversial bill was seen in the outpouring of more than 200 persons wanting to speak on the measure. The council committee, obviously taken by surprise, ruled that, while the meeting was public, it wasn't a public hearing.

Committee Chairman Eric J. Treulich explained that only those persons would be permitted to speak who had been formally invited by Joseph T. Sharkey, council president.

The proposed anti-discrimination legislation was opposed on all counts by James Andrews, speaking for the Real Estate Boards of New York. He declared that "the chief evil" of the bill was its "denial of discretion to the owner of property to manage it in whatever way seems most profitable to him."

"Property owners object to this bill because their tenants prefer to live with people like themselves," he said. "Believe me, gentlemen, if the average property owner could profit more from one group of tenants than another his prejudices, if he had any, would soon be soothed."

Mr. Andrews predicted that, if the law is passed, "It will bring all law into disrepute because it will be evaded in one way or another."

Harlem Housing Plans Outlined

World-Telegram + Sun P. 17 Thurs. 7-25-57

The "block-buster" type of slum clearance cannot be used in Harlem because of the big problem of relocating families in that crowded section.

This is one of the highlights of a comprehensive set of recommendations for Harlem redevelopment being presented by the District 10 Planning Board this afternoon at a meeting with city and state officials in the Bowery Savings Bank.

The board urged use of 125 vacant land sites in Harlem for new housing and cited "the need of avoiding future economic and racial ghettos by . . . building for middle-income families of all races, religions and nationalities."

The board pointed out that Harlem residents are at the bottom of the New York ladder in terms of life expectancy, but it sees hope for the future in increased facilities at Harlem Hospital and higher numbers of community health stations.

Among other recommendations are the building of a cultural center with meeting rooms and a large auditorium for concerts and shows, better vocational guidance to utilize "the full Negro potential as a labor source" and encouragement of the location there of light industrial, commercial and manufacturing concerns.

Hearing Set On Housing Bias Bill

Herald Tribune Wed. 7-24-57 New York

Sharkey Backs Milder Version

By David Wise

Action on the controversial bill to outlaw racial and religious discrimination in private housing spurred yesterday by one of the measure's sponsors, City Council Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey.

The Brooklyn Democrat, who stuck by his prediction that the measure would be passed next month, announced that the Council's general welfare committee would hold a hearing on the bill Tuesday at City Hall. He said individuals and representatives of various groups interested in the measure would be invited to speak.

The bill up for consideration Tuesday is an amended, milder version of the original measure, which ran into a storm of opposition from real estate and other groups. As a result, the bill—despite backing by Mayor Wagner—was held up in committee for amendments.

The new version eliminates $500 penalties for landlords who violate its provisions, designates the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations as the agency to screen complaints, and exempts co-operative apartments. Like its predecessor, the new version is sponsored by Mr. Sharkey, Councilman Earl Brown, Manhattan Democrat, and Stanley M. Isaacs, Manhattan Republican.

Mr. Sharkey said yesterday that he now feels that the provision exempting co-operative apartments from the bias bill should be given "serious consideration." The amendment was sponsored by Eric J. Treulich, Queens Democrat, and committee chairman. Earlier, Mr. Sharkey had been reported as against exemption of co-operatives.

Injunction Right

It was largely through Mr. Sharkey's efforts that the $500 fines for landlords were eliminated and the creening process set up. Under this, if a complaint cannot be settled amicably, the intergroup commission can go into court to seek an injunction, enforceable by the authority of the courts, to compel compliance.

Councilman Brown has been reported as favoring a further amendmend to allow an aggrieved tenant to go directly into court if he feels the commission is lagging in taking action on his case.

The bill applies only to multiple dwellings. It does not apply to one-and-two family homes, or to the sale of developments of nine homes or less which are adjacent to one another.

Rebuffs Isaacs Charge That Administration Is Stalling Until After Election

New York

OPPOSES A REFERENDUM

City-Wide Vote Proposed in Council—Change Asked in Enfocing Measure

Mayor Wagner denied yesterday a charge that his administration was stalling until after Election Day any action on the controversial bill to bar discrimination in private apartment renting.

He called for action to be taken before the Nov. 4 Mayoral election. He said also that he was opposed to submitting the measure to a referendum vote, as proposed by some members of the City Council.

The stalling accusation was made by Councilman Stanley M. Isaacs, Republican-Liberal of Manhattan. Mr. Isaacs made his charge after a heated meeting of the Council's Committee on General Welfare had discussed the bill for more than two hours and had adjourned without action.

Councilman Eric J. Treulich, Queens Democrat and chairman of the committee, said that it would meet again in about two weeks to consider action on the bill, the advisability of seeking a city-wide referendum and a proposed amendment to strengthen its enforcement provisions.

Brown Joins in Attack

The Mayor's denial of Mr. Isaac's charge was made through William R. Peer, his executive secretary. The Mayor expressed the belief that the Council did not have the power to require a referendum on the measure. He also expressed his personal opposition to a referendum.

Mr. Isaacs and Councilman Earl Brown, Democrat of Manhattan, joined forces in charging that there was an obvious attempt by the Wagner administration to postpone action on the bill until after Eelection Day.

"The Mayor's silence on the bill since he first endorsed it a few months ago has been conspicuous," Mr. Isaacs said. "I believe the whole process is an effort to stall the bill until after election and that it will never be acted on. The Mayor is either walking out on the bill or is too timid to express an opinion."

Mr. Treulich said that all the members of the General Welfare Committee favored anti-discrimination legislation to cover private apartment rentals and sales but, with the exception of Mr. Brown, thought that a referendum would be desirable.

Enforcement Unit Studied

At the regular Council meeting following the committee session, Councilman Frank V. Smith, Democrat of Queens, introduced a resolution requesting the Legislature to authorize such a referendum.

The resolution was referred to the General Welfare Committee. It was pointed out that such a referendum, if authorized, could not be held before the November, 1958, election.

Mr. Treulich said that his committee had discussed a proposal to place enforcement of the bill's provisions in the hands of a new three-member commission instead of the Commission on Intergroup Relations.

He declared that the committee would not unduly delay action on the bill but did not intend to be pressured into hurried action on a measure of such importance.

The same view was expressed by Councilman Joseph V. Sharkey, majority leader of the Council and a co-sponsor of the measure. The other sponsors are Mr. Isaacs and Mr. Brown. Mr. Sharkey, a Brooklyn Democrat, said he knew that the Mayor desired prompt action on the measure.

Realty Bias Hearing Is Bitter Row

Most of Public Fails to Get In

By David Wise

Bitter words and an overflow audience that created a show of its own characterized a two-and-one-half-hour City Council hearing yesterday on the controversial bill to outlaw racial and religious bias in private housing.

The general welfare committee hearing at City Hall got off to a raucous start, and never quite got back on an orderly track. Some 200 persons who showed up about 10 a. m. found the doors to the Council chamber locked.

They were admitted to the chamber an hour later only to find that the hearing was being conducted in an adjoining committee room in which there was no room for most of the audience. The committee room was air-conditioned and the Council chamber was steaming.

By Invitation Only

Eric J. Treulich, Queens Democrat and committee chairman, explained that "this was not a public hearing" but an "open hearing" of the committee, with speakers by invitation only. He said the public-address system would be left open so that the overflow audience could listen in.

Mrs. Grace Liotta, who later appeared before the committee to oppose the bias bill, seized a microphone at the front of the chamber and denounced the procedure. Mrs. Liotta—a short, plump and highly vocal woman—disrupted the New York State Legislature last winter when she invaded the Assembly chamber with a shrill whistle and several hundred followers to protest extension of rent controls.

Four speakers, led by Frank S. Horne, executive director of the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations, supported the bill and blasted a proposed amendment to exempt co-operative apartments from its provisions.

Dr. Horne said co-operative apartments constitute "the hard core of residential anti-Semitism in New York City," and he warned that exempting them from the law would be a "selling point" for operators "who seek to make rich profits from racial and religious exclusion."

James Andrews, spokesman for the Real Estate Board of New York, led the three opposition speakers. He said the real estate interests were "unanimous" in looking forward to the day when there is no racial prejudice. But that point, he said, has not been reached.

"Property owners object to this bill because their tenants prefer to live with people like themselves," he said. "We simply want to protect real estate—one of the city's greatest assets."

Public Housing

Mr. Andrews said that public housing, which is already covered by anti-bias legislation, would be "practically 100 per cent non-white in the foreseeable future" because "white tenants of public housing projects are moving out."

"We simply say that the public is not yet ready for integration in any housing," Mr. Andrews declared, "and that forcing such an issue presents great danger to the real estate values and the race relations of this city."

When non-whites move into a neighborhood, "mortgage troubles follow as the night the day," he said, adding that "fire-insurance companies, especially the mutual companies, frequently cancel their policies as soon as they discover that there is a mixed tenantry in a building."

"You cannot force people by law to love each other," he said. Mr. Andrews told the committee that "outright and unqualified support" of the bill by the Communist party was the measure's "most damning attribute."

"Tyranny and Communism"

"Tyranny and communism! You are the life, the fabric, the warp and woof of this bill! Mr. Andrews concluded. "Twin prophets of iniquity, we reject you!"

Mr. Andrews was questioned sharply when he had finished by Councilman Earl Brown, Manhattan Democrat, of Harlem, and one of three co-sponsors of the measure.

Council leaders said after the meeting that the bill would undoubtedly pass next month, with the co-operative apartment exemption the only uundecided issue. There was talk in the Council of an amendment that would include existing co-operatives under the anti-bias bill and exempt new ones.

Apartment Owners Defy State on Negro

BY GEORGE MONTGOMERY,
Staff Writer.

New York

NEW ROCHELLE, July 24.—An attorney for the owners of a New Rochelle apartment house said today they will not comply with an order to offer an apartment to Norris G. Shervington, Negro publishing company employee.

The lawyer, Joseph R. Pisani of 249 Huguenot St., said the owners of the Rochelle Arms Apartments, 300 Pelham Rd., both in this city, would either appeal yesterday's order of the State Commission Against Discrimination or "do nothing and force the commission to take us into State Supreme Court for an order of compliance."

Once in court, said the attorney, the landlord corporation, Pelham Hall Apartments Inc., would attack the constitutionality of a state law which bars discrimination in buildings with mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

Meanwhile, the 46-year-old Mr. Shervington, employed by Associated Publishers Inc. at 31 W. 46th St., New York City, said he would not drop his fight to rent a $158-a-month apartment at Rochelle Arms. But he disclosed he has found "satisfactory accommodations" for his wife and baby daughter in an upper Manhattan apartment and was "thinking seriously of buying a cooperative apartment."

Mr. Shervington applied for a Rochelle Arms apartment last December after his firm transferred him here from Chicago. Yesterday's SCAD decision found Pelham Hall and its officers—Albercio Pompa, Vincenzo Coconato and Joseph Markoly—had "engaged in unlawful discriminatory practices" in deyning Mr. Shervington a 4½-room apartment.

Mrs. Roosevelt, Lehman and Javits Support City Law Against Discrimination

By EMMA HARRISON

Political and civic leaders said yesterday that the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill against discrimination in housing was, variously, correct, amendable and passable—but probably not until after the city election next month.

Sharing a generally optimistic view where Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Senator Jacob K. Javits, former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, Jackie Robinson and Charles Abrams, chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination.

They spoke at a day-long session of the New York State Committee on Discrimination in Housing at the New Yorker Hotel. Most of them appeared to agree that Mayor Wagner backed the bill and would help it through when the time came.

Both Mrs. Roosevelt and Senator Javits stressed the importance of the bill, which would ban discrimination in housing in New York City, in helping to restore world prestige lost during the integration crisis in Little Rock, Ark.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who said she thought the "Mayor is honestly with us" on the bill, reported that in her recent trip to the Soviet Union she found that incidents of discrimination in this country were "used against us throughout the world."

Senator Javits, a Republican, emphasized the importance of "practicing what we preach in New York City on issues of discrimination in housing." He said that the fight for further civil rights legislation would be continued when Congress returned in January and that the attitude in New York would be an important factor.

Amendment Suggested

He said the bill should be amended to follow the model of the New York State laws against discriminatioin in enforcement provisions, so as not to rely primarily on criminal penalties. This would call for enforcement through a city commission against discrimination in housing, he added. This group would use mediation, conciliation and technical assistance, with court injunctions as primary means of enforcement.

In a message sent to the meeting, Mr. Lehman, a Democrat, said there was no basis "for questioning Mayor Wagner's good faith in this matter." He urged the Mayor to push the legislation as soon as possible with whatever "constructive modifications" deemed necessary as early as possible.

Integration in housing is the most critical aspect of the civil rights problem in the North, the former Senator added.

Mr. Robinson, the former baseball player, declared that while many persons were indignant about the Little Rock situation, it should be remembered that "Harlem is better and longer known than Little Rock around the world as a symbol of America's discrimination against the Negro."

He said that political leaders should be made aware of their obligations at times other than just before elections and that they should all be evaluated in terms of what they finally do. He said that included Mayor Wagner, Governor Harriman and President Eisenhower.

Mr. Abrams said there was little doubt that the ctiy housing bill would soon be law. He warned, however, that not all solutions to housing integration would come by passage of the bill.

New York City Split Asunder By Controversial Bill To End Its Desegregation Problems

Commercial Appeal 8-4-57

Private Housing Measure Would Stop Discrimination, Because of Race Or Religion, In Renting Tenements And Apartments

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—New York City has its desegregation problems, too.

The nation's largest city, with the largest Negro community in the nation, is weighing a controversial bill to eliminate discrimination in private housing.

The bill, now before the City Council, comes on the heels of a hotly-debated action by school authorities in redistricting school neighborhoods to provide greater balance between whites and non-whites in classrooms.

Hearings on the housing bill have brought out equally vocal friends and foes. Proponents, led by Mayor Robert F. Wagner, term it "right and essential." Opponents, led largely by real estate groups, have cried "tyranny" and "communism."

Exempts Some Houses

The bill would make it an offense to refuse to rent or sell dwelling space in apartments, tenements or residential hotel suites for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

It would affect 1,787,103 housing units, but would exempt one and two family houses, of which there are some 725,000.

The city's population of roughly eight million includes about 750,000 Negroes, of whom about one-third are of Puerto Rican origin.

Most of them live in Harlem slums in northern Manhattan. Others live in Brooklyn's Stuyvesant section and a few other shabby neighborhoods.

There is no law forbidding them to live elsewhere.

But many landlords, whatever their personal views on discrimination, fear that if they rent an apartment to a Negro family in a white area their white tenants will move out. The landlords argue that they would be hit economically.

Unduly Fearful

Proponents of the bill hold the landlords are unduly fearful and that the real estate interests have exaggerated the possible impact.

The housing bill, as presently constituted, provides a $500 penalty for violation.

However, the council is studying proposed amendments that would eliminate the penalty and instead refer reported violations to the city's commission on intergroup relations. The commission would have discretion as to whether to bring court action.

Another proposed amendment would exempt cooperative apartments suites — those that are owned rather than rented by the occupant—from provisions of the bill.

No date has been set for council action on the amendments or on the bill itself.

The pros and cons of the bill have been debated at two hearings since the measure was introduced last May 21.

Mayor Wagner's Views

Mayor Wagner, a Democrat, expressed his views in this statement:

"I believe that it is right and essential. I believe that it ranks with our existing legislation against discrimination in employment, public accommodations and publicly-assisted housing.

"I firmly believe that New York City must show the way to our fellow Americans all over the United States; that we can speak in behalf of freedom and democracy throughout the world only if our own house is in order."

In similar vein, the Very Rev. James A. Pike, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine (Episcopalian), said:

"So long as Harlem stands as a grim symbol of segregation and undemocratic treatment of minorities, so long will New York City contribute to the distrust and hesitation with which our country's professions of democracy are viewed by the colored millions of Asia and Africa."

Leader Of Opposition

James Andrews, representing the Real Estate Board of New York, is a leader of the opposition.

He has termed the bill "a mischevious piece of folly" that would drive upper income groups out of the city, would lead to the lessening or complete withdrawal of mortgage loans, and generally cause the city to deteriorate.

Mr. Andrews contends that an owner of property has the right to accept tenants of his choice and to reject those he does not want, regardless of race.

"We do not believe," he said, "that the government has the right to force the owner of private property to accept a Mayflower Descendant as a tenant, if, for reasons of his own, Mayflower Descendants give him a pain in the neck."

Mr. Andrews rejected a City Council demand that the real estate board apologize for saying the bill is intended "to make an election year platform for demagogues." A city election is scheduled this year.

[illegible]nny And Communism

[illegible] told the council: [illegible] and communism, [illegible] life, [illegible] fat[illegible], the [illegible] of [illegible] bi[illegible]"

[illegible]-Louis [illegible]eman, representing the A[illegible]ated Builders of Greate[illegible] New York, told the council there would be a substantial lessening of mortgage funds if the bill passed.

He said the bill would destroy incentive to produce more private housing and would affect real estate values adversely.

Robert W. Dowling, president of the City Investing Co., a large lending firm, has endorsed the bill.

"Discrimination of any kind in the greatest democratic city the world has ever known is intolerable, and the sooner it ends legally, morally and spiritually, the better," Mr. Dowling said.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has disputed assertions of real estate men that the bill would lower values and dry up mortgage loans.

Wrong Sense Of Values

Wilkins said he had read of "a famous call girl" and her business manager living on Manhattan's East Side and a "notorious personage" living on the West Side—both white areas.

Without naming them, Wilkins said, "There is something radically wrong with our sense of values, moral and financial, when we abide by a code of ethics which holds that occupancy of apartments by procurers and prostitutes has no effect on real estate values, whereas occupancy of these same apartments by decent, law-abiding citizens who happen not to be white affects values adversely."

Charles H. Silver, president of the City Board of Education, said adoption of the bill would help the school integration program.

"We will make every effort to develop sound, effective integration in our schools," he said.

"But, because our schools reflect the population makeup of the neighborhood, until we can end housing discrimination we will continue to have de facto segregation in too many of our public schools."

Benjamin Davis, a Negro and New York state chairman of the Communist Party, endorsed the bill but urged amendments to ban housing discrimination because of political beliefs, to remove the exemption on small homes, and to give the bill greater enforcement power.

Housing Bill Called Key to Equality

World-Telegram & Sun 8-3-57
New York, N.Y.

The chairman of the city's Commission on Intergroup Relations said today that a proposed bill to outlaw discrimination in housing would "stamp out the city's ghettos."

The City Council will hold a public hearing on the bill tomorrow at 11:30 a.m. The legislation would make discrimination by landlords against minority groups on the basis of race, religion or national origin a misdemeanor punishable by a $500 fine.

Commission chairman Alfred J. Marrow told reporters that housing "is the key to fair employment practices and to desegregation in the city's schools."

He added: "This bill will be one of our most powerful weapons in breaking the bottleneck of discrimination that still persists. The law will help by making residences available to persons on the basis of their ability to pay. Housing is the only commodity in this city whose purchose or rental is conditioned by the race, religion or national origin of the buyer."

Pointing out that real estate speculators have reaped large profits from minority housing, Mr. Marrow said Welfare Department studies showed minority groups consistently pay more than white families for identical housing.

of cooperative apartments and giving the Commission on Intergroup Relations administrative jurisdiction. It also urged Wagner to issue a "letter of necessity" to the City Council for their action on the bill on Dec. 3.

The Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill forbids refusal to rent or sell dwelling space in apartments, residential hotel suites and tenements because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

Urges Mayor to Act on Biased N.Y. Housing Bill

Herald Tribune
New York, N.Y.
Sun. 12-5-57

New York, — Mayor Robert F. Wagner was urged today by Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, to give "wholehearted, actual support" to a municipal measure forbidding bias in housing, known as the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill.

"We cannot emphasize too strongly the need for action on your part," Mr. Wilkins declared in a telegram to the mayor. "New York City must assume the leadership in assuring its citizens a free market in housing. You have repeatedly endorsed this measure in principle and we are looking to you to give it your wholehearted, actual support."

Specific Message

The message specifically urged the mayor to recommend that the committee on general welfare report out the bill, including coverage

Integration Plan Brings Problems to New York

Star Sun. 8-4-57 P.22L
Washington, D.C.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3 (AP).—New York City has its desegregation problems, too.

The Nation's largest city, with the largest colored community in the Nation, is weighing a controversial bill to eliminate discrimination in private housing.

The bill, now before the City Council, comes on the heels of a hotly debated action by school authorities in redistricting school neighborhoods to provide greater balance between whites and nonwhites in classrooms.

Hearings on the housing bill have brought out equally vocal friends and foes. Proponents, led by Mayor Robert F. Wagner, term it "right and essential." Opponents, led largely by real estate groups, have cried "tyranny" and "communism."

Tenant Acceptance Forced

The bill would make it an offense to refuse to rent or sell dwelling space in apartments, tenements or residential hotel suites for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

It would affect 1,787,103 housing units, but would exempt one and two family houses, of which there are some 725,000.

The city's population of roughly 8 million includes about 750,000 Negroes, of whom about one-third are of Puerto Rican origin.

Most of them live in Harlem slums in Northern Manhattan. Others live in Brooklyn's Styvesant section and a few other shabby neighborhoods.

There is no law forbidding them to live elsewhere.

But many landlords, whatever their personal views on anti-discrimination, fear that if they rent an apartment to a colored family in a white area their white tenants will move out. The landlords argue that they would be hit economically.

Proponents of the bill hold the landlords are unduly fearful and that the real estate interests have exaggerated the possible impact.

$500 Penalty Provided

The housing bill, as presently constituted, provides a $500 penalty for violation. However, the council is studying proposed amendments that would eliminate the penalty and instead refer reported violations to the city's commissio non intergroup relations. The commission would have discretion as to whether to bring court action.

Another proposed amendment would exempt co-operative apartments suites—those that are owned rather than rented by the occupant—from provisions of the bill.

No date has ben set for council action on the amendments or on the bill itself.

The pros and cons of the bill have been debated at two hearings since the meaasure was introduced last May 21.

Mayor Wagner, a Democrat, expressed his views in this statement:

"I believe that it (the bill) is right and essential. I believe that it ranks with our existing legislation against discrimination in employment, public accommodations and publicly assisted housing * * *.

"I firmly believe that New York City must show the way to our fellow Americans all over the United States; that we can speak in behalf of freedom and democracy throughout the world only if our own house is in order."

Harlem Called "Grim Symbol"

In similar vein, the Very Rev. James A. Pike, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine (Episcopalian), said:

"So long as Harlem stands as a grim symbol of segregation and undemocratic treatment of minorities, so long will New York City contribute to the distrust and hesitation which our country's professions of democracy are viewed by the colored millions of Asia and Africa."

James Andrews, representing the Real Estate Board of New York, is a leader of the opposition.

He has termed the bill "a mischevious piece of folly" that would drive upper income groups out of the city, would lead to the lessening or complete withdrawal of mortgage loans, and generally cause the city to deteriorate.

Mr. Andrews contends that an owner of property has the right to accept tenants of his choice and to reject those he does not want, regardless of race. He told the council:

"Tyranny and communism, you are the life, the fabric, the warp and woof of this bill."

Drying Up of Funds Seen

Louis Whiteman, representing the Associated Builders of Greater New York, told the council there would be a substantial lessening of mortgage funds if the bill passed. He said the bill would destroy incentive to produce more private housing and would affect real estate values adversely.

Robert W. Dowling, president of the City Investing Co., a large lending firm, has indorsed the bill.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has disputed assertions of real estate men that the bill would lower values and dry up mortgage loans.

Charles H. Silver, president of the City Board of Education, said adoption of the bill would help the school integration program.

"We will make every effort to develop sound, effective integration in our schools," he said. "But, because our schools reflect the population makeup of the neighborhood, until we can end housing discrimination we will continue to have de facto segregation in too many of our public schools."

Anti-Bias Bill Scored By Abrams

World Telegram New York, N.Y. Mon. 11-4-57 P. 19

Housing Draft Called 'Careless'

Charles Abrams, chairman of the New York State Committee Against Discrimination, charged yesterday that the city's anti-bias private housing bill was "carelessly" drafted in that "it provided for a penal provision and didn't leave room for education to function."

Speaking on WCBS radio's "Let's Find Out" panel program, Mr. Abrams said that if S. C. A. D. could be given administration of all discrimination problems in the state, the agency could get the respondent to comply with the law through persuasion instead of public hearings.

"There were anti-bias laws with penalties," he said, "but we found this: that in those cases the complainant never had his day in court because of the costliness of the proceedings which he would have to bring."

Cites Symbolic Values

Mr. Abrams said he did not feel Mayor Wagner is "dragging his feet" on the issue. Some supporters of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs housing bill severely criticized the Mayor when he appointed a seven-man committee Oct. 17 to conduct a "careful study" of the bill. His action virtually blocked any settlement of the hot political issue until after the elections tomorrow.

The major gain of the bill, Mr. Abrams said, would be its symbolic values, but it would not alleviate the city's housing problem.

"The housing shortage can be solved only by building more housing," he said. "I do think that it will have effect in the case of new housing where you have a man renting a hundred apartments at once, although the Negro minority particularly is in a low-income bracket and not many people apply."

Air-Line Hostesses

In answer to a question on the hiring of Negro hosesses by air-line companies, Mr. Abrams said there was still a great deal of resistance in the field and that progress toward beter relations would be slow.

"But I think the break will take place," he said, adding that the discriminatory attitudes appear to originate in the Northern, more than the Southern, air lines. He attributed this to the South's "tradition of service" attitude.

Mr. Abrams also criticized newspaper publicing the negative aspects of integration rather than more positive attributes. "I think some of the constructive elements ought to be emphasized as well if we are going to retain the gains we have made, and I think the commission has made many gains," he said.

Why does Jackie insist on integrated housing?

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 11-2L-57

NEW YORK—"Why do you insist on integrated housing?" television interviewer and columnist Mike Wallace asked Jackie Robinson last week. The erstwhile baseball star replied:

"I want to go where I can get the best schools for my children. I want to go where we can feel free. We are in a ghetto now, where everything is inferior.

"You go into Harlem and the schools are inferior, everything is. Take the story in the Post about the little child chewed by rats in Harlem and possibly crippled for life. That's how bad conditions are up there.

* * *

"COLORED PEOPLE can't live the way they want to live. We feel that if a person has the financial ability to move into a nice residential section, he should be allowed to do so. He should be free to live where he wants, like anybody else."

The former Brooklyn Dodger star also noted that he felt that fears by whites against integrated housing will decline the with actual experience of living next door to colored people.

* * *

"THEY HAVEN'T actually ever come in contact with the colored man and once they get a chance they'll see that a lot of things they heard were not true," Mr. Robinson declared.

He also pointed out that the same thing happened in the Army and baseball. "The way it turned out in baseball, the southerner on the ballclub is perhaps the best friend you've got," he said.

N. Y. HOLDS UP BAN ON HOUSING DISCRIMINATION

Viewed as Too Touchy Before Election

New York, Sept. 25 (AP)—A bill forbidding discrimination in housing in New York City today appeared stalled, at least until after a city election Nov. 5.

There was growing evidence that city council members considered it politically too hot to handle at this time. Some conceded privately they were reluctant to vote on so controversial a measure now because their mail was running at least three to one against it.

Backed by Mayor

With the backing of Mayor Robert F. Wagner, the measure was introduced last May 21. It would make liable to fines of up to $500 for anyone refusing to rent or sell dwelling space for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

Councilman Earl Brown of Harlem, the predominantly Negro section of Manhattan, made a plea on the council floor yesterday that the bill be passed quickly. Brown is a Democrat, as are all the city council members except one.

Prompt passage of the measure, Brown said, would be the "moral shot in the arm" needed by the nation and the city "during these days of national turbulence and international embarrassment."

Wants a "Good Bill"

Off the council floor, Stanley M. Isaacs, Republican-Liberal of Manhattan, charged that action on the bill was being delayed purposely.

He said he thought Mayor Wagner should be challenged to take a stand on the situation.

At a city hall interview on Monday, Wagner reiterated his support of the bill in principle, but said his chief concern was for "a good bill" rather than for having legislation rushed thru before election.

"A question like this should not be a concern of politics," the mayor added.

Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey of Brooklyn, replying to the plea of Councilman Brown, again expressed belief that most council members favored the measure in principle and that a bill of the type eventually would be passed.

Sharkey said he did not know whether the bill would be pushed before the election but felt it would be difficult to keep such a bill out of politics during the election campaign.

Next official action on the matter is due next Tuesday when the measure will be discussed by the council's general welfare committee.

Plan to Eliminate Bias in Housing in New York State

New York City,—Angling to halt discrimination in New York State housing, sponsors of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill began work this week to re-introduce the Metcalf-Baker bill in the state Legislature in Albany next month. They are not disillusioned that the bill was introduced last year without success. This year, it is expected to win a sweeping victory.

The bill would eliminate discrimination for reasons of race, color, religion, nationality. This applies however only to apartments where three or more families dwell. One and two family houses are exempted unless in large developments. It applied to both rental and the sale of property.

Algernon D. Black, chairman of the State Committee on Discrimination in Housing, said that with the re-election of the Wagner Administration, it will be watched carefully to see how the new legislation is handled.

Those close to the situation and in sympathy with its organizers feel the bill must pass this year because of heavy pressure since the Little Rock school deal. Many feel it would make New York look very small indeed, especially on their stand of integration in this state, if the bill met its death for a second time.

Text of Bill Passed by City Council to Ban Bias in Housing

Following is the text of a measure adopted by the City Council yesterday barring discrimination in private rental housing:

A LOCAL LAW

To amend the Administrative Code of the City of New York in relation to discrimination and segregation in multiple dwellings.

Be it enacted by the Council of the City of New York as follows:

Section 1, Chapter 41 of the Administrative Code of the City of New York is hereby amended by adding thereto a new title to be Title X, to read as follows:

TITLE X

Discrimination and Segregation in Private Dwellings

§X41-1.0. Certain acts prohibited; penalties. a. In the City of New York, with its great cosmopolitan population consisting of large numbers of people of every race, color, religion, national origin and ancestry, many persons have been compelled to live in circumscribed sections under substandard, unhealthful, unsanitary and crowded living conditions because of discrimination and segregation in housing. These conditions have caused increased mortality, morbidity, delinquency, risk of fire, intergroup tension, loss of tax revenue and other evils. As a result, the peace, health, safety and general welfare of the entire city and all its inhabitants are threatened. Such segregation in housing also necessarily results in other forms of segregation and discrimination which are against the policy of the State of New York. It results in racial segregation in public schools and other public facilities, which is condemned by the constitutions of our state and nation. In order to guard against these evils, it is necessary to assure to all inhabitants of the city equal opportunity to obtain living quarters, regardless of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the city to assure equal opportunity to all residents to live in decent, sanitary and healthful living quarters, regardless of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, in order that the peace, health, safety and general welfare of all the inhabitants of the city may be protected and insured.

b. (1) Except as provided in Paragraph (2) of this subdivision, no owner, lessee, sublessee, assignee or managing agent of, or other person having the right to sell, rent or lease, a housing accommodation which is located in a multiple dwelling, as defined in Section 4 of the Multiple Dwelling Law, or which is offered for sale by a person who owns or otherwise controls the sale of ten or more one- and two-family houses located on land that is contiguous exclusive of public streets), or an agent of any of these, shall refuse to sell, rent, lease, or otherwise deny to or withhold from any person or group of persons such housing accommodations because of the race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry of such person or persons, or discriminate against or segregate any person because of his race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry in the terms, conditions or privileges of the sale, rental or lease or any such housing accommodations or in the furnishing of facilities or services in connection therewith.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall be construed to bar any religious or denominational institution or organization, or any organization operated for charitable or eductional purposes which is operated, supervised or controlled by or in connection with a religious organization, from limiting admission to or giving preference to persons of the same religion or denomination or from making such selection as is calculated by such organization to promote the religious principles for which it is established or maintained. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any tenant of an apartment, as defined in Section 4 of the Multiple Dwelling Law, in which he or members of his family reside, who rents or leases a room or rooms in such apartment to another person or persons.

c. Any person claiming to be aggrieved by a violation of Subdivision b hereof may file with the Commission on Intergroup Relations a complaint in writing which shall state the name and address of the owner or other person alleged to have committed the violation complained of and shall set forth the particulars thereof and such other information as may be required by such commission. Upon the filing of such complaint, or upon its own motion whenever it has reason to believe that any owner or other person has violated Subdivision b hereof, such commission shall exercise its powers with a view to conciliating the matter and eliminating any discriminatory practice it finds to exist.

d. In case of failure of the Commission on Intergroup Relations to conciliate and eliminate a practice which it considers discrimination or segregation in violation of Subdivision b hereof, it shall refer the same to the aFir Housing Practices Panel hereinafter created, with its recommendation.

e. There is hereby created a Fair Housing Practices Panel to consist of twelve persons, who shall not be members of the Commission on Intergroup Relations, appointed by the Mayor and to serve at his pleasure. The members of the panel shall serve without compensation but shall be entitled to reimbursement of their necessary expenses. For each case that shall be referred to the panel pursuant to Subdivision b hereof, the Mayor shall designate any three members of the panel as a Fair Housing Practices Board which shall exercise the powers and duties provided for in Subdivision f hereof.

f. It shall be the duty of the Fair Housing Practices Board to review cases of alleged discrimination or segregation in violation of Subdivision b hereof, referred by the Commission on Intergroup Relations in accordance with Subdivision d hereof and to determine in each case whether in its judgment court action is warranted. The board shall have the power to hold hearings and to issue subpoenas. If it shall find in the affirmative, it may direct the Corporation Counsel to bring equitable proceedings in the Supreme Court, in the name of the city, for the enforcement of the provisions of this title.

g. Proceedings had [held] under this title, before the Commission on Intergroup Relations and before the Fair Housing Practices Board, shall be confidential.

§2. This local law shall take effect April 1, 1958.

BILL BARRING BIAS IN HOUSING PASSED BY CITY COUNCIL

Action Ends Long Dispute—One Opposing Vote is Cast—Court Test Promised

The text of the bill will be found on Page 25.

By CHARLES G. BENNETT

The highly controversial City Administration bill banning discrimination in private rental housing was passed by the City Council late yesterday afternoon.

Councilmen favoring the measure hailed it as "historic" and predicted that its effect would be felt around the world. They foresaw similar action by New York State and other states and cities.

The measure forbids discrimination, on the basis of race, creed or national origin, in private multiple dwellings housing three or more families.

Approval of the bill was not unanimous. Twenty Councilmen voted for it. Councilman Maurice J. McCarthy Jr., Bronx Democrat, voted against it. He called the bill "cumbersome," questioned its constitutionality and doubted that it could be effectively enforced.

Queens Councilmen Frank V. Smith, Democrat, and Robert E. Barnes, Republican, abstained from voting.

Democratic Councilmen Irving I. Schreckinger of the Bronx and James J. Murphy of Richmond were absent.

Legal test promised

The Council's action brought an announcement last night from James Andrews, spokesman for the Real Estate Board of New York and bitter foe of the legislation, that the bill, if enacted into law, "will be tested in the highest courts because we believe that it violates the fundamental rights of the owner of private property."

As against this view, scores of civic, labor and religious organizations poured out their praise for the bill.

The measure exempts one and two-family homes, unless they are in developments of ten units or more. Bias in public housing already is banned by law.

As passed the bill made no exemption for cooperative apartments. Such an exemption had been considered for many weeks, but finally was dropped yesterday by the Council's General Welfare Committee when it reported the measure out, recommending approval.

One of the most hotly contested pieces of local legislation ever to be steered through the City Council, the measure was espoused by Mayor Wagner last May as a major aim of his administration. The bill's sponsors in the Council were Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, Brooklyn Democrat; Harlem Councilman Earl Brown, and Minority Leader Stanley M. Isaacs, Manhattan Republican-Liberal.

Administration legal advisers were debating last night whether the bill, which ultimately must be signed by Mayor Wagner for enactment, would require prior Board of Estimate action. The prevailing opinion was that it would.

Under the machinery set up in the legislation, the city's Commission on Intergroup Relations will weigh complaints.

If mediation and conciliation fail, complaints will go for review to a three-man Fair Housing Practices Board selected from a Fair Housing Practices Panel appointed by the Mayor. The Mayor will designate the three-man board in each case.

The board of three will serve without pay but will be reimbursed for expenses. It will pass on the merit of a grievance. If the review group feels the complaint is justified, it will pass the case on to the Corporation Counsel, who will institute court action in the name of the city.

The provision for conciliation and review machinery was written into the bill last Tuesday by the General Welfare Committee after weeks of haggling.

The committee also removed from the bill, as originally introduced, penalty clauses that provided for bringing alleged violators into court where fines up to $500 could be imposed upon conviction for a misdemeanor.

Mr. Isaacs told the Council it had never before passed "a more controversial or revolutionary measure."

"No other state or city has had the courage to take this action so far, but I believe they will now," he added.

In songratulating the council on its action, Mr. Sharkey asserted that the councilmen had "refused to be pushed around by the lunatic fringe on either side."

Mr. Brown said passage of the bill represented "a historic moment in the city's history." Council President Abe Stark took the floor to call the council's action "an answer to Little Rock."

In declaring his opposition, Mr. McCarthy emphasized that he opposed housing segregation, but he believed the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs measure would "never open one piece of property to any individual or any minority group."

"As much as you would like to, you cannot change people's moral principles by legislation," Mr. McCarthy said. "We won't have any more success with this bill than we had with Prohibition."

New York Outlaws Any Form Of Racial Discrimination In Private Housing In City

NEW YORK (AP)—The City Council has passed a bill outlawing racial or religious discrimination in the rental or sale of private housing in New York City.

Councilmen favoring the highly controversial measure predicted it would spark similar legislation elsewhere.

The bill—passed by a 20-1 vote yesterday—makes it unlawful to refuse to rent or sell an apartment or multiple dwelling because of the prospective tenant's "race color, religion, national origin or ancestry."

City legal experts are studying whether the bill, effective April 1, needs approval by the Board of Estimate, the upper branch of the municipal legislative setup. If it does require approval by the board, a speedy okay there is predicted.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner's signature is assured. He made a ban on private housing discrimination a major aim of his democratic administration.

A court fight was promised by a spokesman for the Real Estate Board of New York, one of the real estate groups which fought the measure during more than six months of bitter controversy and debate.

The real estate board spokesman said the bill, if enacted into local law, "will be tested in the highest courts because we believe that it violates the fundamental rights of the owners of private property."

Praise of the measure came from numerous civic, labor and religious organizations.

The bill, which had bipartisan political support, applies to cooperative apartments as well as to rented dwellings.

It does not apply to one-and two family homes unless they are in a development of 10 or more homes.

Officails estimate the bill will cover 1,787,000 apartments and more than five million city residents.

Discrimination in rental of public and publicly assisted housing already is banned in New York state.

The bill passed by the Council is a compromise measure. A Council committee removed from the original penalty clauses that provided for taking violators directly to court where fines up to $500 could be imposed upon conviction.

New York Council Passes Bill To Ban House Discrimination

NEW YORK, Dec. 5 (AP) — City Council today passed a bill banning discrimination in private housing throughout New York City, with one and two family homes excepted.

The vote was 20 to 1 with two members not voting.

The legislation must be approved by the Board of Estimate and Mayor Robert F. Wagner. Council Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, one of the sponsors of the bill, has expressed confidence that the bill will win final approval.

Sponsors of the bill expressed belief it would be the forerunner of similar legislation throughout the country.

Councilman Maurice McCarthy, Bronx Democrat, cast the only negative vote. He explained: "I do not believe it is going to change the feeling that exists in certain people in this town."

Councilmen Robert Barnes, Republican, and Frank Smith, Democrat both of Queens, did not vote.

The bill bans discrimination in cooperatives, apartment houses of three or more units, and developments of 10 or more one-family and two-family homes.

The City Commission on Intergroup Relations would consider complaints. If mediation and complaints would be referred to a panel of three to be selected by the mayor. The panel of three, serving without compensation, would pass on the merit of the grievance.

Then it would go to the city corporation counsel who would seek a citation from the State Supreme Court for contempt of the alleged violator.

Earl Brown, Manhattan Democrat-Liberal, one of the bill's sponsors, told the council: "What we are about to do here today will be heard around the world and will help us as a nation from here to New Delhi, to Capetown, and even to Vladivostok."

Brown is a Negro.

McCarthy said the council had "guts" to pass the bill because "the overwhelming majority of the mail was against it." He said it would be no more successful than prohibition "which was a nefarious attempt to tell people what to do when they did not want to do it."

Amendments Would Drop Criminal Penalties and Assure Judicial Review

Louis Okin Succeeds Boland —19 More Branch Offices Approved for P. R. R.

By CHARLES G. BENNETT

The City Council brought out for public study and discussion yesterday several tentative amendments designed to modify the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill. The measure would bar discrimination in private rental housing.

The General Welfare Committee, to which the proposed amendments were submitted, ordered them printed and distributed to interested organizations and individuals. No action other than this was taken on the amendments or the basic bill.

Councilman Eric J. Treulich, Democrat of Queens and chairman of the General Welfare Committee, said the committee planned to hear persons interested in the bill and the amendments at one or more open meetings late this month or early in August. Additional amendments to the bill are possible, he said.

Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, Democrat of Brooklyn and a sponsor of the anti-bias bill, said he hoped for Council passage of the bill in some form next month. The Council normally holds one meeting in August, late in the month.

The two other sponsors of the bill are Earl Brown, Democrat of Harlem, and Minority Leader Stanley M. Isaacs, Republican-Liberal of Manhattan. The measure has the support of Mayor Wagner.

Amendments by Sharkey

Most of the amendments ordered printed yesterday were offered by Mr. Sharkey. In the main, they would drop the criminal penalties of the original measure, set up machinery to screen tenant and landlord complaints and assure ultimate judicial review.

An amendment offered by Mr. Treulich would exempt cooperative apartments from the bill's provisions.

The penalty provision of the basic bill would make it a misdemeanor, punishable by fines up to $500, to refuse to rent or sell dwelling space in apartment houses, family hotels and tenant flats for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry.

Mr. Sharkey's amendment also would provide for grievances to be heard by the city's Commission on Intergroup Relations.

Any person feeling that the commission had handled his case unsatisfactorily could appeal to the Supreme Court.

Earlier in the day, a delegation representing about forty Protestant groups appeared in City Hall Plaza to voice their support of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs measure.

Council Vacancy Filled

The Council also elected Louis Okin, a lawyer, of 75 Central Park West, to fill the Council vacancy left by the recent death of James J. Boland, representing the Twenty-fifth State Senatorial District. He will serve until the end of this year.

Mr. Okin, a member of the law firm of Sohn & Okin, is the Democratic leader of the Third Assembly District, North. He filled out the questionnaire required of new members by the Council since the recent hearings involving the outside interests of some Councilmen.

In its effort to bolster the Board of Elections drive to bring in as many voters as possible for Permanent Personal Registration, now under way, the City Council approved a list of nineteen new branch offices, making the total of such offices forty-eight.

The Council acted as the Board of Elections reported that 2,996 persons had registered Monday, bringing the total P. R. R. registration since May 1 to 49,418.

Doubts City Will Fine Violators

By Charles N. Quinn

Charles Abrams, chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination, predicted yesterday the City Council will pass a bill to bar discrimination in private apartment houses but without provisions for fining violators.

Mr. Abrams, appearing on WRCA-TV's "Citizen's Union Searchlight," said he believed the bill should contain some penalty provisions but that a procedure for investigation and conciliation should be established before penalties are invoked.

Conciliation Measure

The S. C. A. D. chairman said the bill would provide that the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations filter complaints of discrimination. As under state law, which applies only to publicly assisted housing, a "confidential effort to conciliate" would be made before a public hearing or court action, he said.

Mr. Abrams said that between 50 and 70 per cent of complaints filed with S. C. A. D. were without merit. In most cases where the complaints were justified, he continued, the threat of publicity compelled landlords to settle.

Fines to $500

The bill, introduced by Council Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, D., Brooklyn; Minority Leader Stanley M. Isaacs, R., Manhattan and Councilman Earl Brown, D., Manhattan, would provide fines of up to $500 for offenders and affect an estimated 1,787,000 apartments. One and two-family homes would be exempted.

The proposed law has been vigorously opposed by many real estate and commercial groups, led by the Real Estate Board of New York. Among other arguments, opponents have cited the difficulty of financing housing in areas where minority groups live.

Mr. Abrams, countering this argument yesterday, said that about $900,000,000 had been invested by private capital in housing covered by anti-discrimination laws in the city and state since those laws were passed.

House Bias Hearing Ends

Herald Tribune Jackson Heights

New York, N. Y., July 1 — The State Commission Against Discrimination Friday ended its first hearing on a complaint of discrimination in housing. A decision is expected early next week.

A three man panel heard a complaint by Norris Shervington, a Negro, that a $158-a-month apartment had been denied him by a New Rochelle landlord, Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., because of his race. The apartment house was built last year with a mortgage loan insured by the Federal Housing Administration. State law prohibits discrimination in this type of housing.

The development did not deny that it sought to exclude Mr. Shervington. It contended instead that the Federal aid provisions of the state anti-discrimination law were unconstitutional.

The landlord also contended that the apartment house was not subject to the Federal aid provisions because the mortgage arrangements were made before the provisions went into effect on July 1, 1955.

Negro Tenant Ban Ordered Killed In N.Y.

Herald Tribune Thursday 7-2-57

NEW YORK, July 2 — The State Commission against Discrimination today ordered a New Rochelle apartment owner to stop discriminating against Negroes.

The ruling is the first under new provisions of the state law. A commission spokesman said an expected court test of the ruling would be the nation's first of such a law.

The case was brought against Pelham Hall Apartment, Inc., owners of an apartment development at New Rochelle known as Rochelle Arms, after Norris G. Shervington, a Negro, complained he was denied an apartment because of his race.

The new provisions of the Anti-bias law forbid discrimination because of race, color or creed in private housing which receives public assistance, in this case federal mortgage insurance.

A New Rochelle apartment house corporation said yesterday it has "no intention of complying" with a ruling by the State Commission Against Discrimination that it rent an apartment to a Negro family.

Joseph R. Pisano, attorney for Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., called Tuesday's S. C. A. D. ruling "unconstitutional" and insisted Pelham Hall broke no valid law in refusing to rent a $158-a-month apartment to Norris G. Shervington.

With the commission already preparing to order the corporation to end all discriminatory practices, it appeared the Metcalf-Baker State law barring bias in publicly assisted housing soon would have its first court test. It is this law that gives the commission authority to act in this case.

Disputes Jurisdiction

Mr. Pisano contends the fact that Pelham Hall has a mortgage insured by the Federal Housing Administration does not give the state jurisdiction over it. "The state isn't a party to it," Mr. Pisano said. "It's between the government and a private individual."

The S. C. A. D. general counsel, Henry Spitz, said he plans to recommend that the commission order the housing project to:

Give Mr. Shervington an apartment in its building at 300 Pelham Road, New Rochelle, immediately. Post a notice on the premises and specify in any future advertisements that the project is being rented without racial or religious discrimination. Make monthly reports to the commission as to how it is filling vacancies and instruct all renting personnel to act without bias.

Court Action Planned

Mr. Spitz said that if Pelham Hall does not comply with the commission's order within thirty days of its issuance, the commission will ask the State Supreme Court to enforce it. This, it is expected, will lead to more litigation. Mr. Pisano said he would take the case to the United States Supreme Court if necessary rather than obey the order.

As for Mr. Shervington, he said yesterday he is not sure if he will take the apartment even if his case is won. The forty-six-year-old native New Yorker, who is employed by Associated Publishers, Inc.—an agency for the soliciting and placing of advertisements in Negro newspapers—said "I want to see just what's going to happen after (the corporation) gives its answer."

He said he came here from Chicago in December and that business associates had suggested the Pelham Hall project to him.

Way Is Cleared in New Rochelle For Court Test of Anti-Bias Law

By Bert Quint

The State Commission Against Discrimination ordered a New Rochelle, N. Y., apartment house yesterday to rent an apartment to a Negro. In so doing, the commission cleared the way for a court test on the housing provisions of the State anti-bias law. It would be the first court action in the country on such a law.

Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc., operators of the Rochelle Arms—the apartment house in question—have said they would take the case to the United States Supreme Court if necessary rather than admit the Negro, Norris G. Shervington, office manager of a Chicago business firm.

Mr. Shervington brought the charge of discrimination in December, saying the development refused to rent him a $158-a-month apartment in a building at 300 Pelham Road, New Rochelle, because of his race.

Hearings Held

The commission held public hearings on the charge and yesterday said it will call on Pelham Hall "to cease and desist from such unlawful discriminatory practices."

A S. C. A. D. spokesman said Pelham Hall did not deny the charge but insisted that the state has no right to prohibit racial and religious discrimination in private housing backed by the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration. The corporation also contends that a clause in the law making it retroactive to July 1, 1955, is unconstitutional. The building was completed early this year.

Joseph R. Pisani, Pelham Hall attorney, said he had not yet made up his mind what action to take, but that "the case will end in the courts and . . . there will be no dilly-dallying on this."

Commission's View

Noting that the corporation had challenged the constitutionality of the 1956 laws giving it jurisdiction over publicly-aided housing, the commission said.

"We must proceed on the assumption that the law is valid in all respects and that (we have) no legal authority to question the constitutionality of this or any other act of the Legislature under which (we) may be acting."

The corporation attacked the constitutionality of the law by arguing that the state may enact laws for housing with state mortgage guarantees but not those backed by the F. H. A. or the V. A.

The commission ruled, however, that the issuance of a commitment by the F.H.A. does not necessarily mean that the government will insure the loan. The commitment is only a statement of the terms upon which the mortgage will be insured if all details of the proposed structure comply with the rules of the F.H.A. and meet the approval of the Federal Housing Commission, the commission said.

Order Comes Next

The next step now is for S.C.A.D. to issue its order to Pelham Hall within ten days from today. The corporation then will have five days to enter any objections before the order is signed.

Court action could follow—brought either by the commission to enforce compliance or by the corporation to upset the order.

The original complaint and a finding of probable cause were handled by S. C. A. D. chairman Charles Abrams. Yesterday's ruling was signed by commissioners Ward B. Arbury, presiding; and J. Edward Conway and Nicholas H. Pinto. Mr. Abrams was not present.

Revised Housing Bias Ban Goes to Council

Herald Tribune P. 10
Wed. 7-10-57

By David Wise

A City Council committee yesterday approved a tentative revised version of a bill to bar racial discrimination in private housing.

New York

There remained wide areas of disagreement within the Council, however, on parts of the proposed compromise bill. In its original form the controversial measure failed to come out of committee last month. A committee hearing will be held in about two weeks on the new version.

Criminal Penalties Out

The amendments approved yesterday would:

1. Remove all criminal penalties for landlords who disobeyed the proposed law. The original bill made infractions a misdemeanor punishable by fines of up to $500.

2. Designate the Mayor's Commission on Intergroup Relations as the agency to receive and screen complaints. Within a three-month period, the commission would be obligated either to reject the complaint or to accept it and go into court. In that case, the city would represent the aggrieved party. If the courts found in favor of a tenant, a landlord who refused to comply with the judicial ruling would face court-imposed penalties.

3. Allow landlords or tenants who are dissatisfied with the initial finding of the Commission on Intergroup Relations to appeal the commission's decision in Supreme Court.

4. Exempt co-operative apartments from the bill.

A further amendment was approved to clarify language in the original bill. It exempts from the bill small developments of nine or less adjacent one or two-family houses.

Action Not Unanimous

The amendments failed to win unanimous indorsement even by the three sponsors of the bill, however. It was learned that two of the sponsors, Stanley M. Isaacs, Manhattan Republican, and Earl Brown, Manhattan Democrat, are pressing for a change that would give complainants the right to go to court without waiting indefinitely for a finding by the Intergroup Relations Commission.

And Joseph T. Sharkey, Majority Leader of the Council and a Brooklyn Democrat, is opposed to the change that would exempt co-operatives. That change was introduced by Eric J. Treulich, Queens Democrat, who is chairman of the general welfare committee, which approved yesterday's compromise amendments.

The Council yesterday elected Louis Okin, attorney, of 75 Central Park West, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of James J. Boland in the 25th Senatorial District on Manhattan's West Side.

Mr. Okin, who successfully passed the hurdle of a conflict-of-interest questionaire now standard for new Councilmen, is Democratic leader of the 3d Assembly District North. He was one of the leaders of a successful fight by West Side residents to bar Parks Commissioner Robert Moses from enlarging parking space at Tavern-on-the-Green in Central Park.

Javits Asks City to End Housing Bias

WASHINGTON, July 7 (AP).—Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R., N. Y., said today New York City can strengthen the hand of Congressional civil-rights backers if it curbs discrimination within its own boundaries.

P. 1

He made the statement in calling for passage of the Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill against discrimination in private housing which is now before the New York City Council.

He said New York City and New York State have made the "most outstanding progress" on civil rights of any areas of the country. But he said "housing bias is found even here where not specifically prohibited by law as it is in public housing and housing with public-assisted financing."

"Beyond its local implications," he said, "is the impact that failure to act against housing bias in New York City could have on efforts for civil-rights legislation in the Congress."

Noting that a fight on the civil-rights issue was shaping up in the Senate. Sen. Javits said liberal Senators, both Democrats and Republicans, "are strengthened if the city administration of New York . . . will do all it can lawfully do to curb discrimination within its own boundaries."

Race Bias Hits Dark Caucasians

AMITYVILLE, N.Y., Oct. 9 (AP)—A dark-skinned, partly disabled veteran of Spanish descent has moved out of his newly - rented house in nearby Copiague after receiving what he said were telephoned threats for "you niggers" to get out.

Newspaper

William Delgado, 34, a Caucasian, said he searchdd six months before finding the tiny, three-bedroom house in Suffolk County for $85 a month rent.

He said shortly after he and his wife, Evelyn, and their daughters Sheila, 14, and Lorraine, 10, had moved in, a mysterious male voice began telephoning. There were 15 calls in six days, he said.

He said the caller told him the house would be burned down if he didn't leave the all-white neighborhood.

Delgado said he would "rather move out than have my kids afraid," so he moved the family back to cramped quarters with the elder Delgado here.

Police said they could take no action because there has been no "overt act."

'Sweeping Laws' Demanded In New York To End Race Discrimination In Housing

Mon 5-6-57

NEW YORK, May 5 (AP)—Dr. Frank S. Horne, executive director of the New York City Commission of Intergroup Relations, declared tonight that "some sweeping law" is needed to cover discrimination in private housing.

Horne told a panel of college editors that the "so-called racial or ethnic or religious ghetto is the last vestige of racism in this city."

The "ghetto" results, Horne said from a "rather un-American, uneconomic practice, and that is a restriction on the use and occupancy of private property on the basis of race, creed or color."

Horne said discriminatory restrictions are imposed by private housing interests, real estate people, mortgage lenders and home builders. He said his commission is embarked on an "open city" project to eliminate discrimination in private housing.

He said the commission is "trying to get the cooperation of private enterprises with opening up the city on a wider score." These negotiations, he said, are not coming along "as hopefully or as promising as some of us would like." He added:

"I am persuaded that we will need the standard that is set by law, as we have it here now in employment and in public accommodations, and in housing which is publicly aided. We need some sweeping law to cover private housing."

Horne said also his commission is trying to prevent discrimination in private nursing homes that receive department of welfare clients. He said some 40 - odd homes were discriminating against Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Jews, and in one instance, a Christian Scientist.

Dr. Horne said the welfare department, in sessions with officials of the nursing homes, "did not hesitate to indicate that since they were sending the patients and paying for their care, if we didn't get cooperation they would be compelled to withdraw city funds in support of such patients."

"After all," he said, "these institutions are licensed by the city of New York and if they are so licensed and public policy requires non - discrimination, we see no reason that we could not ask for the withdrawal of license." He said the officials of the homes "were so told."

Council Heads Predict Passage Of Bill Outlawing Housing Bias

Times New York p. 25-C

Fri. 6-7-57 p. 25-C

City Council leaders yesterday predicted early passage of the Sharkey-Isaacs-Brown bill. This would outlaw discrimination in more than 70 per cent of all housing in the city. The measure has drawn opposition from the Real Estate Board of New York and some other groups.

A public hearing on the bill will be held at 11 A. M. today at City Hall. The hearing was called by the Council's Committee on General Welfare, which received the bill on May 21. The measure was introduced jointly by Vice Chairman Joseph T. Sharkey, majority leader of the Council; Stanley Isaacs, minority leader, and Councilman Earl Brown, Democrat of Manhattan.

Mr. Sharkey, Democrat of Brooklyn, and Mr. Isaacs, Republican-Liberal of Manhattan, said yesterday that they were confident the measure would pass. They were hopeful, too, that it would set the pattern for state legislation, as did the Sharkey Law of 1949 and the Sharkey-Isaacs-Brown Law of 154.

Earlier Laws Cited

Those measures banned discrimination for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry in the rental or sale of dwelling space in housing receiving any form of Government aid. Similar provisions were later written into state law.

Existing state and local laws ban such discrimination in 164,172 dwelling units here, of which 90,000 are public housing. The others have received Federal mortgage insurance, state loans or city tax abatement.

The new measure would extend the coverage to include the 1,787,183 apartments, residential hotel suites and tenement flats here. It would exempt most of the 726,40 one-and-two-family houses. Its only coverage of one-and-two-family houses would be in the sale of such accommodations when built in developments of more than ten units. There are not many such developments within the city limits.

The measure, to which Mayor Wagner had promised his Administration's full support, received the added indorsement yesterday of the city's Commission on Intergroup Relations. The support was announced at a press conference at the commission's offices, 150 Nassau Street.

Bill's Implications Outlawed

Dr. Alfred J. Marrow, the commission chairman; Dr. Frank S. Horne, executive director; Councilman Isaacs and several experts in the fields of housing and race relations outlined implications of the bill and their ideas on its enforcement if it should become law. Neither Mr. Sharkey nor Mr. Brown was at the conference.

Violation would be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $500. An aggrieved person also might bring action in the State Supreme Court to enjoin such discrimination or segregation. Continued violation would then make the respondent subject to contempt action, with fine or jail as the penalty.

Dr. Marrow said the bill required the aggrieved person to institute the court action. He said that, in a practical way, it was likely that civil rights groups and other anti-discrimination organiaztions would send out teams of prospective renters and home buyers, of different races and, to bring test cases.

Dr. Horne said the committee, created by the City Council in 1955, had a basic responsibility to act against all forms of discrimination here. He said the committee would offer counsel and might call the attention of violations to District Attorneys.

NEGRO PUT COST OF BIAS AT $500

Times p. 8-C

A Negro testified yesterday at the state's first public hearing on a housing discrimination case that his failure to obtain an apartment in a New Rochelle private development had cost him more than $500 in extra living expenses.

The witness Norris G. Shervington, office manager for a Chicago business concern, testified before a three-man panel of the State Commission Against Discrimination in the State Building, 270 Broadway.

Mr. Shervington told the commission he had been transferred to New York and had applied in December for a $158-a-month apartment in a New Rochelle development operated by Pelham Hall Apartments, Inc.

The landlord's refusal to rent him an apartment, he testified, forced him to spend $500 extra to live in a hotel here and keep his family in Chicago until he could find adequate lodgings.

Joseph R. Pisani, attorney for the landlord, contended that the commission had no authority to determine whether damages should be awarded in the case. The three commissioners reserved decision on the objection.

The landlord also obtained an adjournment to June 20 to permit the filing of a written answer to the witness' complaint.

BIAS BILL OPPOSED BY BROADWAY UNIT

Times p. 11-C

The Broadway Association declared its opposition yesterday to proposed city legislation that would outlaw discrimination in private housing.

Voting unanimously at a luncheon meeting in the Sheraton-Astor Hotel, the association's board of directors decried the concept of forcing people to live in dwellings alongside of others "not their choice."

The thirty directors also felt that the legislation would "discourage private investment in multiple-family residence buildings."

The association also reiterated its support of workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance bills passed by the regular session of the Legislature and vetoed by Governor Harriman.

The association gave its first special award to Patrick L. Ryan, a member of the organization for the last forty years. The plaque cited Mr. Ryan for "service to others—the highest distinction." He had represented Macy's department store in the association since 1917 until his retirement from Macy's in 1945.

Realty Men Reply, Nobody 'Should Be Forced to Rent Property to Anyone'

Real estate boards in the city were accused yesterday of waging a "campaign of misrepresentation" against a proposed anti-bias rental law.

Algernon D. Black, chairman of the Committee on Discrimination in Housing, criticized the boards for their "appeal to bigotry." His message was carried in 100,000 flyers distributed to apartment house tenants and in advertisements in several newspapers.

The proposed city law would make it a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine up to $500, to refuse to rent or sell dwelling space for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry. The only exemption would be the rental of one and two-family houses, the sale of private homes in developments of less than ten units and housing in religious institutions.

Restrictions against discrimination already apply in the city to public housing and private housing receiving Government mortgage insurance.

Mr. Black called the real estate boards' opposition to extended coverage "vicious and deliberate." It "uses the landlord's position to prey on the meanest fears and prejudices of what is in effect a captive audience," he said.

The campaign, he added, is "designed to inflame racial prejudice among New York's apartment house tenants."

Landlords' Rights Defended

With the City Council due to vote tomorrow on the controversial bill, the Real Estate Board of New York, Inc., reaffirmed its stand.

"We believe that no man should be forced to rent privately owned property to anyone," James Andrews, a spokesman, reiterated. "He should have the right to keep it vacant if he pleases and the right to fill it with tenants of his own selection."

Mr. Black's committee held that the proposed legislation would not prevent a landlord from refusing a tenant on the ground of morals or financial standing.

Mr. Black's committee represents twenty-five civic, religious, labor and social groups supporting the bill. The measure was introduced jointly by Joseph T. Sharkey, Democratic majority leader of the City Council; Stanley Isaacs, Republican minority leader, and Councilman Earl Brown, Democrat of Manhattan.

It has the support of Mayor Wagner. The real estate men have urged tenants to write to the Mayor opposing the bill.

The measure would extend the ban against discrimination to 1,787,182 apartments, residential hotel suites and tenement flats. Existing laws cover 164,172 dwelling units here, 90,000 of which are in public housing projects.

BIAS IN PRIVATE HOUSING

Times p. 16-C

For years this newspaper has dedicated itself to opposing bigotry. On many a front, covering civil rights of all kinds—to vote, to seek employment, to be educated in the public schools, to gather in public assembly, to live in public housing—we have fought against discrimination for reasons of race, religion or color.

New York

With this precedent we approach our decision on the Sharkey-Isaacs-Brown bill now pending in the City Council, which proposes to outlaw by statute and to punish with a possible jail term discrimination against potential tenants for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry in privately owned multiple dwelling apartments and sales in the larger housing developments.

We confess to being troubled as we take the position we feel we must take against this bill. In principle the objectives cannot be opposed. They are admirable. But the method of compulsion is a dubious substitution for education and the admittedly gradual spread of understanding that can be the only sound foundation of complete neighborliness.

The question of legality we will leave to the lawyers. This would involve, of course, the constitutional protection not to be "deprived" of property without due process of law.

But here, as often, we have a conflict of freedoms. There is, on the one hand, the "right" to live, rent, buy where one will; on the other hand is the right to control the use of property privately owned, complete freedom in the choice of tenant or buyer, the right to expect in leased or purchased quarters a reasonably stable continuation of the surroundings that obtained in taking residence.

As matters stand, existing state and local laws forbid discrimination in 164,172 dwelling units here. Of these about 90,000 are public housing and the others are projects which have received aid by way of Federal mortgage insurance, state loans or city tax abatement. Statutory prohibition against discrimination in all these units is entirely proper, and in fact imperative. It would be a shocking miscarriage of justice to deny any part of the public equal access to housing for which the whole public pays, either in whole or in part, and either by public loan or public subsidy of any kind.

When we come to housing which is completely financed and owned by private individuals or corporations, the situation seems to us to be essentially different. This is not to say that we approve of discrimination in privately owned housing. On the contrary, we deplore such discrimination and particularly the unhealthy social conditions which it has helped to create in certain sections of the city. But progress here, we believe, must be a matter of education and spiritual growth rather than a consequence of legislation.

The Sharkey-Isaacs-Brown bill would outlaw discrimination in 1,787,183 privately owned flats and apartments. But its exceptions are noteworthy. It will make it wrong to discriminate against rental in multiple dwellings, as defined by law, but it does not forbid discrimination in the rental of one- and two-family homes, or in sale of single family homes unless one owner happens to hold ten or more housing accommodations on land that is contiguous.

These exceptions are a complete contradiction of the policy statement incorporated by way of preamble in the law, which says "it is necessary to assure to all inhabitants of the city equal opportunity to obtain living quarters." It means the city will compel owners of private property to make way for everybody in the flats and apartments of Manhattan, for instance, but it will not enforce equal opportunity to tenants or home-buyers generally in Queens. This is discrimination within avowed anti-discrimination, and the aim of its exceptions can only be construed as political.

We do not think that the people of New York have been adequately prepared for the passage of this bill, and we fear that the consequences of its adoption in such circumstances would be a stopping of large-scale construction and a drastic depreciation of property values. We believe that the difficulties of enforcement are enormous, that nuisance cases would be innumerable and that intolerance might be aggravated rather than diminished.

So, with the deepest regret, we oppose this bill as being the wrong way to a right end.

Legislation Held Soundest Approach to Community Education

Tues. 6-18-57

The writer of the following letter, Minority Leader of the City Council, has for many years worked for slum clearance and low-cost housing.

New York

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I read with deep distress the editorial in your June 15 issue asking the defeat of the bill to outlaw discrimination in private multiple dwellings and in larger developments of single family houses in this city.

I recognize, of course, that you are just as opposed as I to bigotry and to racial and religious discrimination. You state the purpose of the proposed law and the conflict of interests involved with clarity and with sympathy for its objectives.

I agree with you in the long run that progress in this field must be the product of education and spiritual growth rather than the punishment of the offender. Nevertheless, I cannot accept your conclusions.

You find fault with the failure to include one and two family houses. The reasoning which prompted those who supported the Ives-Quinn bill outlawing discrimination in employment to exempt employers of less than ten employes operates here too.

Amending Law

Problems of enforcement in this area are quite perplexing. Moreover, the intimacy of relationship between neighbors in a two-family house parallels the conditions which caused the omission from the Ives-Quinn bill of domestic servants and small businesses. Even if this omission may prove unsound, it can easily be remedied either by amendment now or extension later.

However, I believe the omission in the present bill justified on precedent and principle—not for the political reasons which you imply.

You express fear of the consequences by way of stoppage of large-scale construction and depreciation of realty values. May I point out that about one half of large-scale construction during the past decade involved F. H. A. guaranteed mortgages—and in all such buildings, though privately owned, discrimination because of race, creed or color was prohibited in this city two years ago and now is subject to state-wide prohibition? There has been no stoppage of construction in that area—nor, for that matter, have hotels been adversely affected in value because they are prohibited from similar discrimination by the penal law of this state.

I share the belief of many, including some large-scale real estate operators, that the proposed law, which would tend to spread instead of confine minority groups to limited areas within this city, would enhance values generally, not depreciate them.

But the fundamental issue is above all these considerations. You speak of the "right" to live, rent and buy where one will, and parallel this with the right of complete freedom in the control of private property—and the right to expect reasonably stable continuation of the surrounding residential neighborhoods.

Right of Selection

Strangely enough, you put the first right in quotation marks, and not the latter. This echoes the strange illusions of some of the Real Estate Board representatives at the Council hearing who spoke of their "inalienable right to select their tenants," as though this were especially guaranteed by the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights.

After all, the Supreme Court some years ago disparaged such so-called rights when it outlawed the enforcement of restrictive covenants in living areas.

And any such conflict of so-called rights, even if they existed, should be resolved, I believe, in favor of the minority which suffers from discrimination and prejudice rather than in favor of those struggling to exercise them. This, after all, is the greatest city in the world, in which freedom and democracy should prevail.

Judging by the past, legislation has been the soundest and most effective approach toward community education.

If our city leaders declare to all who live here, by the enactment of the proposed law, that discrimination in private housing is un-American—as it is—this will have the same effect as the Ives-Quinn Act had in the field of employment. We made little progress in the eradication of discrimination in employment until that law was enacted, and infinitely greater progress thereafter.

That, I hope, will be the result of the passage of the Sharkey-Isaacs-Brown bill—not the penalizing of a few offenders but the acceptance throughout the city of the fundamental principle which it enunciates. It is only through this that we can really bring about a measure of desegregation in our schools and a measure of respect for minority rights among our real property owners. STANLEY M. ISAACS.

Council Agrees Tentatively to Pass Revised Bill Then—Amendments Up Today

Times 7-9-57

By CHARLES G. BENNETT

August is now tentatively agreed on by City Council leaders for passage of a revised bill to bar discrimination in private rental housing.

The present Administration-backed Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs bill is before the Council's General Welfare Committee, to which it was referred on May 21.

On June 18 the committee touched off a public furore when it laid over action on the measure indefinitely. Indications then were that the bill might be considerably delayed and probably drastically amended.

Today the General Welfare Committee, meeting at City Hall at 11 A. M. before the regular Council session, will get two proposed amendments. One would drop set up machinery for screening complaints by tenants.

Both amendments will be offered by Majority Leader Joseph T. Sharkey, Democrat of Brooklyn and one of the bill's sponsors. In addition, Councilman Eric J. Treulich, Queens Democrat and chairman of the General Welfare Committee, has said that he will propose an amendment to exempt cooperative apartments from the anti-bias bill's provisions.

It is regarded as possible that other amendments may be suggested.

Since the General Welfare Committee's delay of the bill on June 18, the Council has been under steadily mounting pressure to act without much further delay on an anti-bias housing law. Mayor Wagner has applauded the Council for taking the time it needs to study the bill, but he is known to want prompt passage.

On Sunday, Senator Jacob K. Javits and Charles Abrams, head of the State Commission Against Discrimination, added their voices to the discussion. They urged passage of a bill with punitive provisions softened or deleted and with greater reliance on conciliation.

Complicating the picture is the atmosphere of tension and strain that has enveloped the Council regarding the anti-bias housing bill. On June 19, Councilman Earl Brown, Harlem Democrat, told the Urban League that Mr. Sharkey had "thrown a monkey wrench" into efforts to pass the bill promptly.

Mr. Brown also is a sponsor of the current measure. The third sponsor is Minority Leader Stanley M. Isaacs, Manhattan Republican-Liberal.

Some time after today's meeting, interested civic and social welfare groups and others are expected to have a chance to air their views of the now-proposed amendments at an open meeting of the General Welfare Committee.

Existing state and city laws ban discrimination for reasons of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry in the rental or sale of dwelling space in housing receiving any form of Government aid. The new measure would extend coverage to include the 1,787,183 private apartments, residential hotel suites and tenement flats here.

Hundreds Move In

In recent years hundreds of Negro families have moved into new areas of the east side without incident. The episode of the steelworker is therefore not typical, but it points up these aspects of Cleveland's interracial situation:

1. The city's rapidly growing Negro population can no longer be contained in its former areas and is pushing outward.

2. In many areas this expansion is being actively opposed and in some it is being successfully blocked.

3. Despite the frictions inherent in the situation, positive community forces and influences are operating to promote understanding.

In general the climate of racial relations is good in Cleveland and does not have the tensions which, in some cities, have boiled over into riots.

Negro Population Soars

Cleveland is not without inflammatory ingredients. The Negro population of Cuyahoga county, encompassing greater Cleveland, has increased from 87,145 in 1940 to 151,187 in 1950 and to an estimated 219,352 in 1956.

Some of the Negroes are compressed into an area five miles long and five miles wide on Cleveland's east side. Only 2,000 Negroes live beyond what is sometimes called the "ivory curtain" of the city's suburbs.

Many thousands of white residents have sold or rented houses to Negroes and joined the exodus of the last 20 years to the suburbs. A few years ago an east side section known as the Hough area was 95 per cent white. Now it is estimated to have 32,000 Negroes and 48,000 whites.

Housing Shortage Grows

East side congestion is becoming increasingly acute. Clearing of slums to make way for urban renewal projects has displaced more families than the new units have accommodated.

One per cent of 145,000 new housing units built by private industry in Cleveland since 1946 has been available to Negroes.

Negro leaders report it is next to impossible to get financing for Negro purchase of a house in a suburban area. Real estate agents, they say, will not show houses to Negroes.

"Better housing is a must for Negroes," comments a Shaker Heights attorney, "but I would do anything short of outright violence to keep them out of Shaker Heights."

Survey Finds Bias Brought from Home

TOLEDO, Ohio, (ANP) — A study by a Toledo elementary school faculty has underscored a long standing belief that racial prejudices begin in the home and are carried to the schools.

The study also revealed that these prejudices can be erased only if they are acknowledged as such.

The study was conducted by the school in cooperation with the Board of Community Relations and had the approval of the Toledo Board of Education.

Miss Bell Schuh, principal of the school, said her 30-teacher study group had its "eyes opened to what is happening around us."

As a result, she said, her teachers became aware—many for the first time—that group prejudices exist in school and affect both teachers and pupils.

The report took the position that children tend to bring family attitudes to school with them, and prejudices increase with age.

The survey group suggested neighborhood programs as one way to create an awareness among parents as to prejudices in the home and to stimulate parental thinking."

TOLEDO, Ohio, June 14 (UP)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked Negro ministers today to urge members of the congregations to stay away from a South Toledo neighborhood, scene of recent racial demonstrations.

Jesse Lott, 34-year-old Negro car washer, is building a home in an all-white neighborhood.

Nightly demonstrations have been staged by residents protesting his moving into the area. Crowds demonstrated also against the police assigned to patrol the neighborhood.

Neighbors said they were not opposed to Negroes, but resented Mr. Lott personally.

TOLEDO, O.—(ANP)— This city remained in a tense state last week as white hoodlums in South Toledo continued their harassment of a 39 year old man who purchased a home in a lilywhite neighborhood.

Crowds of up to 500 have appeared in the block to utter threats and insults against P. Jesse Lott when he went to the home to make repairs and repaint.

At week's end these developments had taken place:

The Toledo NAACP drafted a resolution to City Council and city officials demanding that adequate measures be taken to safeguard Mr. Lott and his property.

TO MOVE IN

Mr. Lott made plans to move into the place in the ensuing week.

He was fired from his job as a car washer on the pretext of insubordination. (Informed opinion was that his employers fired him because he was involved in the controversy.)

Lott reportedly received an offer of twice his purchase price if he would sell the property to whites.

A white family was threatened because its home in another section of the city was listed for sale in an advertisement by a Negro realty concern.

Mr. Lott purchased the home from a white woman, who originally hired him to rehabilitate the place. Apparently one of the neighbors had previously attempted to purchase the house, but the previous owner refused to sell to him at a loss.

This neighbor has been suspected of fomenting hostility among the neighborhood residents, many of whom are said to be renters of his property.

Although the crowds have resorted to hoodlum tactics, police have yet to make any arrests. Chief Anthony A. Bosch has promised Mr. Lott all the protection necessary when he moves into the home. Police have been on the scene at the time of the various outbreaks.

Lott has denied that he has named a price for which he would sell the house According to police, he had said that he would sell if the residents would meet his price. Lott denied this.

Toledo City Council Upholds Right To Buy Choice Property

TOLEDO, O., — (ANP) — The right of a Negro to purchase a home anywhere in this city was solidly backed last week by City Council.

This was the most significant development as residents of a lily white neighborhood continued their opposition to Jessie Lott, purchaser of the home.

The issue was carried to Council after the Toledo NAACP adopted a resolution urging that police provide Mr. Lott with adequate protection against bodily harm or damage to his home.

Council's action was embodied in unanimous support of a plan by the Toledo Board of Community Relations to end the controversy.

Keystone of the move were these points:

Get the whites to give up the idea of buying out Mr. Lott and adjust themselves to the situation.

Issue a statement upholding the right of Mr. Lott — or any other citizen — to purchase property in any area, regardless of their race, religion or birthplace.

Neighbors of the area indicated after the Council's hearing that they were not giving in easily. An effigy of Mr. Lott was hanged in the neighborhood as a large crowd gathered.

Police trying to disperse the gathering were roughed up. Only one arrest was made — that of a 17-year-old youth trying to drive his car through the crowd.

Spread of Growing Negro Population Gives Problem —Frictions Being Eased

Sept. 11-5-57

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 2—One day last summer a Negro steelworker bought a house on an all-white street in Cleveland's East Side and moved in with his family.

Two nights later 300 residents of the area met in a church to register their protests against having Negroes as neighbors. A sign above the stairway leading to the basement meeting place said, "Christianity is the Key to a Good Home."

The Negro began to receive threatening telephone calls. A real estate man approached him and asked whether he would be willing to sell the house for $2,000 more than he had paid for it. An official of the bank that had granted his loan told protesting neighbors that there had been a misunderstanding and that it was against the bank's policy to initiate Negro penetration of an all-white neighborhood.

Other forces were also at work, however. Members of various agencies devoted to promoting good community relations moved quietly into the picture. Neighborhood ministers and church members sought to bring about a more understanding attitude toward the new residents. A prominent member of the financial community had a talk with officials of the bank. Leaders of Negro organizations gave the new homeowner moral support. The police remained alert and there were no demonstrations or vandalism.

After a few tense days of indecision the Negro decided not to sell.

In recent years hundreds of Negro families have moved into new areas of the East Side without incident. The episode of the steelworker is therefore, not typical, but it points up these aspects of Cleveland's interacial situation:

¶The city's rapidly growing Negro population can no longer be contained in its former areas and is pushing outward.

¶In many areas this expansion is being actively opposed and in some it is being successfully blocked.

¶Despite the frictions inherent in the situation, positive community forces and influences are operating to promote understanding.

General Climate Is Good

In general the climate of racial relations is good in Cleveland and does not have the tensions which, in some cities, have boiled over into riots.

Cleveland is not, however, without inflammatory ingredients. The Negro population of Cuyahoga County, encompassing Greater Cleveland, has increased from 87,145 in 1940 to 151,187 in 1950 and to an estimated 219,352 in 1955.

What is more important, however, some of the Negroes are compressed into an area five miles long and five miles wide on Cleveland's East Side. Only about 3,000 Negroes live beyond what is sometimes called the "Ivory Curtain" of the city's suburbs.

Many thousands of white residents have sold or rented their houses to Negroes and joined the exodus of the last twenty years to the suburbs. A few years ago an East Side section known as the Hough area was 95 per cent white. Now it is estimated to have 32,000 Negroes and 48,000 whites.

Despite public housing projects and urban renewal programs East Side congestion is becoming increasingly acute. Clearing of slums to make way for urban renewal projects has displaced more families than the new units have accommodated.

Little New Negro Housing

One 1 per cent of 145,000 new housing units built by private industry in Cleveland since 1946 has been available to Negroes.

K. C. Jones Jr., director of housing activities for the Urban League of Cleveland, says that sooner or later the combination of more people and fewer dwelling units will "cause a social upheaval with which none of us is equipped to cope."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People here warns that "no amount of tinkering within the tight confines of the inner-city Negro ghetto will basically solve this problem."

Ernest J. Bohn, director of metropolitan housing in Cleveland, is enthusiastic about the benefits of public housing and urban renewal projects, but deplores a lack of suitable areas within Cleveland proper for development without first displacing large numbers of people.

He says housing relief can be achieved only to a limited degree within the city and that genuine relief will not come until the "Chinese Wall" of resistance is taken down by the suburbs.

For the Negro squeezed into an East Side area the suburban barriers are imposing. Negro leaders report that it is next to impossible to get financing for Negro purchase of a house in a suburban area. Real estate agents, they say, will not show houses to Negroes.

"Better housing is a must for Negroes," comments a Shaker Heights attorney, "but I would do anything short of outright violence to keep them out of Shaker Heights."

Fortunately, according to Frank Baldau, director of Cleveland's Community Relations Board, important and influential segments of the community are taking a more positive attitude toward resolving of the inter-racial problems. He reports excellent support from the clergy and from the city's newspapers in the drive for good community relations.

He cited a series of articles in The Cleveland Press which indicated that property values generally did not drop when Negroes moved into an area and that integrated housing had been achieved in many sections of the city with no unpleasantness.

A series in The Cleveland News took a close look at Cleveland Negroes and their problems and reported that generally they regarded the city as a good place to live.

Cleveland ministers have rolled up their sleeves to attack segregated housing. Dr. John Bruere, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, for example, has called for church members to enter into a "convenant of occupancy" under which they would welcome to their neighborhoods any good non-white families.

"This may be a dangerous step," he admits, "but an inevitable one for us Christians."

There are four Negroes in the City Council. The city has two Negroes who are judges, two who serve as assistant prosecutors and 450 who are teachers in the public schools.

Housing Bias Top Problem In Portland

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Portland "balance sheet on race relations for 1956" was the topic of a report of the Urban League here at its January meeting at the St. Philip's Episcopal church.

Significant developments, progress and problems in the fields of public accommodations, housing, schools, employment and training were presented by John S. Holley, community services secretary, and E. Shelton Hill, director of industrial relations.

Speaking of practices in restaurants, hotels and other public establishments, Holley called the picture, on the whole "very good."

He said isolated instances of discrimination had been reported in the state outside of Portland, but said indications were that the vast majority of establishments were complying with the Oregon civil rights law.

HOUSING BIAS

Housing, Holley reported, continues to be the number one area of segregation and discrimination with the non-white minorities confined to specified, older districts. A few Negro and other non-white buyers, however, were able to obtain newer housing outside of the "ghetto" areas.

Holley stated that the League had been informed by a large rental agency that not more than 2 or 3 per cent of the rental housing in the city is available to non-whites, and that 85 per cent of the places that will accept non-white renters are in poor condition.

The agency also reported that higher-than-average rents were being demanded of prospective Negro tenants.

Holley said the difficulty Negroes face in private housing is reflected in the fact that about 50 per cent of the tenants in public housing are Negroes. Public housing projects are integrated.

SCHOOL PICTURE

Regarding the public schools, Holley pointed out that one indication of a good administrative policy in race relations is reflected in the continued hiring of non-white teachers (the current number is 45 full-time non-white teachers, who are not segregated by race in assignment to schools).

He cited outstanding instances of achievement on the part of Negro students in Portland's integrated schools, but stated there is still a tendency among many Negro youngsters to segregate themselves.

Holley said race was found not a major factor in juvenile disturbances here, but the League had found some Negro parents magnifying the racial factor in attempting to defend Negro youngsters who had been guilty of violence.

On the employment picture, Hill stated that, in spite of the Oregon FEP law, non-white workers still face restrictions in employment and promotion.

The new law was enacted by the State Legislature on May 21. It specifically prohibits the discrimination in the sale, lease or rental of a dwelling unit (apartment or building) owned, operated or managed by a person who owns, operates or manages five or more other such dwelling units on contiguous land, notwithstanding that the land is separated by a public or private street or road.

The law points out that it is aimed at those dwellings which are in the process of benefiting from public aid.

Sightseers Kept Moving At Racial Trouble Scene

Atlanta Ga. P.2

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 18 (UP)—About 50 state and local police kept thousands of Sunday motorists from stopping here today to see the scene of nightly disturbances which have broken out since a Negro family moved into this all-white community.

Police were stationed in the area on orders of Gov. George M. Leader to prevent violence. They let sightseers drive through the embroiled section, but a spokesman said, "We kept them moving all day long."

NO DEMONSTRATIONS

The spokesman said everything was peaceful in the community with no demonstrations. Authorities were prepared to guard against any defiance of a ban on public meetings which went into effect today. All previous demonstrations occurred at night.

Authorities issued an edict against all future assemblies through Deputy Sheriff Frank Jacobs and threatened "wholesale arrests" for any repetition of the stormy gatherings in front of the newly purchased home of William Myers Jr., father of three small children.

OPEN AIR MEETING

Police had agreed to permit an open-air meeting last night on a private lot about 300 feet from the pink ranch-type home purchased by the Negro electrical worker but warned there would be no further demonstrations allowed.

More than 350 persons booed down Bucks county Sheriff C. Leroy Murray who tried to address the meeting. Then when the gathering broke up, about 200 defied threats of arrests to march toward the Myers home.

HALTED BY POLICE

A cordon of police halted them across the street from the residence, however, and dispersed the crowd. A knot of about 50 residents of the immediate area were permitted to remain on a nearby lawn.

Myers moved into the house on Tuesday only to move out again while a hot water heater was paired. Shortly after the Negro family left in their new automobile, the first disturbance started. Two panes of glass in the living room picture window were shattered by a volley of stones thrown at the house.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 16—(AP)—While state police guarded his property, a Negro said today that "nothing whatever will prevent me from living in the house" he bought in this all-white community of 60,000.

William Myers Jr., reached at his father's home at York, Pa., where he took his family for a brief vacation, said he planned to "move into the Levittown house by tomorrow night.

"The only thing that is holding me up is the facilities," Myers said. "I have no hot water and a new tank is to be installed today."

NEWS THAT the first Negro family was preparing to move into Levittown became known Tuesday and hundreds of residents, disregarding police orders to stay away, have been milling around the Myers property.

On Tuesday night, stones hurled at the house broke two picture windows. Seven persons have been arrested for disorderly conduct.

A number of protest meetings, marked by angry talk and bitter speeches, have been held. Others have been planned.

RESIDENTS ARE DIVIDED—and Bristol Township Police Chief John R. Stewart demanded state police protection because he said he feared violence, possibly bloodshed.

Myers said that "only if something comes up that I can't foresee, will I forego sleeping in the home tomorrow. A crowd around my house won't chase me away. Neither will more rocks through my windows.

"I bought the home and Iintend to live there."

Myers said his wife, Daisy, agrees with him. The couple have three children—two boys, aged 4 and 3, and a month-old daughter.

GOV. GEORGE M. LEADER who directed the state police to guard the property said he was "ashamed" of the actions of the Levittown residents.

"Any family has the right to live where they can obtain the rights of legal possession—on any street, road or highway in this commonwealth," he said. "Pennsylvania was founded as a haven for all oppressed peoples."

A mass meeting attended by 500 people was held here last night and afterwards police told newsmen they were told the general sentiment at the gathering was in favor of proceeding without any more uproar. Police said they understood the group had decided to talk things over with an attorney.

Murray's telegram in part read:

"Chief of Police Stuart of Bristol Township says the citizens of Levittown are out of control. His local police and he and the township manager together with the Board of Township Commissioners have requested me as sheriff of Bucks County to seek the aid of state police.

"They have done all they can to quell the violence in which the Negroes' home was stoned and two picture windows broken." . . . Levittown tense as Negro prepares to occupy home

Sat. 8-17-57

B'ham, Ala.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 17—(AP)—Residents of this all-white five-year-old residential city waited tensely Saturday for an effort by a Negro family to occupy their recently-purchased home.

Levittown has been seething with unrest since it became known generally last Tuesday William J. Myers, 32-year-old father of three, had purchased a home in this planned community of 60,000. That night, a flurry of stones shattered two picture windows in the house Myers bought.

Since then, state police have stood guard. But despite their presence, Levittowners have held nightly protest meetings and milled around the house.

A MASS MEETING was held Friday night at a baseball field with several hundred in attendance. Another meeting, with 250 present, was held in adjoining backyards near the Myerses house in Levittown's Dogwood Hollow section.

At the second meeting, the Levittown Betterment Assn. was formed with the expressed purpose of opposing Myers' attempt to move into the community.

A third meeting directly connected with the situation was conducted at nearby Fallsington, Pa., by the Rev. Daniel B. Stevick, president of the Lower Bucks County Council of Churches. He urged all Levittown residents to seek spiritual guidance.

AFTER THE MEETING broke up there was spasmodic picketing outside the Myerses house but the state and local police kept all the marchers well removed from the house itself.

Meanwhile, Myers returned to his previous residence at nearby Bloomdale Gardens from a short vacation at York, Pa., home of his father and asserted anew his intention of moving into the Levittown house, probably late Saturday.

"I bought the home," he said, "and I intend to stay."

In backyard meetings, on the picket lines which formed in front of "the house," in little knots of townsfolk who gathered on corners, people asked one another:

"What are we going to do?"

James Newell put forth the policy of the Levittown Betterment Assn. to a crowd of about 500 in a backyard.

"An orderly picket line in front of the house," he said.

When the presence of a detachment of state troopers was mentioned, Newell said he would not sanction law breaking. News P. 2

Later, he said, "the best thing would be for everyone to stay away—boycott 'em."

THE DAY'S DEVELOPMENTS in this neatly-planned little town, depend on plumbing, as much as anything.

Myers has said he will not move in with his wife, Daisy, and their two small boys and daughter until a new hot water tank has been installed.

It was not learned whether this has been done.

GOV. GEORGE M. LEADER dispatched the troopers to the scene. Local police and clergy also have left no doubt where they stand.

Perhaps the answer to this question "what are we going to do" that gained the most currency was that given by Robert Camerote, vice chairman of the Levittown Betterment Assn. He said:

"I advise everybody to go to church and ask the good Lord to help us do what's right."

Somebody answered:

"We know what the churches are going to say, but what about our homes?"

rocks would not prevent him from moving his family into the new home he bought in this all-white community of 60,000.

Myers' purchase of a home in the planned city of 15,400 homes caused a ground swell of protest that broke into violence Tuesday. That night, rocks broke two picture windows in Myers' ranch-type home in Levitttown's Dogwood Hollow section.

"Only if something comes up that I can't foresee," Myers said, "will I forego sleeping in the home tomorrow.

'Won't Chase Me Away'

"A crowd around my house won't chase me away. Neither will more rocks through my windows.

"I bought the home, and I intend to live there.

"I intend to stay."

The State of Pennsylvania promised him protection. So did the police chief of Bristol Township and the sheriff of Bucks County.

A detail of State troopers—ordered by Governor George M. Leader—ringed the property into which Myers moved the bulk of his possessions earlier this week.

Residents of Dogwood Hollow section learned of Myers' home purchase Tuesday.

Despite police warnings, hundreds of people have congregated in front of the house—marching, clapping hands, muttering.

Police have arrested seven persons, incvluding several juveniles, on disorderly conduct charges.

uproar began, with some violence, on Tuesday, the opposition met tonight and, in the words of its leaders, tried to "settle this touchy business without rough stuff."

Tonight's mass meeting was held in a Levittowner's backyard.

NO VIOLENCE

The sentiment of the meeting, generally, seemed to be: No violence, no insults, nothing outside the law.

James Newell, one of the leaders, said a committee will consult William Levitt, the builder of this community and one like it in New York. He said other residents will approach Myers, himself, and ask him whether he wants to move in despite the stand taken by many in the neighborhood.

Robert Camerote, another of the leaders, said: "I advise everybody to go to church and ask the good Lord to help us do what's right."

That provoked a round of applause.

But here and there came cries of impatience. One hotspur yelled "What are we going to do besides talk?"

While the meeting went on, a smaller crowd milled around the unoccupied Myers house.

STATE POLICE ON HAND

State police, sent by Gov. George M. Leader last night to help preserve order, guarded traffic lanes, carefully checking the identity of each motorist coming into the area.

State and local authorities said they were doing everything possible to guard against a flareup such as the one on Tuesday. That night, rocks shattered two picture windows in Myers' ranch-type home on Deepgreen Lane in the Dogwood Hollow section.

Myers could not be reached for comment on developments at tonight's meeting.

State police aid was requested by Bucks County Sheriff C. Leroy Murray who said that local police have "done all they can to quell possible violence.

200 PERSONS

The announcement by the home owner, William Myers, Jr., that he intended to move his family into the development despite neighborhood hostility drew a crowd of some 200 persons around the house Wednesday night.

In a row, one man was arrested for disorderly conduct by local police. Others were arrested Tuesday night for throwing stones at the house.

Myers is an equipment tester for a Trenton, N. J. refrigeration firm. There are three children in the family, one a month-old girl.

Violence Flares As Negroes Move In

Advertiser Tues. 8-20-57

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 19 (AP)—Stones were hurled tonight in an eruption of new violence after a Negro family moved into this all-white community of 15,000 homes.

A state trooper and a photographer were struck by missiles thrown by someone in a crowd of 250 persons held back by police about two blocks from the ranch home of William Myers, 34-year-old Negro.

"You have struck one of my men," state police Lt. J. M. Wicker announced over a loudspeaker.

"I will not tolerate this. I give you 10 minutes to get back to your homes."

His announcement was met by boos and jeers, but the crowd started to disperse. About 150 persons continued to mill about, however.

Then Wicker, a veteran trooper, ordered 22 of his men to line up with riot sticks across the normally quiet residential street and the crowd was pushed back another 20 yards.

A truck driver identified as Donald Walker, 34, was clouted on the shoulders for what Wicker said was cursing officers and resisting the push-back. He was taken to a justice of the peace to be arraigned.

Hit by stones, but not seriously hurt, were state police Sgt. George Gollub and reporter-photographer Gordon Parker of the Bristol (Pa), Courier.

Myers, his wife, Daisy, 32, and one of their three children moved into their recently purchased home despite protests from many of their 60,000 neighbors in this unique planned city.

"We're here to stay," Myers said as he carted personal belongings into the $12,150 home. Furnishing were moved in last week.

Ever since the community learned of the sale of the home to a Negro, crowds have gathered nightly, and on one occasion stones were hurled through the picture window.

A citizens' committee, formed to keep the Negro family out of Levittown, announced it would defy a sheriff's order and continue to hold public meetings.

This group, the Levittown Betterment Committee, was forced to break up a meeting Saturday night on the order of Sheriff C. Leroy Murray of Bucks County.

Murray served notices that all large, outdoor gatherings in Levittown would be considered unlawful.

In a statement issued by James Jewell Jr., chairman of the committee, the group said today:

"The Levittown Betterment Committee has not disbanded. In fact, over the weekend the organization has gained strength and intends to carry on this work and also intends to stand upon its constitutional rights and the right to free and peaceful assembly.

"We denounce the actions of C. Leroy Murray, sheriff of Bucks County.

"We wish to announce openly to Sheriff Murray that we are calling another meeting this week. We want all Levittowners to join us in decrying the only real violence to date, the brutal clubbing of one of the citizens of Levittown by the Pennsylvania State Police.

The statement said the time and place of the protest meeting would be announced later.

"We want a peaceful, orderly and uninterrupted meeting. The purpose of this organization is restoring our entire white community," the statement said.

Many of the 60,000 residents of the community are banded into two factions.

Several hours after they moved in, Myers held a news conference in his $12,150-home, telling assembled reporters: "All I want to do is to be a good neighbor, and I hope others do the same.

The 34-year-old World War II veteran emphasized that he had no backing, financial or otherwise, from any group or organization.

Troopers Rout Mob at Negro Home

By the Associated Press

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 20—Club-swinging troopers last night broke up a jeering, stone-throwing mob protesting the arrival of the first Negro family in this previously all-white community.

Rocks were hurled and a trooper and a news photographer were struck. One man was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct.

State Police Lt. J. M. Wicker shouted over a loudspeaker: "You have struck one of my men. I will not tolerate this. I give you 10 minutes to get back to your homes."

Twenty-two troopers lined up with riot sticks and forced back the crowd of 250. The sticks were used on one resident who Lt. Wicker said was cursing officers and resisting the police line. He was indentified as Donald Walker, 34, a truck driver, of Levittown who was fined $10 after pleading guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct.

By midnight, all but a handful of the crowd had returned to their homes.

All was quiet at the house in the Dogwood Hollow section where William J. Myers, 34, moved with his wife, Daisie, 32, and one of their three children. Two other children are staying at the home of relatives.

At a news conference, the college-educated Negro said he paid $12,150 for his home. He declined to say what his income is as a refrigeration mechanic in nearby Trenton, N. J.

Mr. Myers emphasized that the purchase of the house was his own decision and that he has had no backing, financial or otherwise, from any group or organization.

He did say that when trouble arose, a Quaker organization, the American Friends Service Committee, offered to advise him. Representatives of the committee helped him move in yesterday.

Hundreds Gather In Protest On Levittown Negro Neighbor

Wed 8-21-57

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 20 (AP)—A noisy, cat-calling crowd of several hundred gathered again tonight near the home of the first Negro family in this 15,000-home development.

A large contingent of state and local police—taunted and jeered by the crowd—maintained a cautious watch on streets near the house. Only residents and newsmen were allowed in the Dogwood Hollow section of this sprawling community.

The crowd assembled at one of the three entrances to the section, about two blocks from the home of William Myers. The Negro's house was brightly lighted but the shades were drawn. The noise of the crowd could be heard plainly from his one story ranch style home.

The arrival yesterday of Myers, his wife, and youngest of three children at their newly purchased $12,150 residence, set off several demonstrations in the neighborhood.

Three times state troopers pushed and prodded a jeering crowd of 300 from the vicinity of the Myers' home in a series of incidents in which stones were thrown at the officers and newspaper people. One man was arrested and another taken into protective custody.

In the last week since word got out that the family had purchased the $12,150 ranch type home in this 5-year-old planned community of 60,000 people, at least nine persons have been arrested on a variety of minor charges. Earlier in the week there were picket lines, mass protest rallies on nearby lawns and, on one occasion, stones hurled through the picture window of the Myers residence.

All was quiet in the neighborhood during the day and there was little activity in the Myers' house.

The 34 - year - old refrigeration technician drove to work at nearby Trenton, N. J., in his car this morning, without incident.

Some men arrived to hook up an oil tank in the yard, and an unidentified woman, who drove up in a station wagon bearing the legend, "Bucks County YWCA," visited Mrs. Myers during the afternoon.

Wed 8-21-57

James Newell, an electrician, who lives near the family in the Dogwood Hollow section of Levittown, has announced there will be a meeting tomorrow night of his newly formed Levittown Betterment Committee. The committee's avowed purpose is to oust Myers, either by some legal means or by persuading him it is in his best interest as well as the community's to move out. Newell says he is opposed to violence.

A second group, the Citizens' Committee for Levittown, has announced a long-range plan for "education and explanation" of the situation to the residents of the development.

The latter committee, while not taking any position on the Myers' case itself, issued a statement deploring violence and racial bias in the community.

Mrs. Daisey Myers pours coffee for her husband, William, shortly after couple moved into their new home in previously all-white Levittown section under police guard but without untoward incident.

Troopers Repel Unruly Crowd at Levittown Home

Violence flared anew last night as a squad of 22 State policemen charged into a crowd of about 250 persons gathered in front of the home of William Myers, Jr., Levittown's first Negro resident, shortly after stones struck one of the officers and a news photographer.

Angered by the stone throwing, Lt. J. M. Wicker, head of the State police contingent assigned to guard Myers' ranch home on Deepgreen la., used a Bristol township police car loud-speaker to warn the milling demonstrators, "I give you 10 minutes to move. One of my men and a newsman have been hit, and there must be no further violence."

DRAW NIGHT STICKS

That was at 8:55 P. M. At the 9:05 "deadline," when only a few of the people had left, Wicker lined up his men in single file on the lawn of the house and gave the order to charge with drawn night sticks.

The crowd, which had gathered on all four corners of the intersection adjoining the couple's home, fell back slowly and some of its members began shouting epithets at the officers.

FORCED BACK 2 BLOCKS

The State policemen finally forced the demonstrators to a point two blocks away, but not before one of them had become unruly and was placed under arrest. In five previous night protest-meetings held near the Myers residence since last Tuesday, eight others had been arrested on disorderly conduct charges.

Last night's flare-up—the first since Saturday night—came an hour after Lt. Wicker had complimented the crowd on being orderly.

QUOTES ORDINANCE

In quoting a township ordinance which made a gathering of more than three persons for unlawful purposes a misdemeanor, Wicker had stated: "I realize you have a problem and I respect it. However, we too have a problem and we ask you to respect it. If not, I shall have to direct my men accordingly."

Booing and catcalls followed Wicker's later order to disperse.

Myers, his wife and one of their three children had moved into their $12,150 home earlier in the day, without incident. At that time, only a handful of persons were walking about the area.

GIVES INTERVIEW

At 6:30 P. M., Myers invited press and radio and television representatives into the house for an interview. Present at the time were four persons, described as recent acquaintances who had offered to advise and otherwise aid the couple.

The four were identified as Thomas Colgan, a member of the American Friends Service Committee of Philadelphia; Steve Remsen, a member of the Jewish Labor Committee, an AFL-CIO adjunct, and Mr. and Mrs. Reinhold Edelshien, art teachers and volunteer workers at the William Penn Center in Fallsington, a Quaker organization.

Right to Buy Queried

Negro's Neighbors Sit In Solemn Judgment

By JOSEPH ALVAREZ,
Staff Writer.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 22.—A group of Americans met last night to discuss another man's right to buy a house.

The man is William Myers—a Negro.

Mr. Myers' private life was opened to the public last night at a meeting of the factions that support and oppose his moving into Levittown. As the democratic process was perverted by the curious session, some 50 police patrolled outside the Myers' home to prevent further eruptions of violence.

While the nightstick maintained the precarious peace around the Myers' modest home in the Dogwood Hollow section, the Rev. Ray L. Harwick tried to heal the community's spiritual wounds with Christian balm.

But many of Levittown's hate-seared residents were having no part of Mr. Harwick's pleas for Christian tolerance. They wanted to know how Mr. Myers could afford to live in Levittown if he weren't subsidized by some organization.

The Protestant clergyman, expressing a sense of shame, and with tears rolling down his cheeks, gave a public accounting of Mr. Myers' finances. But not even this gesture satisfied the opposition.

James Newell, a powerfully built man of squinty eyes, crew cut and florid face, led the anti-Myers' forces with the stony assertion that the only solution was for the Negro family to get out.

Dynamite Refused

Mr. Newell held that despite his stand, he doesn't believe in violence and recently he deterred one of his followers who brought dynamite to his house to blow up the Myers home. "My wife shooed him away and called police," he added.

It also was disclosed at the session that Mr. Myers was offered a $3000 profit on his $12,150 home if he would get out. He declined the offer, saying he was determined to stay on because he now feels that he "owes something to the Negro people."

While Mr. Myers' affairs were being bared, he and his family stayed in their home behind the protective wall of police guards. No violence shattered the night as it did the previous two. On one occasion a policeman was felled by a stone thrown by a demonstrator.

As the grim-faced opponents filed into the meeting last night, the tension became increasingly acute. Mr. Harwick, after pleading that "every individual of any race, creed or color should have equal opportunity of housing, schooling and employment," was asked about Mr. Myers' finances.

Choking with emotion, he said, "I hate to lay a man's financial position open. It goes against every grain of decent conscience I've got. . . ." Tears spilled from his eyes and he turned slowly and sat down a minute before continuing:

"Something inside me revolted when I had to make this check on the man, but it had to be done (to stop rumors that the Myerses were 'sponsored'). I know about as much of his life as he does himself."

Credit Rating Checked.

The questions came fast. Mr. Harwick answered.

"We went back to 1953 and we found not one unfavorable aspersion, not one unfavorable word against this man. He is as clean as a whistle." He said the investigation even included a check on both their parents of both Mr. and Mrs. Myers. The thing that helped the family buy the house, he said, was that Mrs. Meyers' father died last spring and left her a small inheritance.

But the opposition seemed unmoved. Mr. Newell repeated that there was only one solution—for the Myerses to get out.

Crowds Barred Near Negro Home

By the Associated Press.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 21.—State police today banned gatherings of more than three persons in the neighborhood of Levittown's first Negro homeowner after an officer was injured by a stone hurled from the midst of a crowd of demonstrators.

Wed. Bulletin

Some 400 persons congregated near the home of William Myers, 34, and his family again last night. Jeers greeted officers who kept the crowd in check.

Suddenly a stone struck Sgt. Tom Stewart on the head. Sgt. Stewart, bleeding from one ear, fell to the ground. Some 20 state and local police quickly broke up the crowd, taking three persons into custody.

Sent to Hospital.

Sgt. Stewart was sent to a hospital, where doctors said he had a possible brain concussion.

New York

Immediately after the stoning incident Maj. William Ruch of the state police said he would permit no further gatherings of more than three persons in the neighborhood.

Wed. 8-21-57

Crowds of varying sizes have been protesting the arrival of the Myers family ever since it became known they had bought the home in this planned community of 60,000. Some 12 persons have been arrested on minor charges.

Police last night arrested Clayton Gould, 37, of Levittown, and William Duff, 18, of nearby Fairless Hills. Both were fined $10 plus $9 in costs on charges of disorderly conduct. A 15-year-old boy was arrested on an open charge and released in the custody of his parents.

Called Meeting.

Meanwhile, James Newell, an electrician who lives near the Myers family, called a meeting tonight of the newly formed Levittown Betterment Committee. Mr. Newell said the committee's purpose is to get the family out of the community of 15,000 homes, either by some legal maneuver or by persuading Mr. Myers it is to his own interest to leave. Mr. Newell said his group is against violence.

Negroes Integral Part Of the L. I. Levittown

Herald Tribune

Special to the Herald Tribune

LEVITTOWN, L. I., Aug. 20.—In contrast to the turbulence which has greeted the first Negro arrival in the Levittown, Pa., housing development, several Negro families have become an integral part of this Long Island community which is a model for the Pennsylvania project.

Paget Alves, housing director of the Urban League of Greater New York, estimated that at least six Negro families have taken up residence in this community of 17,500 homes and 82,000 residents.

Wed. 8-21-57

Due to inaccurate information, the New York Herald Tribune reported this morning that five Negro families who had lived here had moved voluntarily.

The Board of Education reported that there are several Negro children in Levittown schools, but that the census does not break down attendance by color groups. There have been no incidents nor any unpleasantness resulting from the school integration, the board reported.

New York N.Y.

No Tensions Reported

Mrs. Betsy Yaller, former executive director of the Committee to End Discrimination in Levittown, and a neighbor of one of the Negro families, told the Herald Tribune that her and her neighbors' relations with the Negro family were "most pleasant."

"There are no problems and no tensions at all," she said. "Our children play together and go to school together, and we are all good friends."

Mrs. Yaller said that residents of Levittown, Pa., who are objecting to the arrival of a Negro family there are "missing an excellent opportunity for their children."

"There is no better education for their youngsters than to attend an integrated school, and will make a welcome addition to the community," Mrs. Yaller predicted.

Section 2

Neighbors "Wonderful"

Mrs. Yaller's appraisal of pleasantness with the Negro neighbor was backed up by Mrs. Cynthia Cotter, Negro mother of five children whom the management had tried to oust five years ago in the battle against integration.

At that time, the Cotters were renting a house at 25 Butternut Lane. Today, they own their own home at 25 Butternut Lane.

"My neighbors are just wonderful, and we get along perfectly well, even to the extent of exchanging items," she said yesterday.

Her husband, William, thirty-eight, is employed as an automobile mechanic. Both said they hoped to make Levittown their permanent home and are making improvements on the ranch house they purchased two years ago.

D.C. Resident Tells Part In Anti-Negro Incident

A Washington man took the taunts of a crowd of 200 because he "had to speak out in good conscience" during racial demonstrations in Levittown, Pa.

"I just went to let Mr. Myers know that I was interested in his staying. I didn't want to get involved in anything," Don Dryer explained yesterday.

Myers is William J. Myers, a 34-year-old Negro who has moved his family into one of the low-slung ranch houses in the all-white community of 60,000. Police were called to protect the Myers home after name-calling and stone-throwing by neighbors.

Visiting Parents

Dreyr, a white social worker in Washington, stopped in Levittown to see his parents after a trip to New York City.

"I didn't realize how upset everyone was until I got there," Dryer explained.

On Monday afternoon he drove the half-mile to the Myers home and found 50 persons—"mostly curiosity seekers" and children—standing across the street. He couldn't see Myers, so decided to wait.

"The neighbors were pretty bitter," he recounted. "They kept saying they had bought homes in Levittown to move away from the Negroes in Philadelphia and felt double-crossed. But there were some friendly neighbors."

The crowd grew to more than 200, Dryer said. Then came catcalls as reporters went to talk to Myers.

Yelled at Dryer

"The word got around that Mr. Myers had said he was going to stay," Dryer continued. "I guess that's when I got involved. Someone yelled across the street: 'What side are you on?'

"I defended Mr. Myers's right to live there. Then someone said I wouldn't say that if a policeman were not behind me. I guess I got sore and started across the street to talk there."

That's when a policeman took Dryer to his car, amid jeers. A wire service photographer took a picture.

Sheriff Breaks Up Meeting Protesting Levittown Negro

Courier-Journal Mon. 8-19-57 P. 17 Louisville, Ky.

Levittown, Pa., Aug. 17 (AP)—A sheriff Saturday broke up an outdoor meeting called in protest against a Negro family moving into this vast housing development outside Philadelphia.

A noisy, jeering crowd of about 300 obeyed the sheriff's request to end the meeting. But one man in the crowd became involved in a struggle with State police and was arrested.

The troopers said they had to use a club to subdue the man, who gave his name as Frank Mitchell, 28, Levittown.

Saturday night's meeting, sponsored by a group calling itself the Levittown Betterment Association, was the latest in several protesting the purchase of a house by William J. Myers, 32, Negro father of three children.

Until now, all 60,000 residents of this planned community have been white.

Myers and his family have not yet moved into their new home although it is furnished and ready.

The family is in seclusion somewhere in the area. A minister who has been in contact with Myers said the Negro decided not to move in Saturday night, but that it will be sometime soon, possibly Sunday.

Levittown, Pa., Aug. 20 (UP)—Tension mounted in this previously all-white community today as police anticipated another mass demonstration around the home of William Myers Jr., a Negro.

Three persons were injured Monday night as club-swinging state policemen dispersed the crowd of more than 350 persons, the seventh demonstration since last Tuesday when the Myers home was placed under police guard.

A token guard of 10 to 12 policemen was around the Myers ranch-type home today and reported things were quiet, with no crowd. The force was expected to be reinforced to some 50 men tonight.

Myers, a $5000-a-year Trenton, N. J., refrigeration firm employe, moved his family back into the house Monday after spending a week at his father's home in York, Pa.

The move touched off another demonstration which was ended only after State Police Lt. M. D. Wicker warned over a loudspeaker, "Someone threw a stone at one of my troopers, I will give you just ten minutes to disperse and go to your homes."

When the deadline arrived Wicker sent the club-swinging troopers into the crowd, forcing it about two blocks away from the Myers' home.

Donald Walker, 34, of 345 North Park dr., Levittown, one of those injured, was arrested by police and fined $10 and costs after pleading guilty of disorderly conduct charges.

Myers, 34, his wife, Daisy, 32, and their three children, originally entered the house last Tuesday.

Negro Plans Move Despite Mob Threats

Times-Union Sat. 8-17-57 P. 2 Jacksonville, Fla.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 16 (AP)—William Myers Jr., 32-year-old Negro father of three, said today that threatening crowds and rocks would not prevent him from moving his family into the new home he bought in this all-white community of 60,000.

Myers' purchase of a home in the planned city of 15,400 homes caused a ground swell of protest by white residents which flared into violence last Tuesday. That night, a flurry of rocks broke two picture windows in Myers' ranch-type home on Deepgreen lane in Levittown's Dogwood Hollow section.

"Only if something comes up that I can't foresee," Myers said, "will I forego sleeping in the home tomorrow.

"A crowd around my house won't chase me away. Neither will more rocks through my windows. I bought the home and I intend to live there. I intend to stay."

He holds a $9,300 GI mortgage on the $11,000 dwelling.

The State of Pennsylvania promised him protection, so did the police chief of Bristol Township and the sheriff of Bucks County.

A detail of state troopers—ordered by Gov. George M. Leader—ringed the property into which Myers moved the bulk of his possessions earlier this week.

Residents of the Dogwood Hollow section learned of Myers' home purchase on Tuedays.

Despite police warnings, hundreds of people have congregated in front of the house—marching, clapping hands, muttering.

Police have arrested seven persons, including several juveniles, on disorderly conduct charges.

As crowds continued to mill around, occasionally pushing and shoving, and while many protest meetings were held and planned, Sheriff C. Leroy Murray, prompted by Police Chief John R. Stewart, asked Gov. George M. Leader for state police aid.

Murray said Stewart described the situation as "out of control" and that only with troopers could it be "quelled without bloodshed."

Atlanta Ga.

LEVITTOWN, PA. — (INS) — The leader of the organization opposing racial integration in Levittown threatened to quit Wednesday because of mob violence which erupted over the first purchase of a home in the community by a Negro.

James Newell, chairman of the Levittown Betterment Committee, which was formed last week when William E. Myers, Jr., 34, bought a $12,000 ranch home, decried stone throwing incidents by angry mobs.

"It makes me sick," said Newell. "I'm about ready to quit."

Newell said the committee was formed to "seek every legal and peaceful means of forcing Myers to move" out of the previously all-white community of 60,000.

Myers, a refrigeration technician, has vowed to stay.

For the past eight nights crowds have gathered near his pink shingle home, jeering and howling catcalls. Twice, state and local police were forced to use riot sticks to disperse the mobs.

Tuesday night Bristol township Police Sgt. Thomas Stewart suffered a possible brain concussion when struck by stone. He was pronounced in satisfactory condition Wednesday following surgery.

The stoning prompted state police Major William Ruch to ban all "congregating" in the vicinity. Any gathering of more than three persons in the area will be dispersed, and violators face arrest, he said. He added, however, that this did not apply to legally-called meetings.

The betterment committee was trying to find a site to hold a mass protest rally.

Meanwhile, Newell planned to participate in a Kiwanis-sponsored debate, opposing the Rev. Ray Harwick, chairman of the Citizens Committee for Levittown.

Tim Fahey, president of the Levittown Kiwanis Club, said "The object of the debate is to bring out a peaceful settlement of Levittown's major problem of the moment."

Block's Only Negroes Flee Fire in Home

Wash. Daily News P. 2

By the United Press.

PHILADELPHIA, July 27 — Fire last night damaged two houses, one occupied by the only Negro family in the block.

The fire marshal's office said it was investigating charges by a member of the Negro family that the blaze was started by two white youths and a man.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wallace, 31, one of nine persons forced to flee from the blaze, said that when she and her family moved into the first floor apartment Saturday, mud and stones were thrown against the house and glass panes in the front and rear were broken.

Five weeks ago, a prio Negro tenant in the same apartment told police she was about to move in when paint was smeared on floors and over some of her belongings.

Police Act as Residents Opposing Negro Family Use Adjacent House to Meet

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Sept. 24—State troopers today placed a twenty-four-hour watch on the home of the first Negro family to move into this post-war community of 60,000.

Maj. William J. Ruch of the State Police ordered the guard after William E. Myers Jr. and his wife Daisy had conferred in Harrisburg with Thomas D. McBride, Attorney General.

The protection was taken apparently because a vacant house next to the Myers was being used as a gathering place for residents who objected to their living in the community.

Since Sunday people have come to the vacant house to drink coffee, sing songs, such as "Old Black Joe," and repeatedly play a recording of Paul Robeson's singing "Old Man River."

Neighbor is Caretaker

Eldred L. Williams, a neighbor in the Dogwood Hollow section, said he was acting as caretaker for the vacant house, which is owned by William Hughes of the Elderberry section.

"Mr. Hughes told me "that since he could not rent or sell the property now we could use the place any time for friendly get-togethers because of the Bristol Township ordinance against gatherings of three or more persons near the Myers's house," Mr. Williams said.

The police have been enforcing the ban since a week of nightly disorders a month ago when the Myerses moved into their $12,150 dwelling. Violence grew until a township police officer was knocked unconscious by a rock.

Mr. Williams flies a Confederate flag on his station wagon. On opposite ends of the roofs of the vacant house, he has attached an American and Confederate flag.

Mr. Myers said that recent incidents, including "obscene phone calls," the burning of a cross and abusive anonymous letters, "have the earmarks of the Ku Klux Klan."

He would not comment on his visit with the Attorney General. However, he said, the state troopers "are here to do the job the local police did not do."

In referring to the house taken over by "neighbors" at the rear of his property, Mr. Myers said:

"What they're doing is definitely wrong. It is un-American."

In spite of the continuing harassment, he and hi wife said they are "determined to remain residents of Levittown."

Negro to Occupy His Home Despite Hostility in Town

Herald Tribune Fri. 8-16-57

New York

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 15 (AP).—The first Negro home owner in this new, 60,000-thousand person community said today he planned to move his family into his house despite initial neighborhood hostility. P. 11

A crowd of 200 or more persons gathered outside the house for the second night in a row last night, and police arrested one man for disorderly conduct when he failed to move on. Five persons were arrested Tuesday night when stones were tossed through windows of the house.

The home owner is William Myers jr., an equipment tester for a Trenton, N. J., refrigeration firm. He and his wife, Daisy, have three children, one of them a month-old daughter.

8 in Levittown Barred From Racial Violence By Court Injunction

Eight Levittown residents and "all other persons acting in concert with them" were enjoined yesterday by Bucks County Judge Edwin H. Satterthwaite from further acts of violence designed to force a Negro family to move from its recently acquired home in the community.

They and others acting with them also were enjoined from attempting by "force, violence or intimidation to prevent sale of any property in Levittown to any Negro.

Philadelphia Pa.

HITS 'EVIL CONSPIRACY'

The court issued its preliminary injunction on a bill in equity filed at the behest of Attorney General Thomas D. McBride, who charged an "evil conspiracy" to pressure Mr. and Mrs. William E. Myers, Jr., to quit their home at 43 Deepgreen lane and leave Levittown.

Argument on making the injunction permanent will be heard Monday in Bucks County Court, Doylestown.

Phila. 10-24-57

The eight residents named in the restrainer are Eldred Williams, James E. Newell, Howard H. Bentcliffe, Mrs. Agnes Bentcliffe, John R. Bentley, David L. Heller, John Thomas Piechowski and Mrs. John Barbazon.

ALLEGATIONS DETAILED

It took five and a half pages of legal length to detail the 21 allegations against the defendants in the petition filed by Deputy Attorney General Lois G. Forer.

The eight defendants and others who might act in concert with them are restrained from:

A. Burning or causing to be burned fiery crosses.

B. Trespassing and affixing to property of others or littering the streets with inflammatory posters, scurrilous pictures, leaflets and other printed matter.

C. Harassing or annoying residents of Levittown by organizing, instigating or participating in motorcades, loud slamming of mail boxes and setting off firecrackers.

D. Placing or causing to be placed in Levittown bombs or explosives of any kind whatsoever.

E. In any manner threatening or intimidating any individual or in any manner threatening the destruction of property.

F. Taking any acts of any kind whatever which seek by force, violence or intimidation to compel removal or withdrawal of the Myerses from Levittown.

Philadelphia Pa.

In his complaint the Attorney General pointed out that Myers purchased the home at 43 Deepgreen lane on Aug. 10 and that on or about Aug. 13 and continuing to the present time the defendants entered into "an unlawful, malicious and evil conspiracy with each other and with other persons unknown to the plaintiff."

PURPOSE OUTLINED

McBride said the purpose of the alleged conspiracy was to force the Myers family to leave Levittown; to harass, annoy, intimidate, silence and deprive of their rights to peaceable enjoyment of their property residents of Levittown who did not participate in the conspiracy.

Also charged was conspiracy to deprive the Myers family and other residents of their right to personal security and equal protection of the law, and to interfere with and prevent law enforcement officers from performing their duties.

Lutheran Group Refuses Sale Of Home to Courier Publisher

Courier Sat. 3-23-57

Pittsburgh Pa. P. 4

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Following swiftly behind the national observance of "Brotherhood Week," a period devoted to joining all races and religions into one spiritual family, the Extension Society of the Pittsburgh Evangelical Lutheran Church (Missouri Synod) abandoned the "brotherhood philosophy" by rejecting an offer of $21,000 made by a Negro for a piece of property and sold it to a white buyer for $18,000.

The rejected buyer was W. Beverly Carter Jr., publisher of The Pittsburgh Courier, and the property is located at 4341 Schenley Farms Terrace, in the Schenley High School district.

The society's refusal to give any concrete reasons for turning down Mr. Carter's higher offer leaves only his race as the cause, he believes.

The Rev. Carl Schultz of Immanuel Lutheran Church and chairman of the Extension Society, is reported have told news reporters that Mr. Carter was turned down because he did not make his offer through "channels." The "channels" being Fidelis Realty Company, which had the property listed.

THIS EXPLANATION shows bad faith in accepting the offer directly or race prejudice in the final decision.

In Mr. Carter's complaint to the city's Human Relations Commission, he states:

"The offer was made direct, in the hope that Lutherans, not bound by any pledge to 'keep neighborhoods racially homogenous,' as are realty firms, would exercise the democratically and religiously sound principles of selection without regard to race."

He also said:

"It was expressly stated that in by-passing the Fidelis firm, insofar as the offer was concerned, that we understood that Fidelis should still receive its sale commission from the church."

On March 8, as a prospective buyer, Mr. Carter executed an agreement to buy and submitted a check for $1,000, representing "hand money."

That same night the offer was turned down at a meeting at Second St. Paul's Church on Pride St., and the check for $1,000 "hand money" returned to Le Gene Bray, who made the offer for Mr. Carter.

NO EXPLANATION was given to Mr. Bray for the action, and none was given to Mr. Carter in his telephone conversation with the Rev. Mr. Shultz on March 10.

Mr. Bray is president of Faith Lutheran Congregation, located at Iowa St. and Ewart Dr. The society's decision was so reprehensible to Mr. Bray that he resigned the presidency of his congregation on March 10, "in order to avoid involvement of the congregation or Pastor Fey."

Pittsburgh Pa.

The "Brotherhood of Man and Fatherhood of God" preachment was thrown to the wind by the Lutheran group in refusing to sell to a Negro.

Unlike the White Citizens Councils in the South, which are frank in their opposition to Negroes having equal opportunities in schools, employment, accommodations and homes, the local Lutheran group has not admitted that they willingly honored a "secret covenant," or that real estate agents convinced them that they should.

38c

THE CLUMSY evasiveness of why a Negro could not buy their Schenley Farms Terrace property leaves only the conclusion that "white neighborhoods" are subscribed to by the Extension Society of the Pittsburgh Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod.

The Lutheran Society accepted the bid of an unknown white person and rejected that of Mr. Carter for $3,000 more.

According to the commission's findings, the Lutheran Society Board was not sure of Mr. Carter's check for $1,000 hand money because it was not certified, and it had doubts that Mr. Carter could obtain the mortgage necessary, as promised.

The commission report states that the "real offender" in this case "is the widespread practice of discrimination which permeates the housing industry in Pittsburgh."

THE EXTENSION Society Board has disavowed intentional discrimination, based on race, and has passed resolutions, to be circulated, to show that the church is against discrimination, in housing or anything else.

The victim of the fancy exchange of words, darts and dashes, is still without a house.

MR. CARTER excepted to the commission's findings.

"I think that it is now obvious that the society at least served as the unwitting handmaiden to a discriminatory practice perpetuated for many years by Pittsburgh realtors," he stated, "and that the society must be willing to assume its fair share of responsibility for this."

Mr. Carter also expressed his conviction that a great public service could be rendered by the Extension Society of the Lutheran Church "if it lives up to its resolution of March 22 which suggests that the society will urge affiliated Lutheran congregations to take a positive stand on the position of their church against discriminatory practices in housing."

Police Keep Watchful Eye Over Negroes

Thurs. 8-15-57

Montgomery, Ala.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 14 (AP)—Police today kept a watchful eye on the recently purchased home of the only Negro family in this planned community of 60,000, where a flurry of stones last night smashed windows.

A half dozen stones shattered picture windows in the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Myers Jr., who moved into the ranch-type house last Sunday with their three children, ranging in age from 1 month to 4 years.

Police were rushed to the Myers house to dispel the crowd of 200 after the stoning incident. Five persons, three of them teenage boys, were taken into custody for failure to heed police orders to leave the scene.

Levittown, a city of 15,500 homes was constructed over a three-year period in lower Bucks County on rolling farmland. Until Myers bought his house from the original purchaser, Levittown had been all-white.

Myers said he negotiated for the house with the former owner privately. He said he had no assistance, financial or otherwise from any group, including the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The NAACP in 1955 filed an injunction against Levitt & Sons, Inc., builders of Levittown, and four federal government housing officials seeking to force sale of homes in the sprawling development to Negroes. The action was dismissed in U.S. District Court at Philadelphia.

U.S. Dist. Judge William H. Kirkpatrick ruled that the federal court lacked jurisdiction in the case.

Myers said he decided to move to Levittown from his previous home nearby because his family needed more room. The World War II veteran said he had not been prompted by any desire to be the first Negro to move into the Levittown development.

"We will be good neighbors," he said, "and I know, or at least I hope, that those around us will be the same. We are just church-going, respectable people. We just want a nice neighborhood in which to raise our family and enjoy life."

ACTION BY GOVERNOR

Pennsylvania Police Sent To Town In Race Conflict

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 8-16-57

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 15 (AP)—Gov. George M. Leader late today ordered a detachment of state police to this new, sprawling city of 60,000 to help local authorities cope with an outbreak of bad feeling over the arrival of the first Negro homeowner in the community.

The governor took this action after receiving a telegram from the Bucks County sheriff asserting he was confronted with a situation that was out of control.

A dozen state troopers from Philadelphia moved into the Levittown area, on orders from Leader who said their job would be to "maintain order and prevent violence."

The text of the telegram from Sheriff C. Leroy Murray to the governor was made known in Harrisburg. It follows:

"Chief of Police Stuart of Bristol Township says the citizens of Levittown are out of control. His local police and he and the township manager together with the Board of Township Commissioners have requested me as sheriff of Bucks County to seek the aid of state police.

"They have done all they can to quell the violence in which the Negroes' home was stoned and two picture windows broken.

"They—the people—gather in a small mass of 200 to 500 and at a meeting of the commissioners last night the people were very disorderly. They made threats against the Constitution before the commissioners and say they are going to take things in their own hands if they—the commissioners—do not act.

"There is going to be another mass meeting tonight and everyone is interested in keeping the peace. Feel there will be real trouble after the meeting. Two of my deputies and myself have been down there two nights now and with the aid of township police have dispersed the crowds of irate citizens, only to have them reassemble, and I feel sure that with the presence of state police it can be quelled without bloodshed."

A crowd of 200 or more milled around outside the house last night. It was the second such demonstration. Police arrested one man for disorderly conduct. He refused to get moving. On Tuesday night five persons were arrested. That was the night the house was stoned and the windows smashed.

The Negro homeowner is William Myers Jr., an equipment tester for a refrigeration company in Trenton, N.J. He and his wife, Daisy, have three children, one a girl a month old.

Myers said he had not set a date for moving in, but asserted that he planned to go ahead and take possession dispite the outbursts of hostility.

Some Levittown residents told newsmen that much of the trouble was caused by persons living far from the Myers house. They added that many Levittowners were quite ready to accept the Myers family in the community.

Two picture windows were broken in the house owned by William Myers Jr., in the Dogwood Hollow section of Levittown. Two adults and three juveniles were arrested.

Myers was in the house earlier but left before the stoning.

Six patrol cars, carrying 15 policemen, and Bucks County Sheriff Leroy Murray broke up the mob. One of the policeman carried a tear gas gun but it was not used. Police said the five people were arrested because they refused to move on when told to do so.

Myers, his wife and three children, aged 4, 3 and 1 month, moved to Levittown from Bristol, Pa.

Negro family enters home at Levittown

News P.1

Mon. 8-19-57

Birm. Ala.

LEVITTOWN, Pa., Aug. 19— (AP) —Mr. and Mrs. William Myers Jr., first Negroes to buy a home in the 15,000 home all white community of Levittown, moved into their new home today despite organized protests by their neighbors.

Myers, a college educated refrigeration engineer, drove up to the house in his 1957 auto today with his wife, their daughter, Linda, 2, and two white men.

"We're here to stay," he told a reporter outside the house.

STATE TROOPERS ringed the one-story ranch dwelling in the Dogwood Hollow section of this sprawling residential community of 60,000 persons.

THE COUPLE said that their son, William, 3rd, 4, and Stephen, 3, are with Myers' parents in York, Pa. The Myers carried in some suitcases, towels and other small articles.

The family's furniture was moved some time last week, shortly after Myers purchased the home.

Every since the community learned of the sale of the home to a Negro, crowds have gathered nightly and on one occasion stones were hurled through the picture window.

THE FAMILY has been at its former home in nearby Bloomdale Gardens and with Myers' parents in York.

Meanwhile, as the family moved into the home, a citizens' committee formed to keep the Negro family out of Levittown announced it would defy a sheriff's order and continue to hold public meetings on the matter.

This group, the Levittown Betterment Committee, was forced to break up a meeting Saturday night on the order of Sheriff C. Leroy Murray of Bucks County. One resident was arrested in a scuffle with police and was taken to a hospital for treatment of cuts and bruises.

Murray served notices that all large, outdoor gatherings in Levittown would be considered unlawful.

IN A STATEMENT issued by James Newell Jr., chairman of the committee, the group said today:

News P.4

"The Levittown Betterment Committee has not disbanded. In fact, over the week-end the organization has gained strength and intends to carry on this work and also intends to stand upon its constitutional rights and the right to free and peaceful assembly.

"We denounce the actions of C. Leroy Murray, sheriff of Bucks County.

"We wish to announce openly to Sheriff Murray that we are calling another meeting this week. We want all Levittowners to join us in decrying the only real violence to date, the brutal clubbing of one of the citizens of Levittown by the Pennsylvania state police."

THE STATEMENT said the time and place of the protest meeting would be announced. It added:

"We want a peaceful, orderly and uninterrupted meeting. The purpose of this organization is restoring our entire white community."

Many of the 60,000 inhabitants of the community are banded into two factions.

The committee, headed by James Newell, says Myers should stay out for his own good and the good of Levittown. Newell has conducted mass meetings to back up this contention.

THE OTHER GROUP—called the Citizens' Committee for Levittown—stresses a more conservative approach. Its leader, the Rev. Ray L. Harwick, a Protestant minister, deplored the actions of some of its citizens and condemned what he called "racial bias."

Mr. Harwick said some members of his group are opposed to the Myers' moving into this all-white community, while others would welcome the Negro family as neighbors.

Harwick says:

"One purpose of our group is to show there are plenty of people who don't get panicky in a situation like this, who believe the situation can be worked out calmly, intelligently and legally without anyone compromising his beliefs or getting hurt in the pocketbook."

Newell says:

"Our purpose in continuing our organization is to devise peaceful means of accomplishing the purpose of restoring our entire white community. One of the means to be considered is supplying Myers with sufficient funds to enable them to buy an even better home in a location such as Concord Garden homes which is devised for integration of Negro and white."

Calling a Carolina White A Negro Is Ruled Libel

Times, p. 13-C
Thurs. 2-7-57

COLUMBUS, S. C., Feb. 6 (UP)—The State Supreme Court ruled today it was libelous for a newspaper to call a white person a Negro in South Carolina. It reversed a lower court ruling in favor of the Independent Publishing Company of Anderson.

New York

The company, which publishes The Daily Mail, Anderson's afternoon newspaper, printed under the heading "Negro News" a story about an Anderson woman's son being transferred to a Government hospital. The account was beneath a picture of a Negro soldier.

The woman, who is white, sued on ground that she had been libeled.

The newspaper moved for a directed verdict on the ground that there had been no evidence of actual malice or of special damages and that it was not actionable per se to describe a person erroneously as a Negro.

Circuit Judge James M. Brailsford Jr. agreed with the newspaper and dismissed the suit.

A new trial was ordered by the higher court today.

The Supreme Court ordered the case returned to state Circuit Court so that it can be submitted to a jury.

BLAST ROCKS HOUSE OFFERED TO NEGROES

Chattanooga Home Is Now Owned By Whites

Thurs. 1-24-57

CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 23. — (AP)—A house owned by a white family and recently offered for sale to Negroes Wednesday was the target of a dynamite blast. The explosive apparently was thrown from a moving automobile.

Memphis, Tenn.

Asst. Detective Chief John Carson, following a daylong investigation, said police have no clues as to the identity of the dynamiters.

The house, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Galen E. Lehman, is in the Avondale section of East Chattanoooga. The lot on which it sits runs against a lot on another street that has Negro residents.

It was the second incident involving the house. Last Dec. 5 a large cross was burned in the front yard.

That incident followed the showing of the Lehman house to prospective buyers, including several Negroes. The Lehmans stressed at the time of the cross burning that the house had not been sold to the Negroes.

No one was injured by the explosion, which broke several iwndows and blasted a crack in the concrete walkway leading to the front door.

Mr. Lehman said he believed the charge was hurled at the front porch but missed.

Mr. Lehman said he and his family were in upstairs bedrooms when the explosion rocked the neighborhood. He said he heard a car "tear out" down the street just before the blast.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Jan. 23—(AP)—A heavy charge of explosive, apparently dynamite, was set off early today on the sidewalk leading to a white man's house that recently had been shown to Negroes among prospective buyers.

The blast injured no one, but it shattered several windows in the Avondale section house and cracked the concrete sidewalk.

Galen E. Lehman said he and his wife and two daughters were asleep in upstairs bedrooms when the explosive went off. A large cross was burned in front of the house last Dec. 5.

Asst. Detective Chief John Carson made a personal investigation, but said he was unable to uncover any clues.

The six-room, two-story frame house has been up for sale and, Lehman said, had been shown to several Negroes.

The property adjoins a lot on another street that is occupied by Negroes.

Court Upholds Owner Who Sells To Negro Person

Sat. 4-13-57

JACKSON, Tenn. — (ANP) — A white person in this state who sells his property to Negroes may not be sued for damages said the Tennessee State Supreme Court last week in a ruling that rose from a case from Shelby county.

The Tennessee high court stated, "the question in this lawsuit is whether or not the owner of property in a white neighborhood who sells property to a Negro may be held for damages by reason of having sold the property to a person of color when he violates no law therein."

The high court then went on to affirm a lower court ruling in the case of Lester P. Stratton vs. Mrs. Zoie Conway et al from Shelby County, saying, "the sale of this property was lawful and the defendant had violated no law in doing so."

Neighbors, according to reports, have protested the sale of the Lehman house, because no colored live on that street. Windows were shattered and other minor damage done by the blast, but no one was injured.

Damages For Sale Of Home To Negro Denied In Appeal

Advertiser Tues. 4-2-57

Montgomery, Ala.

JACKSON, Tenn., April 1 (AP)—The State Supreme Court ruled today that a property owner who sold his home in a white neighborhood to a Negro had violated no law and could not be "held for damages."

The high court ruling was handed down on an appeal from a decision by Circuit Court Judge John W. Wilson last Nov. 14 which in effect permitted the sale to go through and denied damages.

The suit was brought by Lester P. Stratton against a Memphis real estate firm and the former owner of the Memphis residence. He asked $2,750 damages.

Stratton's bill claimed the house, now occupied by the Negro family that bought it, was in a "valuable white neighborhood." Its sale to a Negro, the suit added, destroyed "both the value and desirability of plaintiff's home as well as that of his neighbors, at least to the extent of $2,750."

The Supreme Court said it affirmed the ruling by Judge Wilson "because the sale of this property was lawful and the defendant had violated no law in doing so."

Tennessee Home Of Negro Bombed

Two Bomb Blasts Rip Homes In Mixed Beaumont Area

Courier Houston Tex.
Oct. 1-19-57

BEAUMONT — Just as the racial tension set off by the recent enrollment of Negroes in Lamar College of Technlogy which flared into mob violence was calming down, two dynamite blasts damaged two Negro and one white home in a new racial flare-up last week in a mixed residential district here.

An ear-piercing blast rocked the home of the prominent Dr E. D. Sprott Jr at 2395 Cartwright last Monday, night. Another home of Grover Lee Myles at 3235 Texas was damaged by an explosion last Wednesday night. The windows in a house across the street from Mr. Myles, occupied by a white family, were shattered by the blast.

Although reports say that the license number and description of the car used by the bombers are known to police, no arrests had been made this week. Officers are inclined to attribute the explosions to the work of a crank, but since Negroes began moving into the white area, "For Sale" signs have been popping up like blossoms on a plum tree in the spring.

Apparently the bombers meant only to scare the families since they could have easily thrown the explosives against the houses or under them, Police said. The only damage done at Dr Sprott's home was a hole in his lawn about two and ,ahalf by thre efeet in circumference. And a part of the sidewalk was blown away by the blast.

Mr Myles said that he, his wife and his mother-in-law were watching television when the explosion when the explosion occurred. The explosion tore a hole in his lawn about 10 feet from the house.

Both families expressed their determination to remain in their homes despite the bombings. The general feeling among Negroes here is that they will have to take steps to protect themselves from future attacks if the police are unabl eto do so. Officers were still searching for the bombers this week.

Norfolk Whites Resent Moving Of Negro Family

p. 4

Wash. Post 3-6-57

NORFOLK, Va. (ANP) — White families in he Edgewtaer section of Norfolk launched a movement last week to block what they described as an "invasion" of their neighborhood because a Negro couple moved into a house which they have bought in an all-white neighborhood.

Atlanta Ga

White people of the community held a mass meeting at Neighborhood Chapel, Reformation Church of God and discussed plans to get a house at 1539 West 48th St. back into white ownership. The whites said they were afraid that the settling of more Negroes in the area would decrease the value of their porperty.

Va.

Walter R. Singleton, Negro real estate agent, when contacted on the matter, said "an owner listed the house with me for sale or rent. The house was vacant for sometime. I ried o rent it to whites but I didn't have any luck along those lines." He added:

"The next thing I did, I tried to sell it to whites, but of course, I didn't find anyone who was interested in protecting "our property values."

Most Negroes look upon the fuss and furore over the Negro woman and her brother who is an Army master sergeant at Fort Meade, Md., as just another uproar among white people which will amount to nothing. Actually Norfolk Negroes have become accustomed to opposition from some whites when a Negro moves into a white community.

When Negroes began to move into Brambleton some years ago, some whites tried to stem the tride, but they failed, and today most of the families in that section are Negroes. Some white people did not move out and are still living in the section along side of Negro families.

A bitter fight was waged in Caro ado by whites against the "invasion" of Negro families in the summer of 1954, but they lost. "Trouble has been brewing in Cornado since the first of four Negro families bought homes in the community," a sory said on August 3 954.

Whites held a meeting some years ago when a Negro family bought a house on East Indian River Road and sought to have the sale cancelled to the Negro family, but they not only failed in their efforts, but were unable to prevent other white people from selling homes to Negroes in the neighborhood.

White people in the Edgewater section have no hope of winning their battle judged by the history of past efforts of this kind. The law is against them and the tide of human events as well.

Whites Buy Up Property To Forestall Negroes

NORFOLK, Va. — (ANP) — White residents of the Edgewater section discussed establishment of a corporation last week to buy up property and homes which might otherwise fall into the hands of Negroes. They are planning the same course which whites were encouraged to take three summers ago in Coronado which failed to stop "invasion" of Negro families in that heretofore all-white neighborhood.
